Petition for a Presbyterian Society.

To His Excellency Benning Wentworth Esq. Captain General Governor and Commander in Chief in and over his Majesty's Province of New Hampshire &c.—To the Honorable his Majesty's Council and House of Representatives for said Province Convened in General Assembly—November 21st, 1765.

The petition of the subscribers, Free holders & Inhabitants of the Town of Hampton Falls in said Province—Humbly sheweth.

That about Two years ago The Rev<sup>d</sup> Mr. Paim Wingate in the congregational way & manner was settled in the work of the ministry in said Town. That the Religious sentiments of and Doctrines preached by the said Rev<sup>d</sup> Mr. Wingate are very different from those of your Petitioners—and disagreeable to them—That your Petitioners apprehended they could not be profited by the preaching and administration of the s<sup>d</sup> Rev<sup>d</sup> Mr. Wingate That the measures taken by the said Town in order to the settlement & support of the said Mr. Wingate are as your Petitioners conceive unprejudicial and Justly Grievous to them, and that therefore your Petitioners and many others Inhabitants of said Town (near one half thereof) constantly opposed his settlement there and disced therefrom:

That your Petitioners are conscientiously of the Presbyterian Perswasion respecting Church Government, Doctrine, Discipline and worship. That they with others of their Brethren in that Perswasion have for some time past been regularly formed into a church, built a meeting house in said Town for the publick Worship of God, called and settled a minister in the Presbyterian way, namely The Rev. Mr. Samuel Berkeley. That your Petitioners conscientiously and constantly on the Lords days and at other times occasionally attend the public worship of God there, according to their said Perswasion; That the premises notwithstanding the select men of the said Town of Hampton Falls for the last year assessed and Rated your Petitioners for the support of the said Mr. Berkeley and obliged them to pay the same. That the selectmen of said Town for the present year have again assessed & Rated your Petitioners for the same purpose, which your Petitioners apprehend to be a Grievous & unreasonable Burthen upon them—Wherefore your Petitioners Humbly pray your Excellency and Honours to take their case under your wise consideration And as they conceive themselves to be Intitled to his majesties Grace & Favour in allowing to all his subjects Liberty of Conscience—and that it is unreasonable for them to be compelled to pay towards the support of a minister they do not nor cannot hear and attend upon for the Reasons aforesaid When at the same time they are at the expence of maintaining publick worship among themselves in that way and mode they think most agreeable and nearest to the directions given in the Scriptures by the Great head of the Church, and where the True Doctrines of Grace & Salvation are preached according to their Opinion of those things. They pray your Excellency & Honours would grant them Relief in the premises by Exonerating them their Families and Estates and all others within said Town of Hampton Falls who are of the same Perswasion and attend the publick worship of God with them from all ministerial Rates and Taxes in said Town (Excepting to their own ministry) and by setting them off as a distinct Parish for ministerial affairs only, and by enabling the said Presbyterian congregation to raise & Levy on themselves such Taxes and assessments as they shall from time to time find necessary for the support of the ministry and publick worship of God among themselves—or grant your Petitioners such other Relief as your Excellency and Honours in your wisdom shall see fit. And your petitioners as in duty bound will ever pray, &c, &c.

Council of 1737.—Aug. 10, 1737, the assemblies of the provinces of Massachusetts and New Hampshire met at Hampton Falls, for the purpose of establishing the boundary line between the two provinces. A cavalcade was formed from Boston to Salisbury, and Governor Belcher rode in state, attended by a troop of horse. He was met at Newbury Ferry by another troop which was joined by three more at the supposed boundary line, and conducted to the George tavern in Hampton Falls. Here he held a council and made a speech to the Assembly of New Hampshire. The novelty of a procession of the executive and legislative bodies for such a distance occasioned the following pasquinade in an assumed Hibernian style:

"Dear Paddy you ne'er did behold such a sight,
As yesterday morning was seen before night;
You in all your born days saw, nor I don't neither,
So many fine horses and men ride together,
At the head the lower house trotted two in a row,
Then all the higher house traced after the low;
Then the Governor's coach gallop'd on like the wind,
And the last that came foremost were troopers behind,
But I fear it means no good to your neck or mine,
For they say 'tis to fix a right place for the line."

STREAMS AND MILLS.<sup>1</sup>

The Streams and Mills of Hampton Falls.—It would be difficult for many of the residents of New Hampshire to-day to fully realize the situation of some of the early settlers of this State, who were compelled to travel forty miles through the woods to find a grist-mill. Concerning the state of things in 1633, one historian writes, "No mill was erected for grinding corn, for the colonists had none of their own to grind. They depended on supplies from England, except some corn and wheat brought from Virginia, to be ground in the windmill at Boston." The first mention we find in the history of this State of any mill is that of a saw-mill in 1635, at the falls of Newichwannock, the Indian name for Berwick, Me.

RESIDENCE OF HON. WARREN BROWN,
HAMPTON FALLS, N. H.

Looking back an hundred years, we judge that at that time, considering the size of Hampton Falls, she was excelled by no town in our State in the line of mills and manufactures.

Falls River, the principal stream in this town, flows from Muddy Pond, in Kensington, towards the sea, and empties into Hampton River, at Falls River's mouth, so called, half a mile below the depot. Here was situated the old ship-yard, reached by a causeway over the marsh from the town-landing at the depot.

After leaving Kensington this stream flows for about a mile just within the town-line, between Hampton Falls, and Seabrook, and then makes a short divergence into Seabrook.

Near the point of divergence are situated Weare's Mills, first mentioned in the records of Hampton Falls in 1724.

A stone dam affords a fall of about eight feet, which is now applied to an encased wooden tub-wheel, of the kind which links the iron turbine of to-day with the primitive water-wasters of fifty years ago.

An upright saw above, with a run of granite stones in the basement, constitute the mills. This mill was rebuilt in 1857; but concerning its predecessors we learn from tradition the lines repeated at the raising of its frame, according to the custom of that time. They have been handed down from Christopher T. Chase, who was present, to his daughter Sally, who died in 1871, at the age of eighty-five years, to her nephew, John Lewis Chase.

"Here's a fine frame,
It's well put together;
Mr. Spofford's a good workman,
Hubbard Weare is clever."

Hubbard Weare was a relative of Governor Meshech Weare and a brother of Uncle John Weare, the ancient miller, who died in 1877, at the age of eighty-seven years. His son, Benjamin F. Weare, succeeds him in the business. To the credit of that neighborhood, it is said that this mill has never been locked, and no grist has ever been missing. Following this stream in its downward course to the sea for about two miles, during which it crosses the highway just below the mills and again at Bennett's Bridge, we come to three stone dams, built about one hundred years ago by J. Nathaniel Hubbard Dodge, who came to this place from Windham, Mass., about the year 1765, and purchased these mill-privileges from the noted Gen. Monilton, of Hampton. This Nathaniel Hubbard was a descendant of Richard Dodge, who landed in Salem in 1629.

He had nine sons, some of whom were among the first settlers of Ohio in 1788; was a member of the first Constitutional Convention of New Hampshire, and died in 1830, at the age of ninety-two.<sup>1</sup> Some little improvement of these privileges had already been made, but Mr. Dodge was a natural mechanic and a man of great energy, and with his coming great improvements were made and a thriving business established in several different lines of manufacture. The dams were built of natural faced stones of large size, some of them being brought from Kensington. The upper one was built to make a reservoir, but a bark mill was at one time in operation there. On one side of the middle dam was built the old saw-mill, which was torn down in 1876. On the other side a mill for wool carding, and the fulling, dyeing, and dressing of home-woven cloth. Perhaps for the benefit of the young people of to-day it should be stated that the wool was first brought to be carded into rolls, then taken home to be spun and woven, and the cloth brought back to be fulling, dyed, and dressed ready for the tailor, who journeyed from house to house to make it into garments to be worn for many years. The name of one Fogg has been handed down as the journey-man tailor in the vicinity of these mills, and the expression "A Fogg's run" came to be proverbial, as implying haste rather than thoroughness of execution. At the lower dam was the grist-mill, which Squire John Philbrick, now in his nineties, says was an old building so long ago as he can remember. "Old Dodge," as he came to be called, had a genius for stone-work; was the first man in this vicinity who split stones with wedges, and in the cellar-wall of the grist-mill may be seen a specimen of his work, which can hardly be excelled at the present day. The grist-mill contained one run of large granite stones, which were driven by a breast-wheel in Hubbard's time. It is said that this mill, like the mill of the gods, ground very slow, but neither the old gentleman's boys nor the water which passed his mill were allowed to run idle so long as there was any work to be done. This mill passed from Nathaniel Hubbard to Polly, the widow of his son John, and thence to her grandson, John W., until, about 1870, it came into the possession of George D., a great-grandson of Hubbard.<sup>2</sup> In 1872 the venerable ruin of one low story was replaced by a substantial building of two stories, and the tub-wheel resigned its place in favor of a thirty-inch iron turbine. This change doubled the working capacity of the mill,—from three or four bushels per hour to six or eight bushels,—but unfortunately the granite stones were retained in deference to the prejudices of customers, though a twenty-inch run of burrs were also used to some extent. In 1881 this property was purchased by the widow of the previous owner, the old granites were taken out and replaced by a thirty-inch run of burr-stones, which are now doing satisfactory and profitable work.<sup>1</sup> The saw-mill passed down from Hubbard to his grandson Richard,<sup>2</sup> and then to John W., and the privilege is now owned by the heirs of the latter. As we have already stated, the old mill was taken down in 1876, it having been allowed to go beyond repair, in consequence of being supplanted by the steam-mills, where logs can be promptly sawed, instead of lying about the mill-yard for a year or two, as they sometimes used to do. The old mill had its day, and had done a great deal of work for the benefit of the public and the profit of its owners.

But the place of largest investment and largest returns was on the opposite side of the dam, at the clothing-mill. This property Hubbard gave to his son Dudley, who was a clothier by trade as well as a farmer, and conducted this branch of business with success. He died in 1834, at the age of sixty-one, leaving this mill property to his son, George Hubbard. Besides the carding, fulling, dyeing, and dressing departments, there was also a run of granite stones in the basement, with the privilege of grinding all the rye. Nathaniel Hubbard was not only a skillful mechanic and good farmer, but a competent surveyor and successful trader. The stone dams remain as monuments of his energy and industry, and anecdotes concerning him are still in circulation. He cut the race-way of the clothing-mill through a solid ledge for several rods, all done with a pick. His grandson, George Hubbard, inherited much of his energy and business ability; for when the custom clothing business was supplanted by the establishment of woolen-factories, he changed his mill to the manufacture of cotton batting and wadding, and in this direction laid the foundation of the largest fortune ever accumulated by a resident of Hampton Falls. But this success came only after the conquering of numerous difficulties. In August, 1817, his batting- and wadding-mill, run by steam and water, was destroyed by fire. In the spring of 1848 it was running again on batting alone, propelled by a breast-wheel.<sup>3</sup> The joint use of the water with the saw-mill was a bone of contention until the matter was settled by a board of referees giving the first right to the water to the saw-mill from March 1st to May 15th, and to the batting-mill for the balance of the year. The old flutter-wheel of the saw-mill took a deluge of water until it was replaced by an iron wheel of more economical habits. The grist-mill below was also a source of annoyance to the batting-mill, in claiming the right to let water through the saw-mill gates for its use. But for all this we never knew of any hard words between the parties, however much they were inwardly vexed. George H. Dodge died in February, 1862, aged fifty-four years and eight months. Previous to his death the war of the Rebellion had checked his manufacturing business; and having become extensively engaged in railroad affairs, his mill had laid idle for a year or more. His death found his eldest son, George Dudley, in the State of Georgia, forced into the military service of the Confederacy. After a year of perilous effort he escaped from Savannah to Charleston, was advertised as a deserter and followed by a detective, but after a delay of eleven weeks and six fruitless attempts, he finally escaped in a small sloop and reached home in January, 1863, via Nassau and New York. He found the batting-mill in bad condition, it having been run by contract for years, with little or no repairs, and then laid idle for the boys to pelt with stones. He spent a year in making thorough repairs at war prices, and started up in the spring of 1864, employing eight hands, and turning out five hundred pounds of goods per day, which found a ready sale in New York. The highest price received was sixty-five cents per pound, making a business of three hundred and twenty-five dollars per day. The same quality of goods were worth only about five cents per pound before the war, put up then with less care. Raw cotton, which before the war was worth about twelve cents per pound, sold in the fall of 1864 at two dollars per pound in currency, equal to about seventy-five cents in gold. Cotton cloth, made partly from poor waste and old ropes, sold for seventy-five cents per yard. With the capture of Richmond cotton quickly declined from two dollars to fifty cents per pound, and soon settled to twenty-five cents. This business hurricane caught the young proprietor of the batting-mill with all sail set, affecting him as it did thousands of other business men. He continued to conduct the business on a smaller scale and with varying fortune until 1877, when, finding that the manufacture of batting by large concerns and corporations using their own waste had made the situation difficult for the smaller mills, he retired from the business to the advantage of his health; and the batting-mill has since laid idle, again to become a target for the stones of the thoughtless boys. To-day these idle mills stand like ghosts of departed activity, while the shrinking stream has become the resort of thirsty cattle. The tide of business activity which here once flowed has now ebbed. May it be the pleasure of the future historian to record a succeeding flood-tide of successful activity.

TAYLOR'S RIVER.—While Falls River derives its name from the natural rapids in its course, improved by stone dams, Taylor's River is named from an early resident of this town. It rises in Kensington, in two branches, one branch led by a spring on the land of Stephen Green, and the other by three springs located on the different lots of True M. Prescott, Newell W. Healey, and Smith and Bishop. Entering Hampton Falls through land purchased by Stephen Brown from the Lamprey heirs, near the green-house establishment of James Warren Prescott, it crosses the highway near the homestead of Edwin Prescott, soon crosses the road leading to Robert S. Prescott's, then crosses twice within a quarter-mile the road leading by the residence of Dr. Curtis, and next comes to public view on the Exeter road near the North school-house, crossing which it flows in Hampton, then furnishing the water-power for Coffin's mills before descending to the level of the salt marshes. On the side of the road where it first crosses, near Edwin Prescott's, may be seen the remains of a dam where a saw-mill was erected by Aaron Prescott, father of Edwin, about 1842. In 1854, after the decease of Aaron Prescott, the mill was purchased by Joseph Poore, of Kensington, and moved to that place, where it is now in use at the proper season.

GRAPE-VINE RUN.—As Hampton Falls is indebted to Kensington for the service of its two other streams, so this one finds its source over or near the border line of that town. Crossing the highway near the residence of Nathan H. Robie, at the distance of about half a mile beyond, it crosses the Exeter road; thence flowing about the same distance in an easterly direction it comes to another highway, where a dam of stone and earth obstructs its further progress, and forms a reservoir in the land of John T. Batchelder. This reservoir is almost entirely dry in the summer-time, but in the wet season affords a considerable supply of water, which is controlled by a gate for the use of a saw-mill about a quarter of a mile below. This mill was erected in 1832, by Moses Batchelder, father of John T., principally for his own use, and is so run by his son at the present time. At an eighth of a mile below, where the stream enters the marsh-land, Mr. Batchelder erected in 1880 a grist-mill containing two run of granite stones formerly used in the old tide-mill at Hampton. This mill is run by Mr. Batchelder for his own use principally, and is driven by an iron wheel, as is the saw-mill. This stream runs at about equal distance between Falls River and Taylor's River, and is the smallest of the three. Thus we find that, in connection with the three mill streams in Hampton Falls, there were formerly in operation at the same time four saw-mills, two or three grist-mills, with a shingle-mill in connection with one of them, and a woolen- or cotton-mill. About 1877 the steam saw-mill of Jacob T. Brown, on his homestead place, was sold and taken to Greenland. And besides this stationary mill, one or more portable mills have been used to clear wood-lots. In the spring of 1877 the old wind-mill on the premises of Levi E. Lane, at Cock Hill, was taken down. About thirty years ago this mill was used to grind plaster of Paris to be used as a fertilizer.

ECCLÉSIASTICAL—EDUCATIONAL—CIVIL—MILITARY.

Congregational Church—Baptist Church—Rockingham Academy—The Weare Monument—Representatives—Military Record.

The First Congregational Church (Unitarian) of Hampton Falls<sup>1</sup> was organized in 1711. The first minister was Rev. Theophilus Cotton, who was settled in 1712, and died in 1726. The records of the time say that "he was decently buried at the charge of the parish." He was followed by Rev. Joseph Whipple, who was ordained Jan. 15, 1727, and died in 1757.

After him Rev. Joseph Bagley, from 1757 to 1762; Rev. Paine Wingate, ordained 1763; resigned 1776. About this time a church building was erected near the centre of the town, where now the Unitarian Church stands.

In 1781, Rev. Dr. Langdon was ordained pastor over this society. He was president of Harvard University a part of the time of the Revolution. Quite a number of valuable books belonging to Dr. Langdon's library are still kept in the library at the Unitarian Church. He died in 1797.

In 1798 the Rev. Jacob Abbot was settled over the society, a man very tolerant and free-thinking for the times. He was pastor twenty-eight years. Without preaching the Unitarianism of to-day, his large charity and spirit of free inquiry opened the way for that agitation in the minds of the people which soon results in the disorganization of the established churches. About the beginning of the nineteenth century there was a Baptist agitation in the town. Some members left this church and formed themselves into a Baptist society. Later a Calvinist society was established. Still later there was quite an exodus from the original church of prominent members; these united with a number from Seabrook, establishing a society at what was called the Line.

Mr. Abbot's salary was three hundred dollars, sixteen cords of pine wood and eight of hard a year.

After Mr. Abbot various ministers were engaged without being regularly settled. Among them were Rev. Messrs. Ward, Whitman, and Dow. Gradually there was a call for more liberal preaching.

Rev. Linus Shaw was settled over the society a few years. "The people were much united in him." Mr. Shaw was followed by Rev. Jacob Caldwell, a preacher whose practical, earnest life encouraged the people to think forward, without fear of results, trusting that truth was always safe. Amidst the agitation attendant upon Theodore Parker's first preaching in Boston, Mr. Caldwell, in straightforward recognition of the spirit of Christian tolerance, said he would welcome Mr. Parker to his pulpit. So, step by step, the society was led and grew into the liberal faith. After Mr. Caldwell, who had charge of this society and one at Kensington, came the Rev. Sumner Lincoln. Rev. A. M. Bridge was the next pastor for about fifteen years, a minister of fine culture and earnest work. After Mr. Bridge, Rev. Everett Finley had charge of the society a year or two. He belonged to the new class called Radicals. Since then Rev. J. C. Learned and Rev. B. F. McDaniel, settled over the Exeter Unitarian Society, have supplied the pulpit. For the last fifteen years the society has had its ups and downs, but has lived on until at the present time it is a church stronger in individual thought and religion than in organized body and power.

The Christian Church was organized as a Baptist Church in 1805, and reorganized as the First Christian Baptist Church in 1833. Members in 1833, fifty-six, —Jacob Brown and fifty-five others.

Pastors, Samuel E. Brown, Daniel P. Pike, Warren Lincoln, Thomas F. Barry, George M. Payne, Jeremiah W. Marsh, Appleton W. Reed, Charles P. Smith, John McGlaulin, Joseph H. Graves.

The present officers are as follows: Ministerial Committee, George Monilton, Warren B. Pevear; Secretary and Treasurer, John J. Brown.

Church buildings were erected in 1805 and 1835. Present membership, fifty-one. Present pastor, Joseph H. Graves.

The Baptist Church.—Probably the first Baptist in Hampton Falls was Betsey Fifield Dodge, who was converted under the preaching of Rev. Elias Hull, and with her husband, Dudley Dodge, united with the Congregational Church at Seabrook on the 18th of July, 1800. Mr. Hull, their pastor, preached in the old meeting-house at Seabrook from February, 1799, to April, 1817. Mrs. Dodge was a person of strong and independent mind, and embraced Baptist views without, so far as is known, being influenced by Baptist preaching. The nearest Baptist Church was at Exeter, and, desiring to unite with those of that faith and order, her husband urged her to wait one year, hoping in the mean time to effect a change in her views. For that purpose he engaged Rev. Mr. Webster, the pastor at Hampton, a relative of Daniel Webster's, to endeavor to convince her of her error. She called in Mr. Samuel Hatch, of the Baptist Church at Exeter, a man well versed in the Scriptures. As the result of the discussion Mr. Dodge himself was convinced, and baptized July 11, 1816, by Rev. William Hooper, pastor at Exeter, after which Mr. Hooper preached in Mr. Dodge's house what is said to have been the first discourse ever delivered by a Baptist in Hampton Falls. This William Hooper was the father of Rev. Noah Hooper, grandfather of Rev. N. Hooper, Jr., and a member of the first Constitutional Convention of New Hampshire, as was Dudley Dodge's father.

From this time Mr. Dodge's house became a place of resort for Baptist ministers, and so continued during his lifetime and that of his son, George H. Dodge. It also became the place for Baptist preaching until the erection of the academy building, in 1834. Here services were held by such distinguished Baptists as Thomas Baldwin, settled in Boston from 1790 to the time of his death, in 1826; Lucius Bolles, of Salem; Nathaniel Williams, of Beverly; George Dana Boardman and Mr. Wheelock, afterwards missionaries to Burma; and Rev. Drs. Chaplin and Prof. Chapin, presidents of Waterville College. It is said that Elder Peak, a noted Baptist evangelist, preached about one hundred times in this house. Dudley Dodge died in 1834, at the age of sixty-two, and his wife, Betsey Fifield, in 1855, at the age of eighty-five.

In the fall of 1828 the following persons were dismissed from the Baptist Church in Exeter to constitute what was then called the Baptist Church in Seabrook and Hampton Falls: Dudley Dodge, Betsey Dodge, Mary M. Dodge, Miriam Dodge, Nancy D. Dodge (all three daughters of Dudley and Betsey), Richard Dodge, Clarissa Dodge, Mary Dodge (wife and sister of Richard, who was a nephew of Dudley).

These persons, all relatives of Dudley and Betsey Dodge, together with Hannah Dow, Ruth and Lydia Brown and Anna Knowles, of Seabrook, constituted themselves into a Baptist Church at the house of Richard Dodge, on the evening of Oct. 28, 1828, and at that time invited Rev. T. P. Ropes to become their pastor. At a meeting held in the brick school-house in Seabrook, November 24th, they received Huldah Gove to their fellowship. On the morning of December 2d, at the house of Richard Dodge, they received Mrs. Sally Chase and Mrs. Elizabeth Green, and in the afternoon of the same day the church was recognized, and Mr. Ropes installed as their pastor by a council of ministers and delegates from neighboring Baptist Churches. These services were held in the old meeting-house in Seabrook, built in 1763, and first occupied by the Presbyterians until 1799, then by the Congregationalists, and now by the Baptists in 1828. Rev. Baron Sterr, then at Portsmouth, afterwards settled at Boston, preached on this occasion and presented the church with a Bible, which was destroyed in the academy fire in 1875. In September, 1829, Mary and Nancy Dodge presented them with a communion service, which is still in use. From the fall of 1828 to the fall of 1834 they continued to worship in the old meeting-house in Seabrook, and then in the new academy building at Hampton Falls until the erection of the meeting-house in Hampton Falls. This house was opened for services in September, 1836; dimensions, forty and a half by fifty-five feet; cost, two thousand one hundred and seventeen dollars and fifty-eight cents; building committee, William Brown, Richard Dodge, Joseph H. Weare, Aaron Gove, and George H. Dodge. In the summer of 1859 it was repaired and improved at an expense of two thousand dollars; committee, George H. Dodge, John W. Dodge, and Nathan Brown. The roof was then slated, the tower replaced by a spire, the high singing gallery over the entrance taken down, the pulpit lowered, the walls frescoed, floor carpeted, and pews upholstered. Rev. Mr. Ropes, a connection of Dudley Dodge, continued as pastor from September, 1828, until April, 1830. He was a man of excellent character, education, and abilities, but suffered from a chronic complaint which caused him to be despondent and underrate his own influence. At that early date Mr. Ropes was a strong temperance advocate, while some of the ministers were still addicted to the use of intoxicating drink. In 1836 this church was reported as "strictly a temperance church." After the departure of Mr. Ropes, the church candidate for about two years; then Rev. Oliver Barron was pastor for about a year; then Calvin Monroe and Rev. James W. Poland supplied for about two years.

In 1834 "the church sustained a great loss in the death of Dudley Dodge, who during these six years of its existence was ever ready with liberal aid and earnest prayers." Rev. Samuel Cooke was pastor from May, 1835, to April, 1838. During his ministry the meeting-house was built and the membership nearly doubled. He was afterwards chaplain of the New Hampshire State prison, and died in Concord in December, 1872. "Rev. Otis Wing came the next month, in the midst of a series of week-day meetings. Eight Sabbaths in succession the baptismal waters were visited, the revival continuing until July. In September the church numbered seventy-two." Mr. Wing resigned in December, 1840. In 1876 he was settled at Newton Junction, N. H., and is now residing there, in the enjoyment of vigor, at the age of eighty-three. From August, 1841, until April, 1842, the pulpit was supplied by Mr. J. C. Foster, since and now a prominent Baptist pastor in Massachusetts. In May, 1842, Rev. O. O. Stearns, preceptor in the academy, took charge of the church until obliged by ill health to leave in July, 1843. He was in Lodi, Wis., in 1875. Rev. A. Briggs officiated for four months, following Mr. Stearns. In November, 1843, Rev. Zebulon Jones, now of East Hubbardton, Vt., came, and commenced the longest and one of the most fruitful pastorates yet enjoyed by this church. Mr. Jones also had charge of the academy, besides other engagements. He remained until the summer of 1851. During his ministry here twenty-six were added to the church, including thirteen baptized by him as the fruit of a revival in the spring of 1851. In September, 1851, Rev. John E. Wood, previously pastor of the Methodist Church in Exeter, was baptized here by Rev. James French, himself a convert to the Baptist faith, and installed as pastor of this church.

Several were baptized during his ministry, which closed April 30, 1853. He is now in Minnesota, acting as a State missionary. After him the first pastor, T. P. Ropes, supplied for one year. Mr. Ropes died in Missouri in September, 1774, at the age of ——. Rev. Samuel Emmons Brown, previously a minister of the Christian denomination, took charge of the church in October, 1854, and remained until September, 1856, when he left, against the wishes of all the people. Ten were added during his ministry. He died in South Hampton in June, 1862, and it was truthfully written of him, "A person of sound judgment, extensive biblical knowledge, and a true Christian man, modest in his department, self-forgetful in all things, full of sweet Christian charity." After an interval of seven months Mr. E. B. Law came, and was ordained Oct. 28, 1857, and remained until August, 1858. During his stay eighteen were added to the church, making the membership ninety-eight, the highest number it has ever reached. "Mr. Law was a young man of ability and devotion," and is now settled in his native State of New York. During the summer of 1859 the meeting-house was closed for repairs. In June of that year twenty-three members were dismissed to form the Seabrook Baptist Church. In October, 1859, Rev. Alfred Colburn took charge of the church, in addition to his duties as preceptor of the academy, and remained until May, 1863. He is now in Hopkinton, Mass. "Feb. 14, 1862, the church suffered the loss of one of its most prominent members, George H. Dodge." Mr. Colburn was followed immediately by Rev. F. K. Stratton, a Methodist preacher, who supplied most acceptably until March, 1864. Rev. William H. Walker, lately settled at Warner, N. H., came in May, 1864, and served as pastor until April, 1867.

In 1864 the church met with a severe loss in the deaths of Richard Dodge and Simon Winslow. The former was the last original male member and an able supporter. Mr. Winslow married Eliza, daughter of Dudley Dodge, and though a Methodist by profession, was untiring in his efforts to advance the interests of this church. Rev. John M. Driver served as pastor from July, 1867, to October, 1868. His wife, "a woman of great intelligence and rare devotion," died at Beverly, July, 1874, and he has since followed her. "Just here occurs the darkest period in the history of this church. With the exception of twelve Sabbaths' supply by Rev. Otis Wing, the church remained closed until October, 1870, a period of two years and three months. At this time a Mr. Moulton, a licensed preacher from Jefferson, N. H., came and volunteered his services, and remained until January. From that time until August, 1872, the church was supplied by students from Newton Theological Seminary, principally by J. T. Burcoe, now settled in Chicago, and H. H. Beaman. Among other students who supplied were George Churchill and Rufus Sanford, now missionaries in India, and Frederick Erieth and B. P. Cross, now in Burmah. In August, 1872, H. H. Beaman became the joint pastor of the Hampton Falls and Seabrook Churches, and so continued until April, 1876. After that he preached for three months at Hampton Falls, where he was ordained Oct. 2, 1872, and had resided during his joint ministry. From here he went to West Bridgewater, Mass., and thence in 1880 to North Oxford, Mass., where he died in August, 1881, three weeks after the death of Mrs. Beaman. Mr. Beaman was a faithful, earnest pastor, and during his ministry a powerful revival was enjoyed, followed by the baptism of more than twenty. Rev. T. J. Burgess was settled as pastor in September, 1876, at a salary of five hundred dollars and house rent, and still sustains that relation. This is the only church in town maintaining regular services throughout the year.

The last surviving original member, Miriam Dodge, died at Dover in January, 1879. Starting with fourteen constituent members in 1828, the additions since have numbered two hundred and twenty-one; present number, sixty, of which fifteen are non-residents. The fruitful years have been 1835, twelve additions; 1838, twenty-nine; 1851, fourteen; 1855, twelve; 1858, twenty-four; 1876, really twenty-eight, though ten of them appear under 1877; since 1877, none.<sup>1</sup> Among the causes which led to the establishment of this church may be mentioned occasional preaching from 1817 to 1824, by Elder True, Baptist pastor at Amesbury. He held these services in the old Christian chapel, afterwards used as a blacksmith-shop here, and now used for that purpose in East Salisbury. Though not a graduate of the schools, Elder True was a man of great natural ability, and well versed in the Scriptures, having read them thirteen times in course before arriving at the age of twenty. He conducted a large farm during the week, preached extempore on the Sabbath, filling his appointments on horseback, and receiving one dollar per Sabbath as compensation. Previous to 1852, Dudley Dodge was the only person appointed to act as deacon. At that date William Brown, Richard Dodge, and Micajah Green were chosen. Mr. Brown died in 1856. Mr. Green was dismissed to Seabrook in 1859, and Mr. Dodge died in 1864. None have since been chosen. Mr. Brown was a sort of lay preacher of the Christian denomination before uniting with this church in 1835.

His knowledge of the Bible was remarkable, his exhortations being principally composed of quotations from its pages, always naming the chapter and verse. During the first fifty-two years of its history the clerkship of this church continued in one family or its connections, namely, Rev. T. P. Ropes, two years; Richard Dodge, ten years; George H. Dodge, sixteen years; George D. Dodge, twenty-four years. Mr. E. B. Towle is the present clerk since 1880. The statement that the Sabbath-school is the nursery of the church is especially verified in the later history of this church. The first Sabbath-school in Hampton Falls of which we have any knowledge was held in the old school-house near the common, in the summer of 1822, by Miss Hannah Dodge, from Ohio, at that time on a visit to her relatives here. She was assisted by her cousins, Misses Eliza and Mary Dodge, daughters of Dudley Dodge. It is stated that there were no Sabbath-schools in connection with the eight or nine churches forming the Portsmouth Baptist Association in 1828. But this church in 1829 reported one of fifty scholars, with a library of ninety volumes. The two principal points to be noted in its history since are the great fluctuations in its numbers at different periods and the fact that in late years the additions to the church have come almost wholly from its ranks. In 1858, under the superintendency of George H. Dodge, it reached its highest number, one hundred and thirty-four. George H. Dodge and his son, George D. Dodge, are the only persons who have served as superintendents for any considerable length of time.<sup>2</sup> The present superintendent is Mr. E. B. Towle, with a membership of about fifty-five.

Rockingham Academy.<sup>3</sup>—In connection with the annual meeting of the Portsmouth Baptist Association at Chester, in October, 1833, we find the first recorded suggestion of this institution, designed "to promote both science and religion." In the following December a committee appointed by this Association met at Hampton Falls in consultation with a local committee consisting of William Brown and George H. Dodge, and decided to locate the academy at Hampton Falls, "provided the friends of education in that place will erect a suitable edifice."

Through the agency of a committee consisting of George H. Dodge, Richard Dodge, T. S. Sanborn, and Nathan Brown, "an elegant and commodious building" was promptly erected at a cost of $1900; location, on the common in front of the Baptist meeting-house; dimensions, thirty-two by fifty feet; two stories, hip-roof, with bell-tower and steeple rising from the centre. On the 10th of September, 1834, this institution was formally opened with appropriate services, including an address by Rev. Baron Storr. The first term of the school commenced at that date, under the tuition of Rev. Oliver Ayer as principal, assisted by Miss Caroline Garland, who shortly afterward became Mrs. Ayer. Salary of principal, five hundred dollars, and of assistant, five dollars per week. The school was under the control of a board of nineteen trustees, appointed annually by the Association, the proprietors of the building having the right to nominate seven of the number. The first annual report of the secretary, Rev. J. Newton Brown, is a model in matter and style, and portrays a very flourishing condition of affairs. A philosophical apparatus had been secured, a library established, and a reading-room fitted up and supplied with current literature. The board of instruction had been increased to four; the attendance at the summer term had been ninety; the number of different scholars during the year, one hundred and fifty-one; the income from tuition had been sufficient to meet all current expenses, and ninety-five students had entered for the ensuing fall term. By the second annual report, dated Oct. 6, 1836, we learn that the fall term, under the instruction of Messrs. Ayer and Ludl, and Misses Garland, Merriam, and Dodge, had continued eleven and one-half weeks, and was attended by one hundred and two scholars. The winter term of seventeen weeks, under Mr. Ayer, Mr. Cate, and Miss E. Dodge, had sixty-six pupils, and the summer term, under Messrs. Ayer and Marshman Williams, and Misses Merriam and M. P. Dodge, had ninety-six pupils. Number of different scholars for the year, one hundred and eighty-eight. A charter of incorporation was obtained this year, by the terms of which the building reverted to the proprietors whenever the school should remain closed for six months. Mr. Ayer resigned his position at the close of his second year, has been settled as a pastor in different places since, and is at present residing at North Oxford, Mass. Resolutions of high commendation were accorded Mr. Ayer and his assistant, N. Marshman Williams, who resigned at the same time. Mr. Williams is now settled as a pastor at Warner, N. H. These were the prosperous days of Rockingham Academy. To the want of a permanent fund, and the consequent inability to secure or retain teachers of commanding ability, may be ascribed the fitful course of the institution thereafter, and its final dissolution at the age of vigorous manhood. A proposition had been made at the start to raise such a fund, but those interested in the place had done all they were able in the erection of the building, and its patrons elsewhere were not wealthy. Still if its imperative necessity had been fully realized something of the kind might have been done at first more easily than deficiencies were afterwards met. These deficiencies commenced with the second year, and continued thereafter, except at such times as the principals could be induced to assume the responsibility themselves.

Mr. Ayer was succeeded by Mr. Moses Burbank, a graduate of Waterville College, who took charge of the school in the fall of 1836, and resigned in May, 1838. During this time there had been a decided decline in attendance, owing to the ill health of the principal.

In the summer of 1837 an unsuccessful effort had been made to procure funds for the erection of a boarding-house. It must have been from disinterested motives that the residents of the village were willing to fill their houses with student boarders at the rate of one dollar and fifty cents per week, including lights and washing. And to make their expenses even less than this, some boarded themselves in quarters over the village store.

Mr. Burbank was succeeded by Rev. Timothy P. Ropes, "formerly an esteemed pastor within this Association, but for several years past the successful preceptor of an academy in Lexington, Mass." The tuition at this time was fourteen dollars for the year of three terms, with an attendance of forty-one, forty-two, and fifty-seven. Owing to ill health Mr. Ropes resigned his position at the close of the summer term, 1839. He died in 1874.

Under different teachers the division of the school year alternated between three and four terms. By the sixth annual report, dated Oct. 8, 1840, we find that for three-quarters of the preceding year the school had been under the charge of Mr. Samuel Lunt Caldwell, and the year had been finished by a Mr. Humphrey Richards. "The building is now closed!" is the record.

It was opened, however, during the winter by Rev. J. W. Poland, assisted by his nephew, John W. Dodge. But from want of sufficient encouragement Mr. Poland resigned, and left Mr. Dodge to finish the year. Mr. Poland, who is now living at Goffstown, N. H., held at different times the positions of member, president, and secretary of the board of trustees, besides acting as a collecting agent at one time.

From the close of the fall term, 1840, the school remained closed until the 11th of May, 1842, when, after a revival of interest and repair of the building, it was again opened under the tuition of Rev. O. O. Stearns, assisted by Mrs. Stearns. Besides his duties in the school, Mr. Stearns supplied the pulpit of the Baptist Church on the Sabbath. This arrangement continued for one year to the satisfaction of all concerned, but the double duty proved too much for his strength. In 1876, Mr. Stearns was in Lodi, Wis. The fall term, and possibly the summer, was taught by Prof. A. Briggs, who also preached in the adjoining church.

On the 12th of November of this year, 1843, Rev. Zebulon Jones signed a written agreement taking charge of the school on his own responsibility. This arrangement continued until the summer of 1851, thus proving the longest as well as one of the most successful engagements in the history of the school. Mr. Jones was a man of iron constitution and great executive ability. Burdened with an invalid wife, he performed the duties of a pastor during all these seven years and a half, and during a part of the time conducted a large boarding-house, and at one time held the office of county school commissioner. His school numbered at one time seventy-five scholars or more, but suffering from his absence the attendance declined. Mr. Jones is now living at East Hubbardton, Vt.

From Nov. 6, 1848, to Sept. 8, 1853, the records are a blank, but during this time occurred one of the best administrations in the whole history of the school, that of Lysander Dickerman, for six quarters, commencing with the spring of 1852.

During the year between Mr. Jones and Mr. Dickerman the school was taught for one or more terms by a Mr. Pitman, a good scholar and a good man, but lacking in executive talent. Mr. Dickerman was a graduate of Brown University, had been serving as associate principal of Pierce Academy, Middleboro', Mass., and attracted from thence a fine class of young men. His administration was characterized by thoroughness of instruction and strictness of discipline, in both of which qualities the school had sometimes been deficient. Mr. Dickerman is now settled as a pastor in Massachusetts.

Following Mr. Dickerman, the school was taught for several terms by Mr. Francis M. Dodge, a popular teacher, from Wrenham, Mass. Mr. Dodge was a graduate of Waterville College, and has since followed the profession of teaching with success. He resigned the position in November, 1855, because the trustees would assume no pecuniary responsibility.

In November, 1855, the trustees resolved to make an effort to secure an endowment of twenty thousand dollars, one-half to be a permanent fund and the other half to be taken up in scholarships. Nothing was accomplished in this direction, though Hon. George H. Dodge offered fifteen thousand dollars towards such a fund, provided the balance was raised. The reason was said to be because the Baptist Academy at New London had just sent out an agent for a like purpose.

The winter term of 1855 was taught by Mr. George B. Elden, of Maine. The last recorded report to the Association was made in September, 1856, by Rev. Samuel E. Brown, secretary. From that time to September, 1864, the records are silent. But in the interval the school had been taught several terms by Rev. Alfred Colburn, who had pastoral charge of the Baptist Church from October, 1859, to May, 1863. The last term was taught by him. Thus ended the prolonged struggles of this institution, which started with such bright prospects. At the annual meeting of the board of trustees in September, 1864, Rev. N. Hooper was chosen president, Rev. W. H. Walker clerk, and George D. Dodge treasurer, and the president and clerk were instructed to ascertain the proprietors of the academy building. They reported as follows: Richard Dodge nine shares, George H. Dodge seven shares, T. L. Sanborn three shares, John W. Dodge five shares, D. Jannin two shares, and John S. Tilton one share. In 1865-66 the same officers were chosen, and at the latter date the president and clerk were instructed to ascertain the legal claims of the Association to the academy, and recommend some course for final action. Thus closes the record. The building was occupied in 1871 as a shoe manufactory, and was finally destroyed by an incendiary fire at midnight of April 30, 1875.

Previous to the erection and occupation of the Baptist meeting-house in September, 1836, church services had been held for two years in the academy hall; and up to 1871 this hall had been more or less occupied for religious services, sometimes on the Sabbath, but more especially for evening services. The academy bell was melted in the conflagration. It cost about one hundred dollars, three-fourths of which was contributed by the citizens and one-fourth by the trustees. It had always been used by the Baptist Church, and was the only bell ever hung in this town. It was tolled for the first time on the death of Dudley Dodge in 1834. The following is a list of those most prominently connected with the institution as trustees: Revs. Silas Usley,* William Lamson,* N. Hooper,* C. W. Flanders, Oliver Ayer,* Samuel Cooke, and J. W. Poland;* Deacons Samuel Cleaves, G. C. Brown,* Peter Sanborn,* William Brown, Richard Dodge, and George H. Dodge. (Those marked * are still living.) Richard and George H. Dodge were always members of the board of trustees, and the latter acted as treasurer almost without exception. This institution exerted a very beneficial influence on the place in awakening a desire for culture and affording the means. The self-denying efforts of its founders were not wasted, for its alumni have an honorable record. Its annual exhibitions were occasions never to be forgotten. As Rev. N. Hooper recently remarked, he had never seen them excelled. Let the present inhabitants of this quiet village picture the time when the number of students exceeded its present population. Let them think of this addition to the Sabbath congregation. And let them in imagination listen to the frequent ringing of the academy bell, and the laughter of the merry throng hastening to obey its summons.

The Weare Monument.<sup>1</sup>—Around the little triangular common<sup>2</sup> at Hampton Falls village cluster several points of historic interest. On its bosom repose the ashes of Rockingham Academy, once the life and pride of the place, while across the highway stands its surviving twin institution, the Baptist Church, beneath whose shade rest the remains of some of their founders, whose names are honorably connected with much that is best in the history of their native place. Near its apex, on one side, is located the new school-house, erected in 1877, the third at least on the same spot, to make room for which its predecessor, erected in 1839, was moved across the common to where it now stands, on the premises of Mr. J. W. Green. The unpainted hip-roofed one removed in 1839 is said to be now standing in South Seabrook. In its rear stood the old engine-house, which has been moved four times since about 1848, and now stands on the premises of Mr. George D. Dodge. And near it formerly stood the gun-house, where was kept a brass six-pounder to roar on muster days.

On the opposite side stands the venerable Weare mansion where, in the early recollection of the writer, resided Mr. John Porter, who married Hannah, daughter of Governor Mesheek Weare. Antiquated in speech and dress, he wore a queue, and used to inquire for my "sire." He died in 1847, at the age of seventy; his wife in 1849, aged ninety-five; and Miss Nabby Lang, a granddaughter of the Governor, and the last of this household, in 1864, at the age of ninety. George H. Dodge was the executor of the wills of Mr. and Mrs. Porter, and by that of the latter he was instructed to erect a monument to the memory of her distinguished father, the first Governor of New Hampshire. The sum at his disposal being insufficient to erect a suitable one, Mr. Dodge applied to the Legislature of 1852 for an appropriation for this purpose. These were the times of close economy in public affairs, and no appropriation of the kind had ever been granted by our Legislature. And it was not until the following session that a resolution was passed, authorizing the Governor and Council to appoint a committee "to cause to be erected over the grave of Hon. Mesheek Weare, in Hampton Falls, a suitable monument to his memory, to his patriotism and many virtues." The following persons were appointed as this committee: George H. Dodge, of Hampton Falls, J. Everett Sargent, of Wentworth, and John H. Wiggins, of Dover. This committee attended promptly to the duty assigned them, and as the result of their efforts a monument was completed in the fall of 1853, its location being the base of the common bounded by the old stage-route from Portsmouth to Boston. It stands at a favorable elevation, facing the sea, its chaste column kissed by the first rays of the morning sun as he rises from his briny bed. It is about thirty rods distant from the Weare mansion, while the remains of the Governor lie with his family at about the same distance in the opposite direction, in an ancient cemetery formerly a part of the Weare homestead. A simple monument marks the spot, which was not considered a suitable location for the larger one, while the surviving relatives were unwilling that his remains should be removed. The family monument, erected at a later date, is inscribed to "Prest. Weare," probably as the result of some criticism on the inscription of the public one to "Gov." Weare. The title of "Prest." is undoubtedly the strictly correct one, while that of "Gov." is the more intelligible one at the present day.

The lot where the public monument stands was graded and fenced by the town, quite an area being at first inclosed with posts of granite and rails of wood. Afterwards, in 1875, an appropriation of three hundred dollars was obtained from the State, for the inclosure of a smaller space by an iron fence of neat design. In the almost thirty years which have elapsed since its erection, both the stones of the small boy and the tooth of time have made their marks on its structure, the latter being the deeper and more serious of the two. It is an interesting historical fact that this monument marks the site of the first meeting-house erected in Hampton Falls. To Allen Treat, of Portsmouth, the committee intrusted the execution of their design, at an expense of two thousand five hundred dollars.

At the time of its erection this monument was said to be the finest in the State. Its base is eight feet square, composed of two granite blocks two feet in thickness. Upon this base rests a single granite block six feet square, and something more than two feet thick. Above this rises the monument of Italian marble, composed of plinth, die, cup, shaft, and urn, making a height of twenty-nine and a half feet.

The marble plinth is three feet ten inches square, and seventeen inches in height. The die is five feet in height, affording ample space on its four sides for the necessary inscriptions, as follows. On the front:

"He was one of those good men
Who dared to love their Country and be poor."

This side would be the plainest of all, but for the inscription in long letters and bold relief on the front of the cap over the die. And on the shaft above, a shield incloses a finely-executed design of the State seal in the form of a shallow hemisphere.

"GOV. WEARE,"

On the right side—

"ERECTED

by the State of New Hampshire, to perpetuate the memory of her illustrious Son, whose early efforts, sage councils, and persevering labors contributed largely towards establishing his Country's independence, and shaping the future destiny of his native State."

A laurel wreath.

Each side of the cap (above) the die is ornamented with a wreath, and surmounting the shaft is a shapely urn from which rises a flame, emblematic of the well-earned immortality of him whose wisdom, virtues, and patriotism this monument is designed to commemorate. At the time of its erection Italian marble was considered to be the proper thing, but it is now said to be less enduring than the softest marble from Vermont. Be that as it may, the memory of this patriot will remain as imperishable as the granite of his native State.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

HON. WARREN BROWN.

Hon. Warren Brown, of Hampton Falls, N. H., is a lineal descendant of the seventh generation from John Brown, who was of Scotch descent, but was born in England, and followed the baker's trade in London many years previous to his emigration to America. John Brown set sail for the New World April 17, 1635, in the ship "Elizabeth," and reached Boston the following June. Among many others who came to these shores at the same time was one Sarah Walker, then seventeen years of age, who subsequently became the wife of John Brown, and the mother of a large and intelligent family. Their descendants are numbered by the hundreds and thousands, and are scattered from Maine to California. From 1635 to 1638, Mr. Brown resided in Salem or Lynn (tradition says Salem), Mass. He settled in Hampton in 1638, and became one of the first proprietors of the town. As early as 1640 he was somewhat engaged in ship-building, for he "built a barque at the river near the present site of Perkins' Mill, supposed to be the first craft larger than a common row-boat built in town." He was one of the largest land-holders in the town, and was considerably engaged in stock-raising. In 1673 and 1674 he and his son John brought suit against the "prudent men," and also against the town of Hampton, for not causing a road to be built to his farm. The court decided in his favor, and the road was built. In 1651 and 1656 he was one of the selectmen of the town, though as a rule he was not prominent in State or church matters. In 1664 he was one of those chosen to look after the boys during divine service, though he himself was not, probably, a church-member. We are informed by tradition that all five of his sons were engaged in conflicts with the Indians, but with respect to three of them it is certain. During King Philip's war, in 1676, John and Thomas Brown, sons of John, were among those to whom Hampton was to pay certain sums for military services.

In 1677, Stephen, the youngest son, being but eighteen years of age, enlisted and accompanied the expedition to the eastward, and was at the battle of Black Point, where sixty out of ninety men lost their lives, and he was one of them, being killed June 29, 1677. In 1683, John Brown, oldest son of John Brown, died, aged about forty. He was unmarried,

Warren Brown

Joseph T. Sanborn

Benjamin Brown, second son of John, came into possession of the greater part of his father's property at Seabrook, and some of his descendants still live on the same farm. John Brown, Sr., died Feb. 28, 1686, aged ninety-eight years. The name was formerly spelled with an "e" final—Browne. His wife, Sarah, died Feb. 28, 1687. Their children were Sarah, John, Benjamin, Elizabeth, Jacob, Mary, Thomas, Stephen, Sarah (2), and Abial S.

Jacob, Thomas, and Benjamin lived to be more than eighty-seven years of age. The line of descent from John Brown to Hon. Warren Brown is as follows: Warren<sup>1</sup>, John B.<sup>2</sup>, Jacob<sup>3</sup>, Nathan<sup>4</sup>, Jacob<sup>5</sup>, Benjamin<sup>6</sup>, John<sup>7</sup>.

Jacob<sup>3</sup> married Abigail Berry, of Greenland, and had four sons,—Thomas, Nathan W., Joseph C., and John B.

Mr. Brown was a farmer in Hampton Falls, and was a member of the Christian Church. He died April 25, 1859, aged ninety-two, and his wife died Dec. 20, 1833.

John B. Brown was born at East Kingston, Jan. 5, 1799, and removed to Hampton Falls with his parents when he was one year old. He married Sarah M., daughter of Thomas Leavitt, of Hampton Falls, May 8, 1834. She was born Oct. 24, 1808. Their only child is Warren Brown, born Aug. 11, 1836, on the same farm which he now owns in Hampton Falls, N. H. John B. Brown was a farmer by occupation, and a Democrat in politics. He died March 31, 1858, aged fifty-nine years. His widow still survives him, and resides with her only son.

Hon. Warren Brown received such advantages for an education as the common schools of his native town afforded, supplemented by some three years at the Rockingham Academy, in Hampton Falls, and Phillips Academy, at Andover, Mass. He was reared a farmer, which honorable calling he has successfully followed to the present time. He owns the old Brown homestead, in Hampton Falls, which was formerly owned by one Benjamin Batchelder, who was a lineal descendant of the fourth generation of Rev. Stephen Batchelder, "said to have been the first Congregational minister at Lynn, Mass., and Hampton, N. H." Benjamin Batchelder was born Sept. 19, 1673, married Susannah Page, Dec. 25, 1696, and had thirteen children, the sixth of whom, Susannah, became the wife of Ebenezer Webster, and one of their sons was Col. Ebenezer Webster, of Revolutionary fame, and father of Hon. Daniel Webster, America's greatest statesman, his mother being Abigail Eastman, of Salisbury, Mass.

When this farm was owned by Mr. Batchelder it consisted of one hundred and fifty acres, but the farm now owned by Warren Brown contains more than three hundred acres, which is in a fine state of cultivation. In 1879, Mr. Brown erected one of the finest and most substantial dwellings in the county, and, taken with his numerous and well-arranged outbuildings, presents at once to the passer-by one of the most attractive places in the county. In politics he was a Democrat until the great civil war, when he became a Republican, and as such he has held the various town offices, and in 1872-73 was a member of the State Senate, serving on the Committees of Railroads and Banks, and was chairman of the Committee on Agriculture. From 1879-81 he was a member of the Executive Council under Governor Bead. He has always been prominently identified with the agricultural interest of his county and State. For thirteen years he has been a trustee of the "New England Agricultural Society" from New Hampshire, and since 1879 he has been president of the New Hampshire State Agricultural Society.

Mr. Brown is one of the most successful farmers in Rockingham County, and his splendid farm is widely known, but perhaps few are aware that the lineage of Daniel Webster was reared on this farm, or that he, Webster, was a lineal descendant of Rev. Stephen Batchelder, the first minister of Hampton.

On the 1st of January, 1867, Mr. Brown married Sarah G., daughter of the late Daniel L. and Sophia "O-good" Norris, of Dover. She was born Nov. 17, 1841.

Their children are Harry B., Arthur W., Gertrude N., Mildred L., all born in the old "Brown" house, on this same farm.

Mr. Brown is a member of high standing of the Masonic fraternity.

He is respected at home and honored abroad.

JOSEPH T. SANBORN.

Tradition has it that the great ancestor of the Sanborn family in New Hampshire was one John Sanborn, who died in England, leaving the care of his family, consisting of three sons,—John, William, and Stephen,—to his father-in-law, the Rev. Stephen Bachiler. This latter gentleman and several others came to this country with their families, landing on the good ship "William and Francis," June 5, 1632. They went at once from Boston to Lynn, Mass. Rev. Mr. Bachiler returned to England; and it is believed that Stephen, one of the grandsons mentioned above, returned with him. Most of those who came with them removed to Hampton, N. H., in 1638, and here John and William lived and died. Their descendants lived there for more than one hundred years. The family name was sometimes changed to Sanborne and Sanbourne. John Sanborn, Sr., was born in England about 1600; married, and had three sons,—John, William, and Stephen. John (2d) was born in England in 1620, came to America in 1632, was twice married,—first to Mary, daughter of Robert Tuck. She died Dec. 30, 1668, and Mr. Sanborn married for second wife Margaret Moulton (a widow), daughter of Robert Page.

John was a prominent man, and was made freeman Oct. 11, 1685. William Sanborn came to America at the same time (1632), married Mary Moulton, lived in Hampton, was made a freeman in 1678, and died Sept. 18, 1692, aged seventy years. He held the various offices of his town. Stephen Sanborn, the youngest son of John, married and returned to England. Sowell S. Sanborn, a lineal descendant from John Sanborn, first generation, lived on the same farm in Hampton Falls where at the present writing (1882) his grandson, Joseph T. Sanborn, now resides. He married Miss Elizabeth Batchelder, and had a large family of children, of which Thayer S. was next to the youngest son. Both Thayer S. and his wife were members of the Congregational Church, and lived to an advanced age.

Thayer S. received an academic education at Hampton, and taught school for a number of years. He married Deborah Ward, of Hampton, and had six children. These were Harriet W. (who became the wife of Dr. Edward Grosvenor, of Newburyport), Thomas L., Joseph T., Marcia W., Helen E., and Joseph H. Of these, Helen died young, and Joseph H. died in October, 1878. The last named was a soldier in the war of the Rebellion, and died from the effects of hardships sustained in the service. Mr. Sanborn was always prominent in politics, being a Whig in his early life, and subsequently a Republican. He held at one time or another all of the offices in the gift of the people of his township, and served in the State Legislature two years. The Wear National Bank, in which he was a large stockholder and director, was located in his own house at Hampton Falls. Both himself and wife were members of the Congregational Church, and active in all church and neighborhood affairs. Mrs. Sanborn died in 1858, and Mr. Sanborn in August, 1874. Both are buried in the cemetery at Hampton Falls.

Joseph T. Sanborn was favored with a good education, attending school for several years at Rockingham Academy and one year at Pembroke, N. H. He left school at nineteen, and immediately engaged in the mercantile business for himself at Hampton Falls, continuing in business for five years. In the spring of 1853 he went to California, and engaged in the wholesale grocery business at San Francisco, continuing there until 1869. He was also interested in some extensive mining operations and in other business enterprises. In December, 1869, he returned to Hampton Falls, where he has since resided. Owing to poor health he did not again engage in active business until 1876.

After the death of his father, in 1874, he came into possession of the old Sanborn home-stead, where he now resides (1882), and which property has been in the possession of the family for more than two hundred years. In politics Mr. Sanborn is a Republican. He served in the Legislature in 1878 with credit and distinction, and was a member of the committee on the reform school. At the present writing he is a member of the board of education of Hampton Falls. He married Eliza B., daughter of Jefferson and Mary (Wadleigh) Janvrin, Ang. 10, 1876. Mrs. Sanborn was born at Seabrook, Dec. 7, 1843. They have one child, Fannie Ward, who was born Nov. 15, 1877. Mr. Sanborn is a leading citizen, a man with much influence and many friends. From his ancestors, among whom were many good men and true, there have descended to him many of the qualities that go to make up the sum of good citizenship and true, useful manhood.

JEFFERSON JANVRIN.

Jefferson Janvrin was a lineal descendant of Jean Janvrin and his wife, Elizabeth Le Consteur, who lived in Isle of Jersey, which at that time belonged to France. Their son, Jean Janvrin, being a seafaring man, sailed between ports of Europe and America carrying merchandise. Aug. 6, 1696, he sailed from Lisbon for Portsmouth, N. H., commander of his own ship, the "Four Friends." The "log" of this and subsequent voyages is now in possession of Jefferson Janvrin's family. He built a wharf in Portsmouth, not finding one there sufficient for unloading and loading his cargoes. Sept. 12, 1706, he married Elizabeth Knight, of Portsmouth. They had two sons and two daughters,—John, George, Molly, and Betsey.

He was a man of education and ability, and possessed a fine property. He died suddenly in Lisbon, while on one of his voyages. His youngest daughter, Betsey, died young, unmarried. Molly married Thomas Pickering, of Newington. George settled in Newington, and married Abigail Pickering, but died without heirs. John, the eldest son, born in Portsmouth, July 8, 1707, married Elizabeth, daughter of Capt. Moses Stickney, of Newbury, Mass., Oct. 9, 1751, from whom are descended the remaining Janvrins in this country. He received a liberal education, graduating from Harvard University in 1728. With his father he visited his grandparents in Isle of Jersey, and received from them valuable presents of silverware, some of which are now preserved in the family. He purchased a farm in Newington, and lived there a number of years. He was schoolmaster at Hampton Falls from 1756 to 1762, and a successful teacher. Finally, in 1770, he purchased two farms in Seabrook, and lived there till his death, which occurred Oct. 7, 1780. He left four sons—John, James, William, and George—and one daughter, Elizabeth.

His sons were all farmers, and settled in Seabrook and vicinity. George, the youngest son, born in Hampton Falls, March 26, 1762, inherited the home-stead, and married Dolly Lovering, of Kensington.

Their children were Sally, Dolly, George, Loraney, Ruth, Fanny, Jefferson, Miranda, and Eliza.

The youngest son, Jefferson, the subject of this sketch, was born in Seabrook, May 5, 1803. He inherited the homestead, and in 1840 married Mary Wadleigh, of Meredith. Their children are Miranda, Eliza, and George Albert. He continued to live in Seabrook till the year 1853, when he purchased a farm in Hampton Falls and erected commodious and substantial buildings.

In politics Mr. Janvrin was a Republican, and quite active. At one time or another he held most, if not all, of the town offices, and in 1862-63 he was a member of the General Assembly of the State. He was earnest, determined, and conscientious in his work. No matter of public interest failed to enlist his attention. Energetic, persevering, economical, judicious, charitable, these were some of the characteristics of the man of whom we write. In his work as a farmer he was among the best and most successful. He was long identified with the Congregational Church. Mrs. Janvrin was a Universalist. He left a good name to his family and to the community in which he spent his life. He died Sept. 2, 1879, eight months after the death of his wife, at the age of seventy-six years. His eldest daughter married Henry McDevitt, and has one son, William Henry, eleven years old. Eliza married Joseph T. Sanborn, and has one daughter, Fanny Ward, four years old. George, the youngest child, enlisted in the war of the Rebellion at the age of seventeen. He was wounded at the battle of Cold Harbor, June 3, 1864, from the effects of which he died at Harewood Hospital, Washington, D. C., June 11th, at the age of eighteen years.

JOHN H. GOVE.

John H. Gove, son of John Gove, was born in Weare, N. H., May 29, 1813. His father married Hannah, daughter of John Chase, and had children, — Abigail, Squire, Rhoda B., and John H., all born in Weare, N. H.

John Gove was a carpenter and joiner by trade, also a farmer. About 1822, when his son John H. was nine years of age, he settled at Lincoln, Addison Co., Vt., when he purchased a farm and resided there some nine years, when he went to Lynn, Mass., and carried on his trade. He was a birthright member of the Society of Friends. He died June 7, 1855, aged eighty-three years. His wife died December, 1843, aged nearly sixty-five years.

John H. was reared to habits of industry and sobriety, and these have been among his many virtues since. He settled in Vermont with his parents, and went with them to Lynn, Mass., about 1831. He was a son of a carpenter, and he took up the same business, and successfully followed it in Lynn and elsewhere till 1856. He was engaged in building bridges and jobbing, and many are the structures still standing which attest his workmanship. In June, 1856, he settled in Hampton Falls, where he now resides. Since his settlement in Hampton Falls he has been a farmer. He has been twice married,—first to Martha J. Kenyon, of North Providence, R. I., June, 1850.

She died Oct. 19, 1853; second, to Sarah P., daughter of Moses and Hannah (Dow) Wells, June 25, 1856. She was born March 15, 1819. Of this union one daughter, Sarah A., was born Aug. 11, 1857, in Hampton Falls, N. H., and now resides with her parents.

Mr. Gove is a Republican in politics. He has held the various town offices with credit to himself and satisfaction to his constituents. His judgment is often sought on various matters, and he is justly considered one of the most careful and prudent men in town. As a citizen, father, husband, and friend few are his equal and none his superiors in Hampton Falls. Mr. and Mrs. Gove are birthright members of the Society of Friends, and their daughter is one by request.

He is a descendant of one Edward Gove, who came from England and settled in New England. His grandfather was John Gove, born in Seabrook, married, and had a large family, of whom John, father of John H., was one. Moses Wells, father of Mrs. John H. Gove, was a descendant of one — Wells, who settled at Ipswich, Mass., at an early day. One of his descendants settled in Hampton Falls in 1771, and became the progenitor of Moses Wells, who in early life was a hotel-keeper, but after his marriage became a farmer. He was born in 1774, and died May 8, 1824.

CAPT. LEVI E. LANE.

The great-grandfather of the subject of this sketch was Deacon Joshua Lane, a farmer, who lived at Hampton, and whose wife was Bathsheba Robie. They had sixteen children, one of whom, Deacon Jeremiah Lane, married Mary Sanborn, a daughter of Lieut. Joseph Sanborn. They had five children, as follows: Mary, who married Thomas Berry, of Greenland, and subsequently settled in Pittsfield, N. H.; Joshua; Jeremiah, who married, and settled in Chichester; Simeon, who also married and settled in Chichester; and Levi, who settled in Hampton Falls. Deacon Jeremiah Lane seems to have had several occupations, being a farmer, a tailor, and a surveyor. In the latter capacity he laid out several townships. He was an active and useful citizen, and died in 1806, at the age of seventy-four. His wife survived him, living until 1818.

Levi Lane was born in Hampton Falls, Feb. 14, 1774, and was a tailor by trade, although he was engaged in farming the greater part of his life. He was married in March, 1798, to Anna, daughter of Deacon David Batchelor, of Hampton Falls, who was born in August, 1775. They had ten children,—Jeremiah, Mary A., Sarah, Emery, Nancy, Rhoda, David E., Abigail B., George G., and Levi E. The three youngest are still living. Mr. Levi Lane and all of his children were born on the farm at Hampton Falls now owned by Wells W. Healey. In 1828 they moved upon the farm where Capt. Lane now resides. In politics he was a Whig, being quite active, and holding the position of representative in the Legislature in 1826 and 1827. He was also elected selectman, and was a magistrate for many years. He was a deacon in the Congregational Church, and an active and useful Christian man. He died Nov. 30, 1864, aged ninety years and ten months. His wife died in July, 1848.

Levi E. Lane was born Feb. 5, 1819. He has always followed the occupation of a farmer, and has been one of the best and tastiest farmers in that section of the State. His farm is neat and tidy, his buildings in excellent condition, and his land in a high state of cultivation. In addition to a good common-school education, he spent two terms at an academy. Mr. Lane has been twice married. His first wife was Cynthia S., daughter of Dearborn and Hannah (Merrill) Lane, who was born in Hampton Falls in 1817, and died Oct. 10, 1873. To her he was married in April, 1849. They had one child, a daughter, Annie S., who was born Nov. 20, 1855. She received a liberal education, and was married June 6, 1877, to Charles F. Wadleigh. She has two children, Mabel F. and Fannie M. His second wife was Amy Elizabeth Carlen, who was born in Queens County, Ireland, July 26, 1839, and came to America in 1851. To her he was married Feb. 9, 1785. Mr. Lane came in possession of the farm where he now resides by paying some obligations to his father's creditors. He has been an active Republican, and held many positions of trust. In 1866-67 he was a member of the Legislature, and served on the Committee on Military Accounts. He was a selectman for eight years, and township treasurer for two years. He has been active in the State militia, and has held all of the positions from private to captain, serving in the latter capacity for one year. He is a member of the Unitarian Church of Hampton Falls.

GEORGE HUBBARD DODGE.

George Hubbard Dodge was the son of Dudley, who was the son of Nathaniel Hubbard, who came from Wenham, Mass., to Hampton Falls about 1765, and was descended from Richard, who landed at Salem, Mass., in 1629.

He was born in 1807, and died Feb. 14, 1862.

He was educated at Hampton Academy, and commenced business as a clothier and farmer.

He was one of the founders and building committee of Rockingham Academy in 1834, and from 1834 to 1862 was one of its trustees and its treasurer almost without exception.

In 1835 he was one of the building committee of the Baptist meeting-house.

In 1835 he married Mary, daughter of Rev. George Keely, of Haverhill, Mass., by whom he had five sons and three daughters.

In 1839 was chosen town representative, and filled other town offices.

In 1840, was commissioned colonel of New Hampshire militia.

From 1842 he was merchant and postmaster for several years. Administrator of the estates of George Fifield, Stephen Dodge, John Porter, and Mrs. John Porter.

In 1846 was elected a member of the State Senate.

In 1844 he commenced the manufacture of cotton wadding and batting.

In 1847 he rebuilt mill, which had been destroyed by fire in August.

1840 to 1856 was clerk of Baptist Church.

1851-54, a director of the Manchester and Lawrence Railroad.

1852-54, president of the Manchester and Lawrence Railroad.

In 1853, presented with a valuable cane by the employees of the Manchester and Lawrence Railroad. Became an original stockholder of the Manchester and Lawrence Railroad in 1847, and at the time of his decease held eleven hundred and forty shares of its stock, and to his good judgment and active efforts this road is largely indebted for its subsequent prosperity.

In 1854 a member of the Second Constitutional Convention of New Hampshire.

In 1852-53 procured an appropriation from the State for a monument to Governor Weare, and was appointed chairman of the committee for its erection.

In 1859 chairman of a committee for the repair and improvement of the Baptist meeting-house, and himself assumed a large part of the expense.

About 1860 assumed the presidency of the Weare Bank after it had become financially unsound, and laid plans for its re-suscitation, which ill health and death prevented him from perfecting.

In politics a Whig and Republican, and a leader in all enterprises in which he enlisted. He was ambitious, public-spirited, and enterprising. Possessed of tact, energy, and good judgment, he was successful in business, and rarely failed to accomplish his purposes. Of large and progressive views and of a charitable spirit, social and genial in intercourse, he was widely known and highly esteemed. During his extensive business experience he never commenced an action at law, and never was defeated in one commenced for another.

GEORGE DUDLEY DODGE.

George Dudley Dodge, eldest child of George Hubbard and Mary Keely Dodge, born in Hampton Falls, May 4, 1836; graduated from Rockingham Academy June, 1853; entered Brown University September, 1853; compelled by a fever and subsequent ill health to discontinue his studies; spent the summer of 1855 on the coast of Labrador. From 1856 to 1858 engaged in trade in Hampton Falls. Fall of 1859, in company with a younger brother, established a business in Savannah, Ga., in the line of books, stationery, and fancy goods, and in the winter of 1860 engaged largely in the shipping of apples and potatoes. Spent a month in traveling for their sale, and was in Montgomery, Ala., at the time the Provincial Congress of the Confederacy was in session there; witnessed the bombardment and surrender of Fort Sumter, April 14, 1861, and as a memento of that event now has a thirty-two-pound ball fired from the fort, striking the rebel iron-clad battery. Those balls were called by the Southerners "Anderson's pills." After being forced into the Confederate service, and receiving news through flag of truce of the fatal illness of his father, he escaped from Savannah to Charleston; was advertised as a deserter, and a detective sent for his arrest. After eleven weeks of effort and six unsuccessful attempts to leave on blockade runners, during one of which the steamer ran aground and was shelled, he escaped in a small sloop to Nassau in November, 1862. Spent eight weeks among the Bahama Islands recuperating his health and awaiting news from home, which he finally reached, via New York, in January, 1863. He repaired the batting-mill, which had lain idle since the war commenced, and from 1864 to 1877 was engaged during most of the time in the manufacture of cotton batting on the spot where manufacturing was first established by his great-grandfather in 1790. From 1870 to 1872 postmaster and merchant in the village store. In 1872 built a new grist-mill where the old one had stood since the first settlement of the town. In 1866 erected one of the first summer cottages at Hampton Beach, which has since been occupied by his family during a part of each season. Dec. 22, 1864, married Marianna, daughter of Dr. Wm. Lighthouse, of Portsmouth, by whom he has had four sons and two daughters, of whom three sons and a daughter are now living. In 1851 united with the Baptist Church founded by his ancestors in 1828, and has held the position of church clerk for twenty-four years, Sunday-school superintendent thirteen years, and as chairman of the parish committee has employed and entertained most of the pastors and supplies since 1863.

Inheriting from his ancestors on both sides a natural appetite for tobacco, he commenced its use at the early age of six years, and continued to use it during most of the time for thirty years, to the great injury of body and mind. Convinced of the sinfulness of the habit, and long disgusted with its filthiness, he forever quit its use in 1872.

After having always considered himself a temperance man he became a total abstainer in 1872, and having used all kinds of liquors and many kinds of alcoholic bitters as remedial agents, has become convinced of the fallacy of their use as medicines, and believes the good time is coming when the physician will no longer prescribe for his patient that which so often "biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder." Believing that it is the duty of every thoughtful man to do right and leave all questions of expediency to take care of themselves, he became in 1880 an avowed Prohibitionist, and to his surprise received the nomination of that party for Governor. And it is believed that this nomination received as strong a support as any other would have secured under the circumstances; for while his name was cut from his party ticket in no instance, there were cases in which it was pasted on both of the other party tickets.

Conscientious of holding these views, and fearlessly advocating them, has brought him into conflict with those of his church and denomination who, contrary to the Scriptures, hold to the doctrine of expediency. But the good results of his course are already beginning to be seen.

Mr. Dodge has published some articles both of prose and verse, and his time is now divided between literary pursuits and manual labor for the benefit of his health.

By his mental constitution and tastes Mr. Dodge is better adapted for a profession than for business. His maternal grandfather and four of his uncles were ministers, and it was supposed by some that this would be his vocation, but his ideas of the requirements of this office were so high as to discourage him in this direction. After the relinquishment of his college course he commenced the study of medicine, but was compelled by the state of his health to avoid all confinement and lead a more active life. But he has always been interested in this direction, and has thus been able to dispense almost entirely with medical attendance in his family, and to bring himself from a physical wreck through ignorance of the laws of health to the highest degree of vigor possible with his natural constitution.

Mr. Dodge places but little value in the fact that he is able to trace his lineage to titled ancestry on both sides, but considers that the true nobility consists in self-education in all that is highest and best, and a constant advancement in character under the guidance of an enlightened conscience.

MOSES AND JOHN T. BATCHELDER.

John T. Batchelder (or Bachelor, as the name was formerly spelled), son of Moses and Abigail (Drake) Batchelder, was born on the old Batchelder homestead, in Hampton Falls, June 1, 1829, where he now resides. He is the seventh in lineal descent from Rev. Stephen Batchelder. (See his history in Hampton.) The line of descent is as follows: John T. (7th), Moses (6th), David (5th), Josiah (4th), Nathaniel (3d), Nathaniel (2d), Stephen (1st). Nathaniel (2d) was twice married, and had seventeen children, nine of whom were by his first wife, Deborah Smith, whom he married Dec. 10, 1656. Of these nine children, Nathaniel (3d) was the eldest son, born Oct. 24, 1659, married Elizabeth Foss, and had chil-den,—Nathaniel, Deborah, John, Josiah, Jethro, Nathan, Phineas, and Elizabeth. Mr. Nathaniel (3d) Batchelder settled in Hampton Falls, on the farm now in the possession of John T. Batchelder, about 1689. He died in 1745, aged eighty-six years. It was his brother Benjamin who owned at one time part of the farm now in the possession of Hon. Warren Brown.

Josiah (4th) Batchelder was born 1695, and died in 1759. His wife was Sarah Page, who was born in 1698, and died in 1781. Their children were Josiah, Elisha, Sarah, Nathaniel, Reuben, and David (5th), who was born in 1736, and died March 11, 1811. David was twice married, first to Sarah Sweatt, and had children,—Sarah, Elisha, Elizabeth, Joshua, and Hannah; second, to Mary Emery, who was born April 25, 1741, and died Nov. 26, 1834. Of this marriage the following children were born: Mary, Lydia, Anna and Rhoda (twins), Reuben, Dolly, Moses, and Abigail, all born on the old homestead in Hampton Falls, and all grew to maturity.

Moses (6th) Batchelder, born Jan. 8, 1782, and died July 11, 1861. He married Abigail, daughter of Samuel Drake, of Hampton, N. H., Jan. 5, 1809. She was born Sept. 24, 1784, and died Jan. 17, 1872. Their children were Josiah, Mary, Samuel, Aaron, Nancy, Moses E., Elizabeth, and John T. Moses Batchelder was an honest, industrious, and prudent farmer, as were his ancestors. In religion he and wife were members of the Congregational Church. In politics a Whig and Republican. He held the several town offices, and was also member of the State Legislature. He was a good man, and was beloved by all.

John T. (7th) received a common-school education. Being the youngest of the family he became the home boy, hence did not have the advantages for an education that many had. He has, however, a large fund of historical information, as he has always been a student of history. He married Emma, daughter of Horace Miles and Seviah Davis, of Patton, Me., July 18, 1872. She was born Aug. 13, 1845. Their children are five in number,—Nathaniel M., Alice G., Abbie E., Mary A., and Sarah L., all born on the same farm where their ancestor, Nathaniel, of the third generation, settled in 1689. Mr. and Mrs. Batchelder are members of the Congregational Church. For several generations his ancestors were deacons of the same church, and were God-fearing men, and inherited from their first ancestor, Rev. Stephen Bachiler, many of those qualities of head and heart that go to make up the true man.

Mr. John T. Batchelder is one of the largest farmers in town, a man in the prime of life, of powerful build, strong constitution, untiring energy, and is a man of generous impulses. He employs several men on the farm and in his saw- and grist-mills, and has dealt more or less extensively in wood and timber. In the month of January, 1878, he came very near losing his life while engaged with his men (Messrs.

Sammy Batchelder, nephew of his, and White, Wilson, Oliver, and Wright) in getting hay from the salt marsh known as "Great Neck," or Nudd's Island. They were caught by one of the severest storms and highest tides that ever visited this coast, and were in several feet of water more than six hours in the month of January, surrounded only by Egyptian darkness. All of this brave band, save Oliver Wright, who wandered off in search of home, lived to return to their families and friends. So severe was the night that the only horse they had with them perished. The violence of the storm kept quite a number of the people awake, grateful for shelter, and expressing sympathy for any possibly exposed to its fury, little thinking that some of their own citizens were suffering so much at so little a distance; but daylight came at last, and this "Spartan band" made their way homeward.

EMERY BATCHELDER.

Emery Batchelder was born in Hampton Falls, N. H., Sept. 18, 1812. His father was Reuben, son of David Batchelder, and was born in Hampton Falls, May 11, 1777, and died March, 1868. Reuben married Betsey Tilton, and had children,—David, Lucy, Emery, Rhoda, Dolly, John, and Nathaniel, all born in Hampton Falls on the farm now in the possession of John Batchelder. Mr. Batchelder was a farmer by occupation, a deacon of the Congregational Church, and a Whig and Republican in politics. He held the various town offices. His wife died Nov. 30, 1857, aged seventy-five.

Emery Batchelder (Reuben<sup>d</sup>, David<sup>3</sup>, Josiah<sup>4</sup>, Nathaniel<sup>5</sup>, Nathaniel<sup>6</sup>, Stephen<sup>7</sup>) received a limited education. He was reared a farmer, which honorable business he has followed till the present time. He owns a portion of the old home-farm in Hampton Falls. He is a Republican, and as such has been selectman two years, and member of the State Legislature in 1868-69. He united with the Congregational Church at Hampton Falls and Seabrook about 1843, being about thirty years of age. He has been a deacon of the same for many years. For several generations his ancestors were deacons, and one of their main characteristics was their devotion to the church. (See history of Rev. Stephen Bachiler.) Mr. Emery Batchelder is a trustee of the Dearborn Academy at Seabrook, N. H., and was its treasurer some ten years, or till failing health—blindness—compelled him to resign. He married Dorothy A., daughter of Simon N. Dearborn, of Hampton, N. H. (See Dearborn, History Hampton.) She was born Sept. 23, 1817. Their children are Charles E., who died at thirty-four; Annah E., wife of Hoher B. Cram, of Amesbury, Mass.; John A., resides in Iowa; Ellen P. (Mrs. Irving H. Lamprey, of Charlestown, Mass.); Abby C., wife of Cyrus L. Brown, Pittsfield, N. H.; David F. and Mary L., at home.

DAVID H. ELKINS.

Henry Elkins was a tailor in Boston, and was admitted a freeman in 1635. He removed to Exeter about 1637 to 1640, thence settled in Hampton about 1647. He and his family lived on a part of the Toppan farm. His wife Mary died Jan. 17, 1659, and he died Sept. 19, 1668. His inventory was forty-three pounds, appraised by Godfrey Dearborn and Giles Fuller. He left two sons,—Gershom, who was administrator of the estate, and Eliza, who settled in Exeter. Gershom Elkins married Mary, daughter of Thomas Sleeper, March 15, 1667. Their children were Jonathan, born Nov. 24, 1668; Moses, born Oct. 4, 1670; Mary, born July 2, 1674; Joanna, born Jan. 24, 1677, died a maiden Jan. 12, 1762; Henry, killed by the Indians at Kingston, Sept. 17, 1707; Samuel, married Mary Tilton, Feb. 5, 1706; Thomas, born 1682, died in 1760. One or more of the last three children may have been children of Eliezer Elkins, his brother.

Gershom Elkins was a representative of Hampton in 1708. Nov. 26, 1706, was chosen deacon. He lived in the garden of E. W. Toppan, deceased. His will is dated June 9, 1714, and proved March 5, 1718. Thomas Elkins, executor. Inventory, 4555 ss. 6d., Feb. 28, 1718.

Eliezer Elkins, son of Henry, married Deborah, daughter of Jasper Blake, Dec. 31, 1673. He was at Exeter in 1683, when he signed Wear's petition. This is all we know of him.

David H. Elkins, whose portrait accompanies this sketch, was a son of David B. Elkins and Mary Batchelder, and was born in the town of Hampton, N. H., June 5, 1831. His father was a farmer, and he was reared to industry and economy. At twenty-one years of age, in 1852, he went to Woburn, Mass., where he worked at the carpenter's trade two years, thence to Milton, Mass., and worked for one John H. Burt three years. Sept. 18, 1856, he married Mary E., daughter of Benjamin and Mary (Green) White, of Phillipston, Mass. She was born Jan. 22, 1836. Her father was a farmer, and died March 26, 1870, aged sixty-six years. Mr. and Mrs. Elkins have eight children,—Mary A. (died at six), Benjamin W., David H., Lizzie E., Albert W., Mattie L. (deceased), John W., Herbert G. All were born in Milton, Mass., except the eldest.

Soon after his marriage in 1856, Mr. Elkins returned to his native town of Hampton, N. H., and was here engaged as a farmer three years, when he moved back to Milton, Mass., and there devoted his energies to his trade. He was a successful contractor and builder till his death, Dec. 16, 1874. He spent the winter of 1869-70 in South Carolina for his health. In politics he was a Republican. Mr. and Mrs. Elkins were members of the Congregational Church at Hampton, N. H. He died at Milton, where he was buried. He was respected at home and abroad, and his memory is cherished by his family.

His family continued to reside in Milton till Dec. 11, 1880, when they settled in Hampton Falls, where they now reside.

TRUE M. PRESCOTT.

True M. Prescott is the sixth in lineal descent from James Prescott, who came originally from England, and settled at Hampton Falls, near where now stands the Unitarian Church. The line of descent is as follows: True M.'s (James', James', Eliza', James', James'). James Prescott, grandfather of True M., was captain of a company in the Revolutionary war, and was in the battles of Saratoga and Stillwater. The sword he wore in those engagements is still in possession of the family. He married Sarah Lane; they had two sons and seven daughters. The sons were named Simon and James. He was by occupation a farmer, and lived to the ripe old age of ninety-four, dying September, 1830. He was a devout man and a deacon in the Congregational Church.

James, his youngest son, was born Oct. 8, 1779. He married Margaret Babb, daughter of James Babb, of Epsom, by whom he had three children,—True M., Lucy M. (wife of Aaron Prescott), Eliza (wife of Emory Stevens, of Eppingham). Mrs. Prescott died February, 1830. He married for his second wife Sarah Sanborn. (See Sanborn history.) Mr. Prescott was a member of Congregational Church; was by occupation a farmer and shoemaker, and in politics a Federalist and Whig. He was a good farmer, industrious, prudent, and frugal. He died Oct. 16, 1859, aged eighty years.

True M., whose portrait accompanies this sketch, was born March 19, 1804; he received a common-school education, working on the farm eight months in the year, and attending school four months. He was brought up on the farm, and farming has been his life's work. In connection with this occupation he was, however, engaged in shipping milk to Boston thirteen years.

His wife is Sarah M., daughter of Joshua Pike, of Hampton Falls. She was born July 5, 1808. They have two children,—Harriet A. M. and Warren J. In politics Mr. Prescott is a staunch Republican, and in religion a Unitarian, of which church he has been a member over thirty-five years. He has been selectman of his town five years, and has held all important town offices. He is now a remarkably hale and active man for his years, and bids fair to enjoy yet many years of life.

Warren J. Prescott was born April 4, 1842. He received the advantages of the schools of his neighborhood, and also one term at Rockingham Academy. He engaged in express business in 1861 between Hampton Falls and Boston, and continued two years, and three years following he followed the same business between Amesbury and Boston. In 1875 he began the floral business in a small way at first, but it has now developed into an extensive business. Over five hundred different varieties of plants and flowers may be seen in his well-appointed green-houses, and his patronage extends to all adjacent towns. He is also engaged in farming, market-gardening, and intends to add pickling to his already extensive business. He married, Jan. 17, 1864, Lavina F. Hoyt. They have two children.—Edwin J., born Aug. 27, 1865, and Nellie L., born May 7, 1868. He is a Republican in politics.

CALEB T. SANBORN AND SAMUEL MELCHER.

Caleb T. Sanborn was born in Kensington, N. H., June 13, 1797, and was the son of Billiard Sanborn, and the grandson of Richard Sanborn. The wife of Richard Sanborn was Eliza Hilliard. Hilliard Sanborn was born in Kensington, and lived to be seventy-one years of age. He was a carpenter by trade. He married Sarah Tilton, a daughter of Caleb Tilton, and had five children, the third of whom was the Caleb T. Sanborn mentioned above. The latter served with honor in the war of 1812, although only about fifteen years of age, and his widow receives a pension from the government. The greater part of his life was spent upon the farm where he died July 3, 1842, his parents having located there when he was but six months of age. His father was a carpenter, and he followed that occupation in connection with farming all through life. He married Polly M., the daughter of Joseph and Mary (Rowell) Melcher, of Hampton Falls, who was born Dec. 15, 1798. They were married April 20, 1824. Their children were George W., born Jan. 8, 1825; Eliza S., born Jan. 6, 1827; Mary H., born April 5, 1830; Hiram E., born May 7, 1834 (died March 20, 1856); and Martha J., born Sept. 10, 1840. Mary H. Melcher became the wife of David C. Hawes, of New Bedford, Mass., and bore six children. Their names are Levi M., David E., Frank S., Samuel C., Henry W., and Mary A. Mr. and Mrs. Hawes are living (in 1882) upon the identical farm in Hampton Falls which has been in the family during seven generations.

Samuel Melcher, who was a son of Joseph and Mary (Rowell) Melcher, and a brother of Mrs. Caleb T. Sanborn, was born in Hampton Falls, June 30, 1810, and died in September, 1860. He was an active, influential citizen, being a stock dealer by occupation. In politics he was a Democrat. He held the position of selectman for a time. After the death of his brother-in-law, he took a deep interest in the family and was of very material assistance to them in the years before the children had attained to manhood. At his death his property fell in equal portions to the children for whom he had so long cared.

The three direct ancestors of Joseph Melcher were all named Samuel. The family have been quite noted for their longevity, many of them attaining to a great age. Mr. Joseph Melcher was a farmer and stock dealer during his lifetime. He was a member of the Baptist Church, and an honorable and exemplary citizen. He lived to be quite aged, dying about 1853.

THE ROBIE FAMILY.

Col. Ichabod Robie was among the early settlers of the town. His grandfather, Henry Robie, came from England to Dorchester, Mass., in 1639, and settled in Exeter, N. H., the same year. He was one of the selectmen in 1650, and removed to Hampton, A.D. 1655. He died in 1688, aged eighty-nine years.

John, son of Henry, moved to Haverhill, Mass., A.D. 1674, and built a house there in 1675. He was killed by Indians June 16, 1691, aged forty-five years. His son Ichabod, a lad eleven years of age, who witnessed the killing of his father, was taken prisoner, but afterwards escaped, went to Dover, N. H., learned the trade of a tanner, and in 1703 settled in Hampton Falls. He died Aug. 10, A.D. 1753, aged seventy-three years.

Henry, son of Ichabod, was born in 1714, was a farmer and tanner. He held various town offices, was a justice of the peace and surveyor of land. He was one of the committee who built the Seabrook meeting-house, which was raised April 17, A.D. 1764. He died April 26, 1807, aged ninety-three years.

Nathan, son of Henry, succeeded his father on the farm and in the tannery. He died Sept. 25, 1842, aged eighty-four years.

Henry, son of Nathan, born Sept. 24, 1797, lived on the old homestead, and died Feb. 15, A.D. 1874, in the seventy-seventh year of his age.

Nathan Henry, son of Henry, born July 11, A.D. 1835, owns and occupies the old homestead on which Col. Ichabod settled in 1703. He is an auctioneer and conveyancer.

CHAPTER LII.

Early History, etc.—Kensington is a small town, about eight miles to the west of the sea-coast in Hampton, about forty-five miles from Concord, and forty-two from Boston. More hills are noticed on the geological map in this than any other town in the vicinity. Moulton's Ridge, Martin's Hill, Gove's Hill, Ward's Hill, Newfound Hill, Round Hill, Horse Hill, Connor's Hill, and Hoosar Hill are mentioned. The Muddy Pond is situated in a swamp, and contains only a few acres. The brooks seek the ocean by the Piscataqua, Hampton River, and the Merri-mac. From the hills the visitor may have fine views of the ocean on the one side and fine views of the mountains on the other, while, when the atmosphere is very clear, the White Mountains are visible. The breezes, as they come from the sea or the mountains, are so clear and invigorating that they make the location remarkably healthy. From the reports of the deaths in this town for the years 1880 and 1881, the average length of life was nearly seventy years. Summer visitors who like beautiful scenery, pure and bracing air, and retirement from the noise and dust of the city here find rest, enjoyment, and strength.

The town has a great variety of soils, from the grassy meadows and sandy plains to the large swells of rich land which are well adapted to agriculture. Grass, corn, potatoes, apples, beef, pork, butter, and milk are among the productions. Most of the people are farmers, though some are mechanics, especially those engaged in shoemaking. The markets are very convenient, not only in this vicinity but also by the railroads to the larger cities.

The first settlement in Kensington is said to have been made by Stephen Green near Green's Brook, about a mile to the south of the meeting-house. When the first house was built, it is said that there was not another dwelling between it and Canada except the wigwams of the savages. People used a ladder, it is said, to enter the house, and at night drew in the ladder to prevent the intrusion of the Indians. Tradition tells us how the Indians were seen sitting on the logs in the clearing, how a large dog stood at the window with his paws on a savage who was trying to enter, and how the Indians when kindly treated manifested their pleasure and gratitude. The Greens, who lived here, were Quakers; and John G. Whittier, the distinguished poet, thinks that his ancestor, Thomas Whittier, married Ruth Green, of this place. The spring brook as it winds along the beautiful valley, the Quaker graveyard, and the surrounding hills and groves remind us of those quiet and cheerful Friends who, after the trials and persecutions of their sect, were glad to find this home of peace and rest.

Of the trials and sufferings of the Quakers, which give some of the saddest pages in our colonial history, we need not speak, as they were before the incorporation of this town and belong to the history of Hampton. The witchcraft delusion had passed away, though some of the earlier inhabitants of this town were not free from the spirit of the age, which condemned those who suffered death as witches. Stories are told of animals and men who were under supernatural influences, and of the two-lock chest, containing the implements of the black art, while Johannah, Kate, and Ruth were supposed to be in league with the devil. Events which were strange and eccentric were attributed to witchcraft, while shrewd and artful women were proud of their superior power and insight. The savages, since Lovell's fight at Pequakett, in 1725, were not troublesome in this region, though rangers and scouting parties were sent to the interior, while bands of French and Indians troubled settlements near the frontier.

Hampton Falls was set off from Hampton in 1712 as the West Parish. In 1732 an attempt was made to form a parish from the west part of Hampton Falls and the east of Kingston, but the plan did not succeed.

In October, 1734, the Rev. Joseph Whipple was authorized, in connection with the people, to employ a minister to preach four months during the winter season, thus forming what was called a winter parish.

In 1735 a similar arrangement was made. It was proposed in the Hampton Falls parish meeting to excuse the people in the upper part of the parish from the ministerial tax, in order that they might employ a minister themselves.

In 1736 the same proposition was renewed, but there is no record of any action on the subject.

Kensington was incorporated in 1837.

By the Governor and General Assembly, John Weare, Ezekiel Dow, and Joseph Wadleigh were appointed to call the first parish-meeting in Kensington.

April 18, 1737. At a legal meeting of the parish in Kensington, Richard Sanborn was chosen moderator; Ezekiel Dow, clerk; and Jonathan Prescott, John Weare, and James Perkins, selectmen.

June 18, 1737. The parish voted to call Jeremiah Fogg as the minister of Kensington.

At a meeting of the parish Oct. 10, 1737, it was voted that the fourth Wednesday of October be the day to ordain Mr. Fogg. John Bachelder, James Fogg, Abraham Moulton, John Weare, Ebenezer Brown, Moses Blake, Samuel Page, and Robert Row were the committee to make the arrangements for the ordination.

Oct. 4, 1737. Fifty-seven members were dismissed from the church in Hampton Falls to incorporate the church in Kensington.

October 7th. The church in Hampton voted to dismiss Mr. Jeremiah Fogg, ye pastor elect, Edward Tucke and wife, Edward Lock, Hannah Shaw, the wife of Joseph Shaw, widow Sarah Bachelder, and Abigail Cram, the wife of Benjamin Cram, to be embodied into a church state in the third parish of this town.

Attest, Ward Cotton, pastor.

The several members having been dismissed from their respective churches requested some of the neighboring ministers to join with them in keeping a day of fasting and prayer, to organize them into a church state in this place. Accordingly, October 6th, the following gentlemen assisted in the meeting: the Rev. Ward Cotton, of Hampton, began with prayer; the Rev. John Odlin, of Exeter, preached from Isaiah lvi. 6: "And taketh hold of my covenant." The Rev. Joseph Whipple, of Hampton Falls, then propounded to those to be organized the church covenant.

November 23d. Mr. Fogg was ordained. The Rev. Joseph Whipple, of Hampton Falls, preached the sermon, while the neighboring churches were doubtless well represented by the ministers and deacons as witnesses and delegates.

The Rev. Jeremiah Fogg, the son of Seth and Sarah (Shaw) Fogg, was born in Hampton, May 29, 1712; graduated at Harvard College in 1713; studied theology with the Rev. Joseph Whipple, of Hampton Falls; preached in Kensington more than fifty-two years. He solemnized four hundred and two marriages, and baptized twelve hundred and thirty-five persons.

In the latter part of his ministry complaints were made against the soundness of his doctrines. The Congregationalist ministers in his time were divided into Calvinists and Arminians, and he was ranked with the latter class. The Arminians gradually departed from the Calvinistic system, and forbore to urge its tenets. They omitted to press the Athanasian creed, or to use the Trinitarian doxology, but preferred Scripture expressions on these disputed points. They did not insist as a preliminary to the ordination of a young man to the Christian ministry on his professing a belief in the Trinity, or of the five points of Calvinism. "The Rev. Jeremiah Fogg," says Bradford, "was ranked with the Arminians,—with the Rev. Drs. Samuel Webster, of Salisbury, Thomas Barnard, of Salem, John Tucker, of Newbury, William Symmes, of Andover, Henry Cummings, of Billerica, and the Rev. Messrs. Edward Barnard, of Haverhill, Thomas Carey, of Newburyport, Ebenezer Thayer, of Hampton, and William Balch, of Bradford. There had been some opposition to his doctrines for some years, and a council met Jan. 20, 1789, which did not result in his dismissal. The second council met at the house of Newell Healey, July 7, 1789, and advised the Rev. Mr. Fogg to leave the ministry.

Of this council the Rev. Samuel McClintock, D.D., of Greenland, was moderator; Rev. Joseph Dana, of Newburyport, scribe; S. Marsh, Esq., assistant scribe.

Mr. Fogg did not appear before the council, but a remonstrance was offered in behalf of the church, signed by Caleb Shaw, John Lane, Winthrop Rowe, Dea. Paye, and E. Potter.

Sept. 21, 1789. The parish, by a vote of fifty-three to fifty, voted to dismiss Mr. Fogg.

Nov. 2, 1789. The parish voted to give the Rev. Jeremiah Fogg the sum of fifteen pounds, and to deliver him at his house five cords of good hard wood during his natural life, while he gave up his ministerial and pastoral relation to the town and the church. Within a month after this transaction he died after a short sickness, Dec. 1, 1789, aged about seventy-eight.

He was known in the vicinity as an effective and popular preacher, while for years his friends remembered him with great interest and respect. He was distinguished for his wit and humor, and used expressions which were too strong and startling for the more serious-minded of his people. Once, when dining with some clerical friends, he found the pudding too hot, and put a small piece in his pocket. Some one said, "What! pocketing pudding, Brother Fogg?" He replied, "Oh, I thought I would save a piece till after dinner to light my pipe!"

The council that dismissed him charged him with saying that "No man has a right to believe anything in religion which he cannot fully comprehend." The sentiments contained in this article we conceive to be unjust, for every dictate of reason and Revelation teaches us the existence of the Deity, but who can fully comprehend him? Some conceive the doctrine of the trinity to be a clear doctrine of Revelation, yet no man pretends fully to comprehend it.—Report of Ecclesiastical Council.

From a letter which he wrote to the council held in January we may form some idea of Mr. Fogg and of the nature of the controversy. He says, "Reason, that divine mark of distinction in human nature, was given us by the same Being who gave us the Scriptures, and I have ever made it my practice to exercise it in reconciling the more difficult passages in the sacred writings; and whenever I find gentlemen of education and abilities, I find an inclination as well as a duty to converse freely on subjects of controversy, that all may be the better established in ye religion of Christ."

From what we can learn from the old records and from verbal traditions, especially from those who lived at the time of the controversy, we must conclude that personal prejudices and passions, as well as doctrinal differences, contributed to the removal of the minister who for more than fifty years had the love, confidence, and respect of the best families in the parish.

After the death of Mr. Fogg the parish heard several candidates, of whom Mr. Jonathan Osgood and Mr. Peter Coffin were invited to settle, but both declined.

November, 1792, Mr. Naphtali Shaw was invited to become the minister of the parish. Mr. Shaw was ordained Jan. 30, 1793, and after a ministry of nearly twenty years was dismissed April 20, 1812.

Rev. Naphtali Shaw was born in Bridgewater, Mass., June 20, 1764. He worked at shoemaking until he was twenty-one, graduated at Dartmouth College in 1790, married the daughter of Dr. Craft, and died in Bradford, Vt., at the age of ninety.

After leaving Kensington, he became a farmer in Bradford, Vt. On his visit to Kensington he refused to preach, but seemed glad to meet his former friends, who regarded him with great interest and respect. His letter of resignation was written in an excellent spirit, and manifests the wisdom and goodness of his life. From what we can learn of his character, it seems evident that his removal was a great loss to the town. Since he left, the loss of a good pastor, who had the love, confidence, and esteem of all the families in the parish, has been sadly felt.

June 13, 1813, Rev. Nathaniel Kennedy was installed in Kensington. He was dismissed July 1, 1816.

Rev. Nathaniel Kennedy was a native of Ireland, educated in Glasgow, Scotland; was ordained in Litchfield, Conn.; was installed in Litchfield, N. H., April 12, 1809. He resided in Philadelphia as a teacher, where he died in 1843-44. From what we can learn the people were not well united in his ministry, and had not perfect confidence in his character.

In April, 1822, Joseph Augustus Long was ordained as an evangelist in Kensington, but preached only a year. Mr. Long was the son of Nathan Long, of Amesbury, Mass., graduated at Harvard College in 1818, graduated at the Cambridge Divinity School, was settled in Hookset, N. H., where he died.

For a number of years Kensington had no settled minister, though quite a number supplied the pulpit a part of the year. Rev. Mr. Barrett, Rev. Mr. Whiting, Rev. Peter Holt, Rev. Hosea Hildreth, Rev. Moses Downs, Rev. Stephen Farley and others may be remembered.

Dec. 22, 1841, the Rev. Jacob Caldwell was ordained in Kensington over the Unitarian Societies in Kensington and Hampton Falls. The Rev. Andrew P. Peabody, of Portsmouth, preached the sermon. During Mr. Caldwell's ministry the parish was in excellent condition.

The Rev. Jacob Caldwell was born in Lunenburg, Mass., graduated at Harvard College in 1828, studied theology in the Cambridge Divinity School, taught the academy in Farmingham, Mass., preached in Calais and Standish, Me., and now resides in Newton, Mass. Professor George Caldwell, in the Department of Chemistry in Cornell University, is his only son.

Rev. Increase Sumner Lincoln was born in Warren, Mass., and graduated at Yale College, was installed at Hampton Falls over the churches in Kensington and Hampton Falls in 1848. The Rev. Thomas T. Stone, of Salem, preached the sermon of installation. Mr. Lincoln resided in Kensington, and resigned in 1851. Since then he has preached in Rowe, Mass., Warnick, Mass., and other places, and of late years in Wilton, N. H., where he now resides, at the age of eighty-three.

The Rev. A. M. Bridge succeeded Mr. Lincoln in 1851, but resided in Hampton Falls. Mr. Bridge was born in Lancaster, Mass., studied theology at the Cambridge Divinity School, was ordained in Norton, Mass., was settled in Standish, Me., and Bernardston, Mass., and died in Marshfield, Mass., very much lamented, in December, 1865, but was buried in Hampton Falls, beside the Rev. Samuel Langdon, D.D.

The Universalists.—For many years the Universalists have had occasional preaching in town, and quite a number of people have professed to belong to that denomination. In 1864 the Rev. Rowland Connor, who was born in Brooklyn, N. Y., and educated at the Theological Seminary in Canton, N. Y., was ordained over the Universalist Societies of Kensington and Kingston. Mr. Connor was settled over the Universalist Church in Concord, N. H., and as a colleague to the Rev. Dr. Miner, in Boston. He is now preaching in East Saginaw, Mich. He was a very popular preacher, and interested the people out as well as in the pulpit.

The Rev. Willis Bradley, of Brewster, Mass., was installed in Kensington, Mass., in 1866, over the Universalist Societies in Kensington and Kingston, but after remaining a year removed to Ayer's village, Haverhill, Mass., and is now in Brewster, Mass.

Since the removal of Mr. Willis the society has had different preachers, among whom the Rev. Lemuel Willis, of Warner, and the Rev. Willard Spaulding, of Peabody, Mass., are remembered with great interest and respect.

The First Congregational Church was formed in May, 1859. After hearing various preachers, the Rev. George Campbell, of Bradford, Mass., was employed for a year or two. Mr. Campbell was a graduate of Union College, and a classmate of the Hon. W. H. Seward, and was a gentleman of superior culture and ability, and highly esteemed by his friends. He died in Bradford, Mass.

In 1862 the Rev. E. D. Eldredge, of Alton, N. H., took charge of the church, but was not installed until June 30, 1864. He was dismissed in January, 1875, and died in Georgia, April 18, 1876. He and his wife are buried in Hampton, N. H.

Rev. Erasmus Darwin Eldredge, the son of Dr. Micah and Sally (Buttrick) Eldredge, was born in Dunstable, Mass., March 10, 1804, graduated at the Andover Theological Seminary, taught in Pepperell, Mass., and Pembroke, N. H., was ordained in Hampton, N. H., April 4, 1838, and dismissed May 7, 1848, installed at Salisbury, N. H., June 12, 1848, and dismissed Nov. 1, 1854. From Salisbury he went to Georgia, and taught and preached in Monticello and Milledgeville. He was installed in Alton, N. H., Jan. 4, 1861, and removed to Kensington in 1862, where he preached about thirteen years. He easily gained the sympathy, confidence, and love of the people, and to an eminent degree that wonderful apostolic gift of being all things to all men. He married Isabella Hill, of Portsmouth, N. H., by whom he had one daughter and two sons. Mary, his daughter, married the Rev. Dr. Lane, of Georgia, who was a chaplain in the Confederate army. Though born in Hampton, her sympathies were with the South, more especially as Sherman's soldiers, on their "march to the sea," fed bountifully on her chickens. His son, the Rev. Henry E. Eldredge, was born in Hampton, graduated at Amherst College, studied theology at Hartford, Conn., ordained in Becket, Mass., settled in Weymouth, Mass., Blood Brook, at South Deerfield, Mass., Turner's Falls, Mass., where he now resides. His youngest son, Frederic E. Eldredge, was born in Salisbury, N. H., graduated at the New Hampshire Agricultural College in Hanover, has taught school several years in New England, and is now a teacher in Washington Territory.

The Christian Baptists.—Elder Elijah Shaw, the son of Elijah and Deborah (Nudd) Shaw, was born in Kensington, Dec. 19, 1793, was ordained in Kensington, March 31, 1814, and died in Fall River, Mass., May 5, 1851. Portland, Me., Franklin, N. H., Exeter, N. H. (where he edited the Christian Herald), and Fall River, Mass., and many other places in New England, New York, and the West, were the fields in which he labored in the ministry. He regretted that he had not the advantages of early education, yet by reading, traveling, and visiting he must have gained much knowledge of the world and of human nature which was valuable to him as an editor and a preacher. He used to say, "I never feel satisfied to leave the people of my congregation just where I found them, for I want evidence that an impression of good is made on their minds." He had the confidence and sympathy of the Christian denomination, and will long be remembered by a large circle of friends as a true, faithful, and earnest man.

Elder Julius C. Blodgett, the son of Edward Blodgett, was born in Franklin, N. H., Sept. 6, 1806, was ordained in Sanborton, N. H., June 29, 1831. He preached in Newton, Franklin, Exeter, Kensington, and other places, and at one time was one of the editors of the Christian Herald. He spoke with great energy and force, and was quite an effective preacher. He preached about fifty years, and died in Kensington, Nov. 26, 1878, aged seventy-two. He had excellent colloquial powers, a taste for literary studies, and was interested in the education of his children.

Elder Daniel Prescott Pike, the son of Sewell and Mary (Prescott) Pike, was born in Hampton Falls, March 1, 1815, but moved to Kensington when he was about a year old. He was educated at Phillips' Academy in Exeter, taught school several years, and was ordained in the Christian Chapel at Hampton Falls, July 5, 1837. After preaching in various places he moved to Newburyport, where for many years he has been distinguished as an earnest and popular preacher. At one after a revival he baptized ninety-five persons in the Merrimac. He was editor of the Christian Herald for years, a member of Gen. Gardner's Council, and deputy collector in the custom-house. As a bold and earnest reformer he has done much to restore the vicious and intemperate to sobriety and virtue.

The Rev. F. D. Chandler moved to Kensington in 1875, and was installed over the church March 9, 1876, and dismissed May 28, 1889. Mr. Chandler was a native of Vermont, was educated at the Methodist Theological School in Concord, N. H.; preached in various Methodist Churches; joined the Congregationalists; was settled over the Congregationalist Church in Hampton. From Kensington he went to Alton, and from Alton he removed to the West. He was a very active and earnest man, and tried very hard to build up the church.

The Rev. Philip Titcomb was born in Newburyport, Mass., graduated at Yale College, studied theology in Andover, has preached in Cherryfield, Me., Kennebunkport, Me., in the West, and at Plympton, Mass., came to Kensington, where he now resides.

Elder David Murray, the son of David Murray, was born in Newmarket, N. H., and ordained in the Christian Chapel at Kensington, Sept. 17, 1867. After preaching a year or two he left and preached in Northampton and other places, and now resides in Manchester, N. H.

Since the removal of Elder Murray there has been no settled minister in the Christian Church, though meetings have been held for a part of the year or occasionally.

Quakers.—There were quite a number of families of Quakers in the town who belonged to the meeting in Seabrook, though we do not learn that they often held meetings in Kensington, or that any one of their number was an approved minister. In 1761 the parish voted that the third selectman should be a Quaker, and for many years Jonathan Purington held that office. In 1776 the Quakers refused to sign the test act, but most probably not because they were loyalists, but because their ideas of the Christian religion would not permit them to bear arms. Some people doubtless joined the Quakers, as that was the only way by which they could avoid paying parish rates. Elihu Chase, who gave the land for the meeting-house and graveyard, was disappointed because he could not have a desirable pew, and joined the Quakers, though he was friendly to Mr. Fogg, and made him presents after he had left the meeting. Some doubtless were the descendants of families who had lived and suffered in the persecutions of Quakers in this country and England, and from the journals of the early Friends, and from the ministers who visited their meetings and their homes, learned the principles and the spirit of their religion. While the plain dress and the plain language of the Quakers may not often be found among us, yet their principles are seen not only in their descendants, but among people of other denominations. The spirit of truth and righteousness, of order and temperance, of simplicity and beauty, of kindness and love, which inspired the lives of the early Friends, has not lost its influence on society.

The first meeting-house was built on the west side of the brook, near Charles E. Tuck's, but was taken down and removed to some place nearer the centre of the town. The land for the meeting-house was given by Elihu Chase, but as a pew was not reserved for him he left the parish and joined the Friends. May 12, 1771, being the last Sunday in the meeting-house, the Rev. Jeremiah Fogg preached, the CXXVI Psalm, "We wept when we remembered Zion."

The second meeting-house was built in 1771, on the same spot. Ezekiel Worthen, Jonathan Brown, Moses Shaw, and Ebenezer Lovering were the building committee. The plan was made by Ezekiel Worthen. This house was taken down Saturday, March 28, 1846. The present town-house, which was built from its timbers, was placed on the same spot in August, 1846.

The first Christian (Baptist) meeting-house was a plain, unpainted structure, without pews or pulpit, and is now the dwelling-house of Jeremiah Dow.

The Second Christian (Baptist) meeting-house was built on the place of the first in 1838. Elder David Millard, one of the most distinguished ministers of the denomination, preached the dedication sermon.

The Union meeting-house was built in 1839, on the old meeting-house lot, by the Unitarians, Universalists, and Congregationalists. It was dedicated in the morning by the Unitarians, when the Rev. Andrew P. Peabody, of Portsmouth, preached the sermon. In the afternoon it was dedicated by the Universalists, when the Rev. Mr. Bacon, of Providence, preached the sermon. The bell was given by Asa Gove and Emory Brown.

The Congregational Church was built on a lot to the north of the town-house in 1865, and dedicated March 28, 1866. The Rev. E. D. Eldredge preached the sermon. The bell was given by John Locke, of New York. He came to Kensington in 1822, where he died Aug. 10, 1845, aged sixty-three. He married Elizabeth Fogg, and had two daughters and three sons. He was interested in agriculture and moral reforms, and in literary studies. The only work which he left in print was an oration, delivered July 4, 1810, in the Rocky Hill Church, at Salisbury, Mass.

Physicians—Military, Etc.

Physicians.—Dr. Benjamin Rowe, the son of Robert Rowe, was born Oct. 3, 1719, and died March 28, 1790. He died of the dropsy, was tapped sixty-seven times, and two thousand three hundred and eighty-five pounds of water were drawn from his body.

Dr. Benjamin Rowe, the son of Dr. Benjamin Rowe, was baptized July 22, 1750, and died on Nov. 7, 1818. He was an assistant surgeon in the army.

Dr. Jabez Dow, the son of Nathan and Elizabeth (Bachelier) Dow, was born Jan. 24, 1776. He moved to Dover, N. H., where he died Jan. 9, 1839.

Dr. Jonathan French, a native of East Kingston, was a physician in Kensington a few years.

Dr. Jeremiah Dow, the son of Benjamin Dow, graduated at the Medical School in Hanover in 1825, practiced a short time in Kensington, and removed to Hiram, Me., where he died.

Dr. Jonathan Brown, the son of Abel and Sarah (Page) Brown, was born in Kensington, July 12, 1805, graduated at the Medical School in Hanover in 1828, was a teacher in Virginia, was a physician in Greenland, St. Domingo.

Dr. Cyrus Dearborn, a native of Chester, was a physician in Kensington a few years, and removed to East Salisbury, Mass., where he died.

Dr. Jonathan Bailly was a physician in Kensington a few years, but removed to East Kingston, where he died.

Dr. Joseph Otis Osgood, the son of Dr. George and Elizabeth (Otis) Osgood, of Andover, Mass., was born in Fairhaven, Mass., Dec. 23, 1782; graduated at Harvard College in 1804; was a teacher in Milton, Mass., and Gorham, Me.; commenced the study of theology with the Rev. Jesse Appleton, D.D., of Hampton; studied medicine with his father and with Dr. Miller, of Franklin, Mass.; was a member of the Massachusetts Medical Society; practiced in Amesbury, Haverhill, Boston, Mass., North Carolina, Windham; came to Kensington, where he died Feb. 10, 1864, aged fifty-nine. He married Elizabeth Boardman, and left two sons. He gave the oration at a celebration on July 4th in Kensington, gave lectures in other places, and wrote a history of St. Domingo, a work in two volumes, which was highly commended.

Dr. Jacob Williams came from Groton, Mass., and spent a few years in Kensington, where he died.

Education.—Schools were sustained in different parts of the town, and for a number of years a Centre school was placed near the church. In 1779 this Centre school was removed, and since that time the schools have been placed in other localities. At present the school-houses are well built, well furnished, and are highly creditable to the town. Before the Revolution the Centre school was taught by men of superior education. The Hon. William Parker, of Portsmouth, who graduated at Harvard College in 1762, was a teacher here. He afterwards was a lawyer in East Kingston and Exeter, and for many years was register of probate for Rockingham County. Ebenezer Potter, a native of Ipswich, Mass., who graduated at Harvard College in 1766, taught school here several years, and held a number of prominent offices in the town, where he died. Nathan Dow, a gentleman of education and ability, was for many years a teacher. Joseph Chase Hilliard was a well-known teacher in this and other towns in this vicinity; died March 29, 1853, aged sixty-five years.

The Hon. James W. Patterson, superintendent of schools in New Hampshire, gave a favorable report of education here. Within a few years our young women have been interested in education, and after leaving our schools passed a few years in higher instructions of learning. Mrs. R. Akerman, who has taught with great success in various places, and written school exercises which have been highly commended by the leaders of education, well deserves to be noticed. Sarah Abby Green and Ellen M. Smith graduated at the Normal School in Salem. Susan L.

Brown, Elizabeth Hilliard, Sarah Hilliard, Clara L. Rowe, Susan S. Chase, and Agnes Badger graduated at the Putnam School in Newburyport, Mass. Clara Kimball, Emma Blodgett, Ellen M. Smith, Clara E. Kimball, and Livvie S. Titecomb graduated at the Robinson Female Seminary in Exeter. Other young men and women have for shorter terms sought the advantages of education in the higher schools in this vicinity.

LIST OF GRADUATES.—In 1760, Kensington sent two young men to Harvard College. Rev. Timothy Hilliard, the son of Deacon Joseph Chase and Huldah (Moulton) Hilliard, was born Feb. 17, 1746; graduated at Harvard College in 1764; was ordained in Barnstable, Mass.; was settled over the First Church in Cambridge, Mass., where he died July, 1790.

Rev. Daniel Fogg, the son of Daniel and Anna (Elkins) Fogg, was born in Rye, Aug. 7, 1743; resided with his uncle, the Rev. J. Fogg, in Kensington; was graduated at Harvard College in 1764; went to England and was ordained as an Episcopal minister (as at that time there was no bishop in this country); was settled over Trinity Church, in Pomfret Town, in April, 1772; married Deborah Brinley; died June 29, 1815, in the seventy-second year of his age, and the forty-third of his rectorship.

Jeremiah Fogg, the son of the Rev. Jeremiah and Elizabeth (Parsons) Fogg, was born Oct. 16, 1749; graduated at Harvard College, 1768, and died May 26, 1808, aged fifty-nine. (See military history.)

William Fogg, the son of Rev. Jeremiah and Elizabeth (Parsons) Fogg, was born April 30, 1755; graduated at Harvard College in 1774; was teacher in Fredericksburg, Va., and other places, and died, unmarried, Aug. 17, 1807, aged fifty-three.

Nathaniel Healey, the son of Nathaniel and Susanna (Weare) Healey, was born in Kensington; graduated at Harvard College in 1777, and died in Hollowell, Me., in 1828. He was engaged in trade, and is said to have lost his property in making a canal from the Hampton to the Merrimac River.

Rev. Joseph Warren Dow, the son of Joseph Dow, was born April 8, 1779, graduated at Harvard College, 1805, and was settled in Farmingham, Mass.

Timothy, the son of Joseph and Anna (Lovering) Hilliard, was baptized Feb. 26, 1786, graduated at Harvard College in 1809, was ordained in Sudbury, Mass., studied medicine, taught school, and died in Lee, N. H., in 1847. Dr. William Osgood, the son of Dr. Joseph Otis and Elizabeth (Fogg) Osgood, was born in Kensington, March 10, 1823, graduated at Harvard College, 1850, taught the academy in Belfast, Me., graduated from Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, in 1855, settled in Boston as a physician in 1855, where he has since resided. He is a member of the Massachusetts Medical Society.

Abraham Hilliard, the son of Joseph and Anna (Lovering) Hilliard, was born June 14, 1778, graduated at Dartmouth College in 1800, studied law in Dover, resided at Cambridge, Mass., as a lawyer and as register of probate, and died, unmarried, in 1855, aged seventy-six.

Rev. Amos Brown, LL.D. (Hobart Free College, 1858), the son of Stephen and Susan (Bagley) Brown, was born March 11, 1804, graduated at Dartmouth College in 1832, studied theology at the Andover Theological Seminary, was for many years principal of the academy in Gorham, Me., was ordained in 1848 at Machias, Me., where he resided a few years, and in 1852 went to Central New York. He died in Havanna, N. Y., Aug. 17, 1874. He made bequests to the church in Kensington, and also for a library and school, but the funds are not yet available.

Ebenezer Franklin Tuck, the son of Samuel and Martha (Fogg) Tuck, was born Feb. 16, 1822, graduated at Dartmouth College in 1843, studied law with Bell & Tuck, in Exeter, and at the Harvard Law School, settled in Exeter, where he died May 30, 1857, aged thirty-five.

Edward Prentice Tuck, the son of Samuel and Martha (Fogg) Tuck, was born Aug. 30, 1825, educated at Harvard College in the class of 1846, studied law, has been civil engineer, mechanic, teacher, hotel-keeper, and editor. On June 10, 1861, he joined the Second North Carolina Cavalry, in the Confederate army. After various battles he was taken prisoner by the Union troops, and on Oct. 23, 1863, took the oath of allegiance to the United States. He was in the Army of the Cumberland under Gen. George H. Thomas, at the siege of Nashville. He has resided in Ohio, Missouri, North Carolina, and now resides in Williamsburg County, S. C.

Dr. Henry Tuck, the son of Jonathan and Dorothy (Webster) Tuck, was born Feb. 16, 1808, studied medicine with Dr. George Hayward, of Boston, graduated at the Harvard Medical School in 1834, settled in Barnstable, Mass., in 1834, joined the Massachusetts Medical Society in 1837, and died on a visit at Kensington, June 24, 1845. He was buried in Barnstable.

Rev. Jeremy Webster Tuck, the son of Jonathan and Dorothy (Webster) Tuck, was born Oct. 8, 1811, graduated at Amherst College in 1840, studied theology at the Theological Seminary in Andover and at the Theological Institute in East Windsor, Conn., was ordained in Ludlow, Mass., Sept. 6, 1843. He has preached in Thorndike, Mass., Jewett City, and Middletown, Conn. He now resides in Middletown. His centennial address at Ludlow and several of his sermons have been printed, and he has also contributed many articles to the newspapers.

Rev. Joseph Osgood, the son of Dr. Joseph Otis and Elizabeth (Fogg) Osgood, was born Sept. 23, 1815 (the day of the great September gale), graduated at the Cambridge Divinity School in 1842, was ordained in Cohasset, Mass., October, 1842, where he has resided more than forty years. He is interested in education, and for several years has been the superintendent of the schools in Cohasset.

George Osgood, the son of Dr. Joseph Otis and Elizabeth (Fogg) Osgood, was born Oct. 8, 1817, graduated at the Divinity School in Cambridge in 1847, was ordained in Standish, Me., Dec. 22, 1853, was settled several years in Tyngsborough, Mass., has preached in Eastport, Me., Windsor, Vt., Montague, Mass., and Lancaster, N. H., and now resides in Kensington. He occasionally writes for the press, and at one time was the editor of the Exeter News-Letter.

Rev. Ezra Baily Chase, the son of Ezra B. and Betsey (Clarke) Chase, was born Oct. 15, 1847, graduated at Marietta College, Ohio, 1873, and at the Divinity School in New Haven, Conn., in 1876, was ordained in Courtland, Ohio, June 20, 1876, and is now settled in the ministry in West Bloomfield, Ohio.

Rev. Jonathan G. Brown, the son of Stephen and Susan Bayley Brown, was born July 13, 1818, was ordained as a Christian Baptist minister, and preached in Salisbury, Mass., New Bedford, Dartmouth, Mass. He joined the Calvinistic Baptist denomination, and has preached in Peterboro' and Hopkinton, N. H., Millbury, Mass., and other places, and now resides in Western New York.

Dr. Moses Brown (the twin-brother of Rev. J. E. Brown), the son of Stephen and Susan (Bayley) Brown, was born July 13, 1818, studied medicine with Dr. Dearborn, practiced as a physician in East Kingston, N. H., New Bedford, Mass., Newburyport, Mass., and other places, and now resides in Vineyard Haven, Mass.

Dr. John Angell Blodgett, the son of Elder J. C. and Abigail (Shaw) Blodgett, was born Aug. 20, 1855, educated at Phillips' Academy in Exeter, graduated at the Medical College in Detroit, Mich., in 1880, and died just as he had completed his medical studies, Feb. 20, 1880, in Detroit, sincerely lamented by his classmates and by a large circle of friends.

Dr. Daniel Fogg, the son of the Rev. Jeremiah and Elizabeth (Parsons) Fogg, was born April 6, 1759, was a physician in Braintree, Mass., where he died April 23, 1830, aged seventy-one.

Dr. John Fogg, the son of Rev. Jeremiah and Elizabeth (Parsons) Fogg, was born Feb. 26, 1764, was a physician in Northampton, where he died March 5, 1816, aged fifty-two.

Jeremiah Parsons Fogg, the son of Maj. Jeremiah and Lydia Hill Fogg, was born May 19, 1788, was educated at Phillips' Academy in Exeter, was a lawyer in Steubenville, Ohio, and died in Louisville, Ky.

Dr. John Dow, the son of Capt. Benjamin Dow, was born Aug. 23, 1796; studied medicine with his uncle, Dr. Jabez Dow, of Dover, practiced in Sanford, Me., Pittston, Me., and Boston, Mass., and died in Boston, March, 1871.

Currency.—When the Rev. J. Fogg was settled and during his ministry the currency of the country varied very much in value. In 1760 his salary was fifteen hundred pounds. In 1782, John Green bid off the building of the pound for forty-seven Spanish milled dollars. Deacon Jeremiah Fellows paid fifteen hundred dollars for an anvil which was worth only fifteen dollars in silver. In 1781 a committee was chosen to hire soldiers with either provisions, hard money, or paper currency. In 1786, when it was found to be very difficult to hire a collector of taxes, Maj. Fogg, who had been absent, came into the town-meeting and said that he would give something for the office, and paid one pound and ten shillings, and thus by his superior intelligence and forecast made an excellent investment. In the war of the Rebellion, when gold commanded the highest premium, intelligent and sagacious financiers and statesmen looked with confidence to the time of specie payments, when the credit of the country should be fully restored.

Slaves.—When Parson Fogg, July 17, 1739, was married to Elizabeth, the daughter of the Rev. Joseph Parsons, of Salisbury, he brought his wife on a pillion behind him to the new manse. Deacon Abraham Moulton carried behind him Phyllis Parsons, a small black girl, who was her slave. Phyllis was bright and intelligent, and as she grew up was engaged to William Mingo, a colored soldier who died on the frontier. After his death she was engaged to his brother, Eben Mingo, but refused to be married until she should be free, for she declared that "she would never bring a slave into the world." Phyllis then went to Salisbury, in the province of Massachusetts, and lived a year and a day (probably keeping dark), when the selectmen came and warned her out of town, lest she should become a public charge. Then she made a polite courtesy and said, "Gentlemen, you are one day too late;" for by the laws of the time she had not only gained her freedom but also her residence. She taught school among the white people, saying very proudly, "It is no small thing to be brought in a minister's family." She married, had a large family of children, some of whom were quite intelligent and respectable. Primus was a slave of Madame Parsons, and lived in Parson Fogg's family.

He was a native African, and said that after he had stolen and sold a good many negroes he was stolen and sold himself. He sat on the pulpit stairs in the church, used broken language, and seemed interested in his master's family. When he was sent to mill with two bags of corn he would place one on the horse, take the other on his shoulder, mount, and think in his simplicity that he had helped the dumb animal. His master told him to tie the horse in a good place, and he tied him where the feed was very short. When reproved he said, "You say nearer de bone de sweeter de meat, so de nearer de groun' de sweeter de grass." He helped his master set out two elms in front of the house, which became large and beautiful trees. He lived to be about a hundred, and is mentioned in the family traditions as a simple, good-natured old man. He had a superstitious fear that after death he would be obliged to return to Africa, and one day when he felt sick and troubled Madame Parsons told him he would go to his old master. He then got on his hands and knees, said the Lord's Prayer, and died contented and happy.

Jude Hall was a slave in Capt. Philemon Blake's family. He was a very large man, and anecdotes are told of his great strength. He was a soldier in the Revolution, and in one battle stood behind a tree and escaped unhurt. He said that he cut the tree down the next day and obtained a basinful of bullets. The town voted to make Jude Hall a gratuity as a soldier of Kensington. He lived on the borders of Exeter, had a large family, and is well remembered by the older people.

One Sunday morning, as he found a man washing out his cider-barrels at the brook, the man, who seemed ashamed of his Sabbath-breaking, said that he looked every way to see if any one was coming, when Jude replied with his characteristic shrewdness, "Brother, did you look above?"

Population.—The present population of Kensington is a little more than 600. The number of children is much less than in early times, though there are about as many families. In 1767 there were 755 inhabitants; in 1779 there were 797 inhabitants; in 1786 there were 798 inhabitants; in 1790 there were 800 inhabitants.

In 1775 the town chose John Dow, Nathaniel Haley, Benjamin Rowe, Ezekiel Worthen, and Ebenezer Potter to meet in Exeter to choose delegates to the General Congress in Philadelphia.

April 21, 1775 (two days after the battle of Lexington), the town chose Ezekiel Worthen and Ebenezer Potter as a committee to join the Provincial Committee of Public Safety at Exeter.

In 1778, Ezekiel Worthen was chosen representative to the convention in Concord.

In 1783, Joseph Brown was chosen delegate to the convention in Concord.

In 1788, Jeremiah Fogg was chosen delegate to the convention in Exeter to consider the Federal Constitution.

In 1791, Jeremiah Fogg was chosen delegate to the Constitutional Convention in Concord.

In 1850, Jeremiah Bachelder was chosen delegate to the Constitutional Convention in Concord.

In 1878, Jonathan E. Brown was chosen delegate to the Constitutional Convention in Concord.

Senators.—1796, Jeremiah Fogg; 1821, Newell Healey; 1835-36, Smith Lamprey.

Representatives.—Ezekiel Worthen was the first representative, and probably held the office from 1762 until 1771; Ezekiel Worthen, 1774-76, 1779; Benjamin Rowe, 1772-73; Nathaniel Healey, 1775; Ebenezer Potter, 1777-78, 1780-81; Moses Shaw, Jr., 1782-86; no choice, 1787-90; Jeremiah Fogg, 1791-94, 1795 (unanimously in 1795); none in 1792; Enoch Worthen, 1796-99, 1801-5, 1813-17; Joseph Brown, 1798, 1800, 1808-9; none, 1805-6; Samuel Dearborn, 1810-11; Newell Healey, 1812-19, 1824-25; Robert Prescott, 1818-21; Jeremy Bachelder, 1826-28; Smith Lamprey, 1829-33; none, 1823, 1831, 1844, 1848, 1851-53, 1855-56, 1873-74; Josiah Prescott, 1835-36; Benjamin Moulton, 1837-38; John T. Blake, 1839-41; Lewis Grove, 1842; John Nudd, 1843; Ira Blake, 1845-46; Julius C. Blodgett, 1847; Abel Brown, 1849, 1854; Jeremiah Poor, 1850; Stephen Brown, 1857, 1863; Joseph Brown, 1858; Newell Dow, 1859; Jonathan Palmer, 1860; Daniel Prescott, 1861-62; Daniel G. York, 1864, 1868, 1876; John A. Blake, 1865-66; Henry C. Tuck, 1867, 1870; Edward Brewer, 1871; John G. Dow, 1872; Weare N. Shaw, 1875; Daniel E. Palmer, 1877; George Page, 1878; Francis Billiard, 1879-80; Lewis B. Tilton, 1881-82.

Military History.—While Kensington was a part of Hampton, some of its inhabitants were in scouting-parties or in building forts on the frontier. Jonathan Prescott, who was born in 1675, labored at Crown Point in 1696, and was in a scouting-party under Capt. John Gilman in 1710. John Prescott was in a scouting-party in 1707 and in 1710. Nathaniel Prescott was in his Majesty's service in 1707. Doubtless many others were engaged in defending the early settlements from the attacks of the French and Indians, or in ranging the borders, though we may not find the records of their deeds.

May 2, 1747, it was voted at the parish-meeting "that all those men who went to Cape Breton and stayed all winter should be quit from paying rates for their heads that year in the Parish."

In the seven years' war with the French and Indians the soldiers of Kensington took an active part. In 1755, Samuel Prescott, who was born June 26, 1729, was lieutenant-colonel in Col. Peter Gilman's regiment, that was raised to reinforce the army near Lake George. He died Nov. 29, 1797. Capt. Ezekiel Worthen, Moses Blake, Ebenezer Lovering, Isaac Fellows, Melcher Ward, Paine Blake, Israel James, David James, Nathan Dow, Joseph Weare, and doubtless many others were engaged in these frontier campaigns.

Capt. Ezekiel Worthen, who was born March 18, 1710, was one of the most prominent men in the history of the town. At the siege of Louisburg he was ensign and lieutenant in Capt. Jonathan Prescott's company, and is said to have done good service as an engineer, building works against the enemy, probably the battery on Light-house Cliff. Louisburg was taken June 17, 1745, just thirty years before the battle of Bunker Hill.

Capt. Ezekiel Worthen commanded a company in Col. Meserve's regiment in 1756. When Fort William Henry was taken he is said to have been one of the few who escaped in the dreadful scenes of the massacre. Taking a small gun, while the attention of the savages was turned away, he ran down a steep hill through the woods, and concealed himself under some bark that was piled against a log. The Indians passed over the log without finding the fugitive, while he, after various privations and hardships, reached his friends in an almost famished condition. The gun (which was known in the family as the Indian gun) was presented by Warren James, of Deerfield, a few years since, to the Bunker Hill Association. Capt. Ezekiel Worthen was the first representative to the General Court from Kensington, and was for several years returned to that body. In 1775 he was the engineer in building Fort Washington and Fort Sullivan at the Narrows, about a mile below Portsmouth; and about the same time was selected to build a bridge to Newcastle. In the Continental army he was lieutenant, captain, and paymaster, while in civil life he held places of honor and trust. After serving in three wars, after honorable service in civil life, at the close of the war that gave independence to the country he died, Oct. 17, 1783, aged seventy-three years. In the years of the Revolution recruits were sent to the regiments in the field; soldiers were sent to man the forts at Portsmouth, and committees were chosen to supply the families of the Continental soldiers.

March 26, 1779, voted to choose a committee to overhaul the charges of the war from Bunker Hill fight to this day.

Voted to enlist twenty men to serve in the Continental army.

July 5, 1779, Capt. Joseph Clifford and Lieut. Joseph Dow were chosen to hire the quota of soldiers to fill the Continental battalions.

Jan. 29, 1781, the parish chose a committee to hire soldiers for the Continental army with provisions, hard money, or paper currency. (See currency.)

The writer regrets that no full list of the soldiers of the Revolution is within his reach, but hopes that the adjutant-general, from the army rolls in Concord, will give a full report of every soldier. The following list has been gathered from various sources: Maj. Jeremiah Fogg, Capt. Ezekiel Worthen, Capt. Winthrop Rowe, Capt. Joseph Clifford, Lieut. Moses Shaw, Lieut. Abram Sanborn, Second Lieut. Jeremiah Bachelder, Benjamin Rowe, surgeon's mate; Daniel Fogg, surgeon's mate; Joseph Fogg, quartermaster; Enoch Rowe, quartermaster's sergeant; Privates Winthrop Wiggin, Jude Hall, William Fogg, Henson Hodgdon, Jonathan Fellows, Nathan Fellows, Edward Lock, John Sanborn, Thomas Cook, Jabez Dow, Jonathan Prescott, Marston Prescott, and Edward Smith, who was shot Oct. 15, 1777.

Capt. Winthrop Rowe commanded a company, Col. Poor's regiment, and Abram Sanborn was his second lieutenant.

In 1775, Capt. Joseph Clifford and Second Lieut. Moses Shaw were stationed on Pierce's Island.

In 1777, Second Lieut. Jeremiah Bachelder was in Col. Drake's regiment. He was one of the most prominent citizens of the town, and in 1796 was colonel in the militia.

In 1777, Capt. Robert Pike was in Lieut.-Col. Senter's battalion. Benjamin Rowe was surgeon's mate in Col. Nichols' regiment in 1778. Daniel Fogg was surgeon's mate. Enoch Rowe was quartermaster's sergeant in Lieut.-Col. Senter's battalion in 1777.

Joseph Fogg, the son of Rev. Jeremiah and Elizabeth (Parsons) Fogg, was born April 16, 1753. He was quartermaster in Col. Poor's regiment in 1775, and quartermaster in Lieut.-Col. Senter's battalion in 1777. He was appointed sub-clothier and commissary in 1779. After the war he moved to Ossipee, where he was a justice of the peace. He returned to Remington, where he died suddenly, April 17, 1822, aged sixty-nine. He married, first, Mary Sherburne; second, Abigail Westwork.

Maj. Jeremiah Fogg, the son of Rev. J. and Elizabeth (Parsons) Fogg, was born Oct. 16, 1749, graduated at Harvard College, 1768, taught school in Newburyport, where he commenced the study of law with Theophilus Parsons, one of the most eminent jurists of the time. He was adjutant of Col. Poor's regiment, which was encamped on Winter Hill at the siege of Boston. In 1776 he was aide-de-camp to Gen. Poor, who died in his arms at Hackensack, N. J. In 1777 he was paymaster in Col. Hale's regiment, and captain in Col. Reid's regiment. In 1781, after the war, he retired to Remington, where he took an active part in the political movements of the time. He was a member of the Constitutional Convention, representative and senator in the General Court, and adjutant-general of New Hampshire. Maj. Fogg, in 1738, married Lydia Hill, of Cambridge. It is said that when a college student he saw her christened, and playfully remarked that he meant to marry her; and though he was then but a youth, and she an infant, yet after a life of adventures, and twenty years after graduation, she became his wife. She was nine years old when she saw Earl Percy's troops as they marched through Cambridge on their way to Lexington, heard the guns at Bunker Hill, and well remembered the exciting scenes of the times; and the young adjutant, while musing by his camp-fire on Winter Hill on the scenes of his student life at Harvard, might have dreamed of the beautiful child that was christened in the village church. As an instance of his coolness and courage, one of his soldiers said that when his command was surrounded by a superior force of the enemy, Maj. Fogg told us "to load our guns, fix our bayonets, and blaze through." He seems to have been a brave and efficient officer, while his journals and letters, though written in the camps of the army, manifest his superior education and ability. He died May 26, 1808, aged fifty-nine.

List of Minute-Men.—We, the subscribers, hereby enlist ourselves, and promise and engage to serve as militia soldiers in defense of our country's rights, to be ready at a minute's warning to march to any part of the New England States to oppose the encroachments of our enemies, and we promise to obey such officers as are appointed to command us during the time we are in the service. Joseph Clifford, Jesse Tucke, Joseph Brown, Jr., Benjamin Moulton, Benjamin James, Jr., Hezekiah Blake, Ephraim Fellows, Jewett Sanborn, Daniel Shaw, Benjamin Tilton, John Shaw, Joseph Wadleigh (4th), Richard Dow, Levi Brown, Samuel Batchelder, Nathaniel Gove, Josiah Batchelder, Richard Sanborn, Samuel Prescott, John Lane, Samuel Lampre, David James, Ephraim Eastman, Nathaniel Sherburne, Caleb Shaw, Jr., Simon Prescott, Jeremiah Moulton, Nathaniel Ward, Jonathan Ward, Edward Melchar, Benjamin Melchar, Abram Shaw, Newell Healey, Benjamin Rowe, Jr., Surgeon Joseph Rowe, Martin Prescott, Caleb Brown, John Glidden, Weare Nudd, Elisha Blake, Jr., Nathaniel Dow, John Graves, Henry Sanborn, Abel Brown, Henry Swain, Levi Blake, Stephen Fogg, Jonathan Tilton, Jonathan Prescott.

(This paper belongs to the opening of, and was probably signed in, 1775.)

The War of 1812-14.—We do not learn that any soldiers from this town were enlisted in the regular army, but in 1814 the militia were ordered to defend Portsmouth from the English, whose fleet was cruising along the coast. The soldiers wore their citizens' dress, and as the company left the old church, the music was so slow and solemn that some one suggested that they have quick and lively tunes, to keep up their courage and the courage of the friends they left behind them. They were stationed near the south rope-walk, and lodged in a school-house. Down a report came that the enemy had landed at York, and the troops were formed in a line of battle, but the alarm was false. An English officer, disguised as a fisherman, visited Portsmouth, but finding the defenses very strong the fleet moved away. The troops were enlisted September 11th, and discharged September 29th.

Lieut.-Col. Thomas Lovering commanded the regiment. Josiah Blake was sergeant-major. Capt. Stephen Brown, Lieut. Stephen Kimball, Ens. Richard Dow; Sergeants, Jonathan Morrison, Benjamin Prescott, Nathan Dow, Caleb Brown; Corporals, Jacob Felch, David Prescott, Sewell Philbrick, Jeremy Batchelders; Musicians, Caleb Hodgdon, Millard Tilton; Privates, John Nudd, Benjamin Moulton, Jr., Jonathan Hobbs, John W. Shaw, Jonathan James, Thomas P. Fogg, Samuel Fellows, Daniel Prescott, Abraham Rowe, David Barter, Edward M. Blaisdell, Caleb F. Sanborn, Samuel Tilton, Ira Fellows, William H. Wadleigh, Ephraim Dow, Jeremiah Wadleigh, Sewell Wadleigh, John Blaisdell, Moses F. King, Joseph W. Healey, Edward True, Jr.

War of the Rebellion.—Kensington sent seventy-one men to the army during the Rebellion, a part of whom were substitutes hired in the place of drafted men. The expenses in Kensington were $19,940.09; average bounty per man was $269.70; average recruiting expenses per man, $1.28. The State aid to the soldiers' families would increase this sum. The following list contains most of the soldiers' names belonging to this town, with the names of some who were natives of the town but enlisted from other places:

Lowell Lock, Porter Rowe, Jonathan Shaw, Theo. M. White, Benjamin Olin, Joseph D. Wadleigh, Lewis Gove, Nathaniel Fellows, William S. Gale, Parker H. Wilson, Joel Lane, Smith Lamprey, Gilman Lamprey, Newell Dow, Wadley Dow, Timothy Palmer, Sewell Dow, Stephen R. Brown, Levi Veasey, Jeremiah Eaton, Willard Davis, Reuben Currier, John Ware, Abel Gove, Samuel Currier, John Page, Samuel Tucker, Jr., Amos Gove, Joseph Rowe, Moses Sanborn, George Day, Bradley Perrier, Oliver James, Samuel Caverly, John Scribner, Henry Eaton.

ARTILLERY.

Lieut. Jonathan Hilliard, Sergeants, Wells Healey, Samuel Tuck.

Shaw (marched with Sherman through Georgia), William Nudd, John V. Hodgdon, George W. Hodgdon.

Much of interest must be omitted for the want of space, and our readers must be referred to the full reports of the adjutant-general, which give not only the names of the soldiers, but very interesting histories of all the regiments. The soldiers and their friends should preserve the diaries, letters, and other papers relating to the war, as they may be valuable for years to come.

Temperance.—There have been several temperance organizations in town, which have been useful in their influence on its moral progress. The early societies for considering the evils of intemperance, the Washingtonian movement, and the Sons of Temperance have all been useful in improving the character of the people. Hoosic Division of Sons of Temperance has had an excellent influence in improving the moral, intellectual, and social life in the place.

JONATHAN TUCK.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

FRANCIS HILLIARD.

The grandfather of the subject of this sketch was Joseph Hilliard, and his grandmother's maiden name was Anna Lovering. One of the children of this couple was Jonathan, who was born in 1783. Jonathan married Mary Hodgdon, daughter of Hanson and Mary (Caldwell) Hodgdon, of Dover, in October, 1810. Mrs. Hodgdon was born in Kensington, Nov. 10, 1792. Mr. and Mrs. Jonathan Hilliard had ten children, six of whom died in infancy. The remaining four—Rufus K., Joseph, William, and Francis—grew to maturity. Jonathan Hilliard was a carpenter by trade, and a man of moderate means. He died Dec. 20, 1827, while yet in the prime of life, leaving the care of his four children to the widow. By dint of untiring industry and the most rigid economy Mrs. Hilliard managed to keep her family together. She has lived a widow for fifty-five years. A close student of history, she is possessed of unusual information, and retaining her faculties to a wonderful degree, is able to converse readily and intelligently upon all of the topics of the day. She is now (in 1882) residing with her youngest son, Francis. Mr. Hilliard was a Whig in politics. He was at one time a lieutenant in the State militia.

William Hilliard died at thirty-four, leaving a widow and one son. Joseph Hilliard died at thirty-seven, leaving three sons and three daughters. He was an active business man, carrying on a farm, conducting a saw-mill, and managing business as a tanner and currier.

Francis Hilliard was born in Kensington, N. H., Nov. 25, 1825, two years before his father's death. He early learned to labor, and in his boyhood often worked for twenty-five cents a day. He learned the trade of a boot and shoe maker, working at it until about 1862, and employing a large number of men and women in the manufacture of these goods during the last ten years in which he was engaged in this business. In 1862 or 1863 he engaged in mercantile business, having for a partner Mr. George W. Walton for two or three years. He then sold out and engaged in business alone, making a specialty of women's shoes. Subsequently he bought out Mr. Walton and made his business of a more general nature. Since 1867 he has conducted a large lumber business, and also carried on farming operations on a somewhat extensive scale.

Mr. Hilliard has always been active in politics, and is an ardent Republican. He has been postmaster in Kensington ever since 1864, except for two years under President Johnson. He was the selectman of his town in 1867, and a member of the General Assembly of his State in 1878, serving on the Committee on the Asylum for the Insane. He was married July 4, 1867, to A. Maria, daughter of Rev. Julius C. and Abigail C. Blodgett, of Kensington. Mrs. Hilliard was born Aug. 16, 1838. Their children are Marion, Nellie, Wendell P., and Mary A. In religious belief the family is Universalist.

THE TUCK FAMILY.

The paternal ancestor of all the Tuck (or Tucke) families that have lived in Hampton, Rockingham Co., N. H., and of all those that went out to other places, with their numerous descendants, came from Gorleston, a seaboard town in the northeasterly part of the county of Suffolk, England, bordering upon the county of Norfolk, from which latter county came many of the early settlers of Hampton.

The year of Robert Tuck's birth is not known. He came to New England in 1636, or a little earlier, and lived a while in Watertown, near Boston, and in Salem. In 1638 he was a petitioner (with others) to the General Court of Boston for leave to settle at Wimaquanet (Hampton). The petition was granted early in September, and a settlement was begun by some of the grantees the same autumn. Others appear to have waited till the spring following.

Robert Tuck, according to tradition, was of the former number. On the 7th of September, 1639, he was made a freeman, after which he held the following offices: selectman for the years 1648, 1649, 1652, and 1657; town clerk from 1647 till 1650; also, in 1649, was appointed clerk of the commissioners for small causes (that board being a court of record). He was married and had children before his emigration. The time of his marriage and the maiden name of his wife are both unknown to the writer. Her baptismal name was Joanna. They had four children that lived to mature age, all born in England.

Robert Tuck (surnamed Good-man) died intestate, Oct. 4, 1664, and at the County Court held in Hampton in the same month administration was granted to Joanna Tuck, his widow, and John Sanborne, his son-in-law.

The widow, Joanna Tuck, died Feb. 14, 1674.

Edward<sup>2</sup> (Robert<sup>1</sup>) was born in England (the time not known); emigrated with his parents; married, about 1648, Mary, daughter of Thomas Philbrick, Sr., who had settled in Hampton not long before; and after his marriage he probably continued to reside with his parents, or settled on some part of his father's estate. He died intestate, April 6, 1652, leaving two children,—Edward and John.

John<sup>3</sup> (Edward<sup>2</sup>, Robert<sup>1</sup>) was born in 1652, and married, Jan. 9, 1678, Bertha, daughter of Morris and Sarah (Eastow) Hobbs, born in Hampton, Feb. 28, 1659, and died May 29, 1738, being the mother of nine children. Mr. Tuck owned a considerable quantity of real estate, and was to some extent engaged in the cultivation of his land. By trade, however, he was a carpenter. How largely he worked at his trade does not appear. He invested capital in building mills, which in some instances he also operated. He and his wife Bertha united with the church on the 28th day of February, 1678, about seven weeks after their marriage.

He was chosen a deacon in the church July 19, 1715, and held the office till death, which occurred Jan. 4, 1742.

Deacon Tuck was highly esteemed both for his ability and integrity, and was often chosen to fill important offices in the town: was a selectman ten years, and town clerk about fifteen years. He was twice elected a deputy to represent the town in the General Assembly of the province.

Deacon Tuck was farmer and miller; resided on the paternal homestead; died Feb. 3, 1781. His wife died Aug. 12, 1766. They were parents to ten children.

Samuel<sup>3</sup> (Jonathan<sup>4</sup>, John<sup>3</sup>, Edward<sup>3</sup>, Robert<sup>3</sup>) was born in Hampton, March 29, 1731; married, Jan. 17, 1754, Martha, daughter of Philemon and Lydia (Boulter) Blake, of Kensington, and settled where Charles E. Tuck, his great-grandson, now lives in that town. He died in 1789. His wife was born May 15, 1733, and died in 1821. Had eleven children.

Jonathan<sup>5</sup> (Jonathan<sup>6</sup>, Samuel<sup>3</sup>, Jonathan<sup>4</sup>, John<sup>3</sup>, Edward<sup>3</sup>, Robert<sup>3</sup>), born Aug. 13, 1799; married, March 17, 1829, Sally, daughter of Stephen G. Philbrick, of Kensington and Tamworth, N. H., and remained on the homestead. She was born Aug. 5, 1799, and still living (1882). Her father lived to be over one hundred and two years old. Jonathan Tuck died Jan. 18, 1878. In politics a Whig and Republican. By occupation farmer, tanner, and shoemaker. He had two sons,—Henry C. and Charles E.

DANIEL G. YORK.

Daniel G. York was born in the town of Northwood, Rockingham Co., N. H., April 16, 1818, and died at his residence in Kensington, N. H., Nov. 20, 1881. His father, Solomon York, was born in Allentown, N. H., was a farmer by occupation, married Patience Giles, and had ten children, of whom Daniel G. was one. He removed to Maine in the latter part of his life, where he died at the advanced age of eighty years.

Daniel G. York left his father's house at the early age of eight years to live with a man in Brentwood, N. H. Here he resided till he was fourteen years of age, when he went out to Deerfield, N. H., to live with Gen. Cilley, a prominent man of that town, and remained with him some five years, when he commenced to learn the carpenter's trade, which he followed some two years, then resumed farming again in Deerfield, which he followed about a year, when in 1840 he came to Kensington and worked on the farm for John Nudd, a prominent and influential farmer in Kensington. Here Mr. York became acquainted with Betsey P., the only daughter of Mr. Nudd, and they were married March 23, 1842. She was born March 23, 1819. Of this union the following children were born: Oren S., who died young; Mary A., born Sept. 29, 1848, married Arthur W. Gooch, a native of Exeter, and now (1882) a farmer in Kensington. They have one daughter, Mary Alice, John W. York, born Sept. 29, 1850, married Marcia E., daughter of Jonathan and Theodatie Godfrey, June 15, 1871. Mrs. John W. York is one of fourteen living children out of a family of fifteen children. She was born in Hampton, N. H., March 4, 1854. Their children are Grace G., Frank N., Katie E. (died in infancy), Arthur S., and Mary F.

Daniel G. York remained on the old Nudd farm in Kensington after his marriage, where by dint of industry and economy he became one of the very best farmers and wealthiest men in Kensington. He was a Democrat in politics. During the years 1864, 1868, and 1876 he represented his town in the State Legislature. He was a man of sound judgment, kind disposition, charitable to all, envious towards none; frugal, honest, and industrious, he was respected at home and honored abroad. In his sudden death the town lost a good citizen and his family a wise counselor, a devoted husband, and a kind and loving father. His widow still remains on the farm where she was born, which she received from her father at his death. John W. York, only son of Daniel G., carries on the old homestead where he first saw the light of day. He bids fair to be a worthy successor of his father.

CAPT. BENJAMIN MOULTON.

Capt. Benjamin Moulton, of Kensington, N. H., is a lineal descendant of the Moultons who settled in Hampton at an early day, and whose descendants are numbered among the best citizens of this county has ever produced. His grandfather, Capt. Benjamin Moulton, was born May 10, 1721, in Hampton Falls, married Sarah —, who was born July 23, 1721. Their children were Benjamin, born May 23, 1743; Thomas, and Jemima. He was a farmer in Hampton Falls, where he lived and died. Benjamin, son of Capt. Benjamin and Sarah Moulton, was born in Hampton Falls, and was twice married,—first to Mary Sanborn, a descendant of the Sanborns of Hampton, N. H. Of this union ten children were born, nine of whom grew to maturity. His second wife was Elizabeth, daughter of Joseph Rowe, of Kensington, N. H. By this marriage he had children as follows: Betsey, who died at twenty-nine; Benjamin, born Aug. 16, 1795; and Joseph, who died at forty-one, leaving a family at Exeter, N. H.

Benjamin Moulton (second) settled in Kensington, N. H., soon after his first marriage, and was a farmer by occupation. He died March 5, 1819, aged seventy-nine years and nine months. His second wife died July 3, 1846, in her eighty-ninth year.

Capt. Benjamin Moulton (third) had limited advantages for an education. He inherited the old Moulton homestead in Kensington, N. H., where his father settled, and where he and his children have always lived. He is one of the substantial farmers of Kensington, and in his younger days was prominently connected with all the improvements of his native town. He has been a Whig and Republican in politics, and as such has been selectman three times and member of the State Legislature in 1837–38. In religion he is a Universalist. He married Mehitable Brown, Oct. 16, 1817. She was born Dec. 7, 1792, and was the daughter of John Brown, of Hampton Falls, and a lineal descendant of John Brown, one of the first proprietors of Hampton. (See biography of Hon. Warren Brown, Hampton Falls, N. H.) Their children are Elizabeth, born Nov. 17, 1819; Benjamin G., April 18, 1821; and Hannah S., Dec. 13, 1824.

Capt. Moulton was for a short time a soldier in the war of 1812. He has served in the various grades of the State militia from that of private to captain of a company. In all the affairs of life he has been sober, honest, and industrious, and now at the advanced age of eighty-seven years retains his faculties to a remarkable degree, and enjoys the confidence of his fellow-townsmen.

JOHN FRENCH.

John French was born in South Hampton, April 26, 1801. His father, Jacob, son of Henry, was born at South Hampton, and married Abigail Sbow, of Kensington; had a family of three children, —John, Abigail, who died at the age of five years, and Irena, who married Moses Stokes, and have four sons and one daughter. Jacob French was a hotel-keeper, drover, farmer, and teamster. He settled in Washington County, Pa., in 1813, remaining nine years. He returned in 1822 to Kensington. A few months before his death he went to live with his daughter at Manchester. He died at the age of eighty, having been married three times.

Henry French was a farmer, married a Miss Jones, died in 1811 at an advanced age, leaving four sons and three daughters.

John French, the immediate subject of this sketch, was a slender youth, but after the death of his mother, in 1811, he went with his father to Pennsylvania, where he began to grow stronger. He there engaged in teaming, and remained three years, when he took "Scotch leave" and a "bee line" for home, with only eighteen cents in his pocket. He commenced his journey homeward on the night of June 16, 1817, and after a hard day's work traveled twelve miles, and slept in an oak trough the remainder of the night. He begged bread, found and sold horse-shoes, slept in barns, stables, under hay-cocks, till Aug. 6, 1817, when he reached Southampton, and returned to his uncle, Barnes French, where he stayed the first winter. The following spring he began his trade as a blacksmith and plowsmith, staying five months, and returned to South Hampton, and worked there till spring, when he again went to Exeter till fall; from thence to Concord, and stayed two years, till he was twenty-one; worked one month for his grandfather Shaw for eight dollars; went to Concord and made two or three plows for a watch, which he sold for five dollars; put his pack on his back and started for Pennsylvania; went to Pittsburgh, found no work; finally assisted to drive three hundred sheep to Philadelphia for thirty-seven and a half cents per day and board; returned to New Hampshire, having traveled some seven hundred miles on foot. He then went to Concord and made two plows for eighteen dollars; hired a shop, selling one plow for cash and one for iron; took an apprentice, Timothy R. Shaw, and began business, where he remained eight months, when he sold out, realizing a profit of one hundred and seventy-five dollars, and settled at Kensington, November, 1823, and began business on Shaw's Hill, where he remained five years working at his trade. He then, Oct. 20, 1828, bought his present place, where he has since remained. His business increased till he made two hundred plows a year. Till 1837 he made plows from wrought iron. Since then made cast-iron plows. He has been twice married,—first, Oct. 31, 1826, to Harriet Brown, daughter of John and Lucy (Rowe) Brown, who was born Oct. 17, 1807.

Their children are John C., Lucy A., Irena S., and Harriet A., all born in Kensington.

Second marriage, June 19, 1864, to Irena (sister to his first wife), who was born in Kensington, March 15, 1815.

In 1828 he bought eight acres of land, to which he has added till he owns about one hundred acres, and has been very successful in business. In politics a Democrat, and has been selectman for his town. He is an attendant at the Christian Church, of which both of his wives were members.

CAPT. JOSEPH BROWN.

Capt. Joseph Brown was born in Kensington, N. H., March 9, 1802, and has always lived upon the old family homestead of about two hundred acres, following the occupation of a farmer. In his younger days he had a taste for military matters, and belonged to a militia company, serving first as a private, but being promoted to the rank of captain. Of the brothers of Capt. Brown, Amos was a Congregational minister, Jonathan a Baptist minister, and Moses a physician. Capt. Brown was married Nov. 25, 1825, to Miss Mary Ann Weare, a daughter of Joseph H. and Betsy (Mitchell) Weare. She was born Aug. 2, 1807, in Seabrook, N. H. Their children are Joseph W. and Stephen A. The first named was born Sept. 5, 1826. He married Sarah B., daughter of Joseph C. Hilliard, and had three children,—Susan L., Sarah A. (since deceased), and Mary L. The second son, Stephen A., was born April 12, 1839, and died Aug. 17, 1856. In politics the captain was a Whig until 1858, and since then a Democrat. He has been a selectman, and in 1858 was a representative in the State Legislature. Both he and his wife are members of the Congregational Church.

The ancestors of Capt. Brown can be traced back in a direct line for six generations. The names were Stephen, Joseph, Jonathan, Benjamin, and John. His father, Stephen Brown, married Susan Bagley, of Salisbury, Mass., and had nine children,—Joseph, Amos, Polly, Nancy, John, Stephen, Moses, Jonathan, and Susan, all of whom grew to maturity. Nancy and Susan died unmarried. All of the others are married and have families. Moses and Jonathan are twins. Mr. Stephen Brown was a large and successful farmer. In politics he was a Whig. He died at the age of seventy-six, and his wife at seventy-three.

Joseph Brown, the father of Stephen Brown, and the grandfather of Capt. Joseph Brown, was born in Kensington, and married Miss Ann Brown. They had twelve children. The names of the sons were Moses, Jonathan, Joseph, Sewell, Nehemiah, Nathan, Stephen, William, and John.

CHAPTER LIV.

Geographical—Topographical—Original Charter—Occupations of the People—Ecclesiastical History—The Epidemic.

THE town of Kingston lies in the southern part of the county, and is bounded as follows: on the north by Brentwood, on the east by East Kingston and Newton, on the south by Newton and Plaistow, and on the west by Plaistow, Hampstead, and Danville. The surface of the town is rolling, and the soil very fertile.

Original Grant or Charter.—The town of Kingston was granted in 1694 by the following charter:

"William & Mary by the Grace of God of England, Scotland France & Ireland King and Queen, Defender of the Faith, &c.

"To all people To whom these presents shall come, greeting know ye that we of our special Grace certain knowledge & mere motion for the due encouragement of settling a new plantation by & with the advice & consent of our Council have given & granted & by these presents as far as in us Lies Do Give & Grant unto our beloved subjects, James Prescott Sen. From the charter it appears that Kingston is one of the older towns of the State. Portsmouth, Dover, Exeter, and Hampton were the only towns incorporated when Kingston received its charter. It was also one of the large towns, extending from Hampton, which then included Kensington, ten miles west to what is now the eastern boundaries of Chester, Derry, and Hampstead. On the north it was bounded by Exeter, which then included Brentwood and Fremont.<sup>1</sup>

On the south it was bounded by an indefinite line, which became the occasion of much trouble between the inhabitants of Kingston and their southern neighbors. In 1739 East Kingston became a separate parish, and in 1756 Sandown was incorporated. On Feb. 22, 1760, another section of the northwest part of Kingston was cut off and incorporated with the name Hawke (now Danville).

The southwest part of Kingston lies between Newton on the east, with Danville and Hampstead on the west and Plaistow on the south, and is called South Kingston. Though it is not a separated town, its position is such that there is little intercourse between its inhabitants and those of the remaining part <sup>1</sup> The boundaries of Kingston were not definitely fixed for many years after its settlement. About 1714, by a correction of the survey of the line between Exeter and Kingston, a part of Exeter was found to belong to Kingston, and several of the inhabitants of Exeter, Abraham Folsom and others, who had received grants of land on the southern border of what is now Brentwood, lost a large part of their land.

The southwestern boundaries were not settled till long after this period. Previous to the establishment of the State boundaries in 1741, Haverhill and Amesbury claimed a considerable section of land which the people of Kingston supposed to be included in their charter. This troublesome dispute was not settled till 1767, when the town of Hampstead, which had been granted in 1749, paid one thousand pounds, old tenor, and the Governor granted to Kingston the town of Unity, in Cheshire County, July 18, 1764. John Lad, Charles Hinnton, and other early settlers of that place are supposed to have gone from Kingston.

The early settlers of Kingston having suffered so much from the wars with Indians, had petitioned for the grant of a new township, that those who had become poor might have new lands for themselves and their children.

There was also a difficulty respecting the line between Kingston and Chester, which arose in 1728, and continued till after the west part of Kingston was incorporated as Sandown.

The Massachusetts government had made grants of land covering the same ground covered by the Kingston charter, which led to much strife; but this trouble was removed when the two provinces fixed more correctly the boundaries between them.

of the town, which is now in territory one of the smallest in the State.

The whole town contains 42,188 acres, of which 800 are supposed to be covered with water.

Great Pond, with an island of ten or twelve acres, covers three hundred acres. It is on the southwest of the village, called "The Plain." Little Pond, covering over fifty acres, lies but a few rods west from the three churches and the town-house. Country Pond, with an island of six or eight acres, lies on the southeast boundary, and is partly in Newton. There are smaller ponds, named Moon Pond, Long Pond, and Barberry Pond.

The highest land in town is on the Great Hill, in the northeast corner of the town, on the line between Exeter and Kingston. Rock Rimmon, in the west of the town, near Danville, is a high ledge of granite, very steep on the south, but falling off gradually on the north.

The first houses in town were built on the plain, and were several of them garrisons. The village where most of the business of the town is done is called Kingston Plains, near the centre of the town, on a plain more than a mile long from north to south, and about half a mile wide, with a common in the centre half a mile long and twenty rods wide, upon the west side of which are some stately elm-trees, planted more than one hundred and fifty years ago, some of them by the first pastor of the church, Rev. Ward Clark, who died in 1737. The water from the northeast side of the plain runs into the Exeter River, but from the southwest part it runs into the ponds which are connected with the Powow River, that carries their waters into the Merrimac River.

From Kingston Plains to Exeter is six miles northeast; to Portsmouth, twenty miles; to Haverhill, Mass., twelve miles south; to Concord, thirty-seven northwest.

The Boston and Maine Railroad runs through East Kingston, two and a half miles east from Kingston, and the Nashua and Rochester runs through Fremont, five miles northwest of Kingston.

The soil of Kingston is usually a sandy loam, easily cultivated, and productive if well dressed. There is an abundance of pure water, and the climate is healthy. There have been some cases of remarkable longevity. Samuel Welch, one of the first settlers, had a son Samuel, born Sept. 1, 1710, who married, Jan. 22, 1732, Elenor Clough, and had a son, Reuben, born Feb. 15, 1740. When about forty-five years of age he removed to Pembroke. He was a quiet, industrious, and temperate man, living the last fifty years of his life on a little farm in an obscure corner of the town of Bow. Mr. John Farmer visited him in March, 1823, and spoke of him as feeble, but with mental faculties little impaired and quite interesting in conversation. He died the 5th of April following, aged one hundred and twelve years and seven months. His mother and his sister are said to have lived, each of them, to the age of one hundred years, and his brother lived to near ninety years of age.

Abigail Sanborn, a native of Kingston, died in Canterbury, among the Shakers, aged one hundred and one years; and Mrs. Judith Webster, born in South Hampton, Aug. 29, 1775, was a member of the Kingston Congregational Society, and died in East Kingston, March 11, 1876, aged one hundred years and six months.

The ponds in Kingston are well stocked with fish, which afforded much food for the Indians long before the white men visited the country. Many of their implements of stone and some old French coins have been found in the vicinity.

In the swamps, lying near the ponds and streams, there was formerly much valuable cedar lumber; but the dams, built by the manufacturing companies, have flowed much low land, and injured the growth of timber; but we are told that the companies long ago paid for the right of fowage, much more than the lands were ever worth to anybody for any other purpose. The water upon these lands has been very productive of fish, which are freely taken without any price.

Occupations of the People.—At the settlement of Kingston much of the land was covered with valuable timber. In 1765 the town granted one hundred acres of land to the persons who would build a saw-mill upon the Little River, on the condition that they should saw the town's lumber. When the roads were built so that lumber could be hauled to market, it became an important article in the productions of the town. From 1750 to 1775 there were six or seven stores in the town, and a brisk business was done at the "Plains" in the lumber trade. There were large lumber-yards on the common, where great quantities of the article collected from this and other towns were kept for sale.

At one period in the early history of Kingston a company engaged in the manufacture of iron, using the bog iron ore taken from the bottom of Great Pond, but the quantity of the ore was small, and it was procured with so much difficulty that the business was unprofitable and finally abandoned.

The cultivation of the soil has from the settlement of the town been the main business of the inhabitants. Those who have patiently and intelligently continued this business have not failed to secure a reasonable reward for their labors and a secure investment for their funds.

Next to this, the main branch of industry for many years has been the manufacture of carriages, which is still carried on at the Plains. It is said that Mr. William Patten was the first to commence this business, and that the first chaise ever made in New Hampshire (except one at Portsmouth) was made by him at Kingston.

Kingston was for many years one of the frontier towns, and for more than fifty years the inhabitants suffered, often severely, from the attacks of the French and Indians, so that the people were much hindered and discouraged in their efforts to clear the land and secure safe homes for themselves and their families. There were natural meadows, much more numerous and profitable than now. The Indians used to burn the grass upon these meadows, and thus prevented the bushes from growing upon them as they do now.

The native grasses upon these lowlands were of much value to the new settlers before they had time to fell the large trees, clear the new land, and inclose the fields and pastures for raising the English grasses.

Ecclesiastical History.—As the main object of the proprietors and early settlers in obtaining a charter and organizing a separate town or parish was to aid them in establishing public worship and public schools within a distance convenient to the settlers, the main part of the history of the town for many years which has been preserved for us is the ecclesiastical history of Kingston.

The first settlers of this town were from the families of the Puritans who had settled Ipswich, Newbury, and Salisbury, Mass., and Hampton, N. H. They were ardently attached to the principles of the Puritans, and anxious to train up their children with a correct knowledge of their own doctrines. Some of the proprietors and early settlers were natives of England, who had not been sent out from the prisons and the almshouses of the old country, but men who, at a great sacrifice of property, etc., had left the homes of their fathers and encountered the dangers of a long voyage over the wide ocean for the purpose of finding on this wild, inhospitable shore freedom to worship God. Here, exposed to the treachery of the murderous savages, they were in still greater dangers.

If their religion was tainted with any superstition, it may have been owing somewhat to the circumstances in which they were placed.

The town-meeting in January, 1700, was to consult about the division of their lands, and to establish public worship. They hoped that their treaty with the Indians would be permanent, and in their joy at a release from the burdens and the dangers of the war they were preparing to establish the public worship of God in the place.

The second meeting, in June, 1700, was to discuss "the plan for hiring a minister." They "voted to have a minister, if he can be obtained," and "that his salary shall not exceed £80 a year." They must have roads, and they voted that the road north and south across the plain for nearly a mile be twenty rods wide, and from the plain to the Exeter line eight rods wide. They were not narrow men, as some have supposed.

In 1702, when the lots of land were laid out, No. 14 was assigned for a parsonage lot, and in the year following a grant of one hundred acres was made for the first minister who should settle with them. They also chose a site for a meeting-house.

But they were sadly disappointed, for in 1703 the war with the Indians suddenly broke out again, and many of the people left their lands and returned to safer localities in the older settlements. Some of those who remained on their lands were obliged to send back their wives and children to the homes of their friends. These were perilous times, when their cattle were killed, their crops destroyed, their buildings burned, and their lives in constant danger.

Ensign Tristram Sanborn, from Hampton, had commenced clearing a piece of land where some of his descendants still reside on the Exeter road. He had erected a cabin of logs, where he took his food and found shelter till it was safe to bring his family to the place.

One evening, on returning from his work in the Great Meadows, where he had been to cut his grass, he found instead of his food and shelter a heap of ashes. The Indians had been there, and taken what they chose of his property, and burned what they could not carry. He did not, like many others, desert the land which they could not carry off or consume, but built a garrison-house upon it, where his wife and children need not be constantly exposed to death or captivity from any roving Indians who were prowling about intent upon pillage and murder. This building probably afforded a refuge to some of his neighbors in seasons of peculiar danger.

Tradition says that some years afterwards a band of savages, taking advantage of the absence of the men, made a furious attack upon this house. The women defended it till their assailants were repulsed and retreated. The next day a dead Indian was found not far from the garrison.

Aaron Sleeper erected another garrison not far east from Sanborn's, and the town-meeting in 1705 was held in it. One object of this meeting was "to consider some way to secure a minister."

During some years the Indians, supplied with ammunition and incited by the French in Maine and in Canada, kept the people of this whole region in a state of continued anxiety and fear. This fear was not groundless, but reasonable.

Though patrolmen and scouts were employed on a line of frontier for fifty miles at great expense of money and life, it was impossible to prevent small bodies of Indians from passing this line by night or by day. They could conceal themselves by day, and visit the larger villages by night.

The grants of lands to the original settlers of these new towns were attended with certain conditions, so that if a man felt obliged to leave his lot without improvements for a certain period he lost his title to it.

Some of the first settlers of Kingston, who, on account of the danger, had left the place and had forfeited their rights, with others "who wished to settle there in the fall of 1705," sent a petition to the General Court in May, 1705, for leave to return to their lands. This was granted upon the condition that there be not less than thirty families, and that they "build a fort in the centre of the town," and "lay out in the centre of this a forty-acre lot for ye parsonage, and settle an able orthodox minister within three years next coming." The people had already suffered so much that on May 9, 1705, "The Council voted that the town of Kingston be excused from sending a representative and paying any part of ye province charge for the present year, provided that they assist the scouts with pilots at their own charge whenever required."

Soon after this the settlers made the attempt to comply with the conditions of their settlement. They chose a committee to look for a minister, but it was a difficult business for these thirty or forty families, some of them not permanently settled themselves, to "settle an able orthodox minister." They could not offer a very safe and comfortable home, nor a tempting salary, nor a large and inviting field for usefulness. The people had, many of them, become poor, having suffered so much from the deprivations of the Indians. While they were toiling to fell the heavy trees and open fields for cultivation, their families in their humble cabins were exposed to the murderous enemies secretly hovering round, ready to destroy the lives and the property of the poor laborers. Having been heavily taxed in erecting garrison-houses, and in furnishing the means of self-protection, they were unable to promise their preacher more than forty pounds, one-half as much as they had hoped to pay when they commenced their settlement.

In October, 1707, two years later, they succeeded in hiring a Mr. Benjamin Choate, A.M., who was born in Ipswich, Mass., in 1680, and graduated at Harvard College in 1703, who had for a time been a teacher in the garrison at Deerfield, Mass. He was probably licensed, but was never ordained nor united with the church in Kingston, though he remained there more than forty years. He seems to have been a teacher a part of the time while he supplied their pulpit, and afterwards he held different offices in town.

They engaged to pay him fifty pounds a year,—thirty pounds current silver money and twenty pounds in labor and provision pay. They also voted to give him a grant of land, and from time to time we find the record, "that the town give Rev. B. Choate 40 cords of wood this year."

The same year the first meeting-house, with two stories and gallery, was built on the plains, on the southwest part of the common, near the house of Deacon Moses Elkins, and nearly opposite to the Scotland road. Tristram Sanborn, before mentioned, was one of the building committee. "It was paid for by a tax on improved lands, and by a tax on heads." It was standing in 1760, and perhaps later, but was probably never finished, for Mr. Choate preached a part of the time—perhaps during the winter—in the garrison-house. It was not used for public worship only about twenty-five years, when the second church was erected in 1732, a larger building three stories high.

Mr. Choate is supposed to have preached about ten years. On April 16, 1716, a committee was chosen to confer with Mr. Choate "upon terms of continuance with us in the work of the ministry." Also a vote was passed to "add £10 to the salary, making the whole £60; at the end of two years £5 more, if he continues with us in the work of the ministry." Also a vote that "£40 shall be presented to him when he builds a house in this town." Five voters entered their dissent from this vote. Tradition says the objection to him was that he sometimes used too much strong drink.

The people still continued to suffer from the fearful attacks of the merciless savages. On the 17th of September, 1707, they killed Henry Elkins. In 1710 they killed Samuel Winslow and Samuel Huntoon. In 1712, Steven Gilman was killed and Ebenezer Stevens wounded. The terrible butchery of so many men, women, and children in 1708 at Haverhill, only twelve miles distant, must have filled with alarm the people of Kingstown, who were equally exposed to such murderous attacks. It is not strange that such cruel and bloody acts aroused in the minds of our fathers a lasting hatred of the Catholic missionaries, who, instead of preaching the gospel of peace, incited the Indians to such deeds of blood and murder; and that as a means of self-protection they followed the example of the French, and bounties were offered for the scalps of these murderers, who lurked about the settlements, waiting their opportunities to kill the innocent and then retreat to their hiding-places. Such a state of things was not very favorable to the success of Mr. Choate's labors in preaching the gospel. It seems the form of public worship was kept up, though it was with danger that the people left their homes on the Sabbath to attend the house of God.

For twenty-five years after the settlement of the town no church was organized, and the citizens in the town-meeting were the only religious society. The town records are the only source of information respecting the progress of religion in the place. It is not known that Mr. Choate kept any records, unless he was town clerk, or that he baptized any. He may, as a civil magistrate, have married some couples, but I find no records of any such marriages.

When released from service in the pulpit, Mr. Choate did not leave the people in a condition favorable for settling another man. On the 16th of February, 1721, the town gave a call to Mr. William Tompson to become their minister, offering him a salary of eighty pounds a year,—forty pounds in money and forty pounds in provision pay,—also "a grant of land, provided he be our ordained minister, and continue with us in the work of the ministry ten or fifteen years, except God should take him away by death;" also the use of the parsonage meadow "during his natural life." He accepted the call, and his letter in answer to it is recorded in the town book. But for some reasons, not recorded, he was not ordained, and did not remain long, though he returned and preached occasionally, and seven years afterward, Oct. 30, 1728, he married Miss Anna Hubbard, of Kingston.

The treaty of peace with the Indians in 1713 did not continue long, for the Indians in the east became dissatisfied with the conditions of it, and renewed their attacks upon settlers on the frontiers, while England and France were nominally at peace. In May, 1724, they entered Kingstown again and took as prisoners Peter Coleord and Ephraim Severance and two sons of Ebenezer Stevens, whom they carried to Canada. The children were ransomed, and Coleord, a smart, active young man, after about six months escaped and returned to his friends. In September, 1724, while Jabez Colman and his son were gathering cornstalks in a field on the borders of Little Pond, they were attacked and murdered by the Indians.

A mere statement of such facts as these gives us no adequate idea of the solicitude, the sufferings, and the distress with which these early settlers were oppressed. Many of them sacrificed all their pecuniary means, and mortgaged the houses and lands which they had just been preparing for their homes. If they escaped with their lives, they often saved nothing with which to sustain life. Sickness, occasioned by destitution and exposure, took away many who escaped the tomabawks and the bullets of the savages.

On May 17, 1725, the "Selectmen of Kingstown," viz.: Joseph Fifield, Ebenezer Stevens, Tristram Sanborn, Joseph Grede, and Joseph Sleeper, presented the Governor and Council a petition for "Abatement of Province Tax," in which they say, "We request that your hon<sup>ts</sup> would consider our sad circumstances,—living in a frontier town,—so small, & exposed to ye Indian enemy, & our rates so heavy that we cannot tell how to pay it. Therefore we humbly pray your honors to consider us, & to mediate sumthing of our Province Rates." "We have lately lost sundry men of considerable estates,—some by the enemy, & some by sickness. We are so exposed to danger of ye enemy, dayly,—whenever we goe to work, we are as it were upon duty."

Early in the year 1725, Mr. Ward Clark, son of Rev. John Clark, formerly pastor at Exeter, commenced preaching in Kingstown, and in April he received a call to settle as minister in the place. He was about twenty-one years of age, and a graduate of Harvard College in 1723.

They voted to pay him a salary of eighty pounds on September 17th. A church was organized of twenty-three members,—nine by letter from Hampton, and seven brought letters from Hampton Falls. He was ordained Sept. 29, 1725, his stepfather, Rev. John Odlin, of Exeter, preaching the sermon, which was afterwards printed at Boston. The text was (1 Timothy vi. 11 and 12) the subject, "Christian Courage Necessary for a Gospel Minister."

Mr. Clark proved to be an able and efficient pastor, and the church increased rapidly under his ministry. His church records are very carefully kept, and will be of much value in preparing a complete history of Kingston. He made a list of the families in the town, eighty-one in all, including the three towns which were afterwards set off from the original town. Fifty surnames are found in the list. The name Sleeper is represented by six heads of families, and Bean, Sanborn, and Webster by four each. One man is described as a Quaker. It would seem that all the others were Congregationalists. There was no other religious society organized for one hundred years from the settlement of the town, or in the year 1800, when the Methodists had a society.

From this time the town became more prosperous, and rapidly increased in population.<sup>1</sup> For several years they annually voted twenty pounds additional to their pastor's salary, and made him liberal grants of land.

In March, 1732, at the annual meeting they voted to build a new meeting-house, and that it "shall be 55 feet Long and forty-five feet wide, and high enough for two tiers of Gallery, &c." It stood for one hundred years on the west side of the common just north of the road which leads to Rock Rimmon and Danville. Some years later a tower was erected one hundred feet high. The first meeting-house remained for more than thirty years, and was in 1764 used for town-meetings.

The Epidemic which originated in Kingston.—In the midst of their prosperity the town was suddenly visited by a terrible disease, called "the throat distemper." It commenced in June, 1735, and in about fourteen months one hundred and thirteen had been taken away by it, ninety-six of whom were under ten years of age. The wife and two children of their pastor, the Rev. Ward Clark, were among the victims of this scourge. His own health failed soon after, and he returned to his native town, Exeter, where after a long sickness he died, May 6, 1737. "A good man, much wanted, and much lamented," as was said of his father, who died at the same place, near the same age, thirty-four.

Of this disease the town record says, "This mortality was by a kanker quinsy, which mostly seized upon young people, and has proved exceeding mortal in several other towns. It is supposed there never was the like before in this country." Professor William Franklin Webster, of this town, when in Germany, found in a "medical work the statement that the first recorded instance of this disease in the whole world was in this town," Kingston, N. H. Of the first forty persons seized with it not one recovered.

It is now supposed that it was a malignant type of diphtheria, which soon visited many other towns in the vicinity, and was fearfully destructive in its ravages.

During the pastorate of Mr. Clark, four hundred and seventy-one persons were baptized, and one hundred and thirty were received into the church. At the funeral of Mr. Clark, in Exeter, 10th of May, 1737, the senior deacon, Moses Elkins, fell and suddenly died.

Mr. Clark in his will gave to "his beloved people at Kingston, for a perpetual parsonage, to be improved for the use of the ministry there, [his] dwelling-house and home place," upon conditions which were accepted, and for about eighty years his "successors in the ministry" were permitted to occupy the premises, which were afterwards sold, and the funds used sometimes to oppose the (truths) doctrines which he preached. The records at his death say "He lived beloved, and died respected by his people."

Soon after the death of their pastor, the majority of the citizens gave a call to Mr. Peter Coffin to settle with them; but eighteen voters dissented, and he was not settled.

On the 17th of October, 1737, the church voted unanimously to give Rev. Joseph Seccombe a call, and the town on the week after cast a unanimous vote that he should be their minister. He was installed Nov. 23, 1737, and spent twenty-three years, the remainder of his life, as their pastor. Mr. Seccombe preached the installation sermon himself, from Mark vii. 37, "He hath done all things well," etc.

It is said, "Mr. Seccombe was a good man,—a poor man's son; that he preached to the Indians three years before coming to Kingston." His labors were very successful, and the parish soon grew to such an extent that in February, 1739, the east part of the town had been set off, and a committee appointed to fix the boundaries between the two parishes. On the 6th of March, 1739, the old part of the town voted to remonstrate against this division, but they did not succeed in preventing it. On Nov. 4, 1739, ten members were dismissed from the Kingston Church to unite with a church in East Kingston, which was organized Dec. 19, 1739. In the year following thirty-three others were dismissed to the new church. On Sept. 26, 1740, forty-three persons included in the new parish "requested to still belong to the old parish." They were permitted to do so. These persons lived in the district on the Exeter road, and it seems the northern part of the line between the two parishes was removed to the east to accommodate them.

<sup>1</sup> In seven years the town "had 164 ratable inhabitants and 115 dwelling-houses, of which 64 were two stories high." In this year their second meeting-house, three stories high, was built.

In 1767, after East Kingston, Sandown, and Hawke had been detached from it and incorporated as separate parishes, Kingston contained 999 inhabitants.

From the settlement of Kingston a part of the congregation at public worship came from that part of Exeter afterwards Brentwood. In 1750 thirty-three members were dismissed from the church in Kingston to unite with a church in Brentwood. On April 6, 1756, the west part of the town was incorporated under the name Sandown, and in November, 1759, ten members were dismissed from Kingston to organize a church in it. On Feb. 22, 1760, another section in the west of Kingston was incorporated and called Hawke (now Danville).

On Oct. 25, 1749, the Masonian proprietors granted the town of Salisbury (then Stevens Town), N. H., to fifty-seven grantees, of whom fifty-four belonged to Kingston. Soon after quite a colony from Kingston settled in that place. Among these was Ebenezer Webster, the father of Daniel and Ezekiel Webster, and soon after, Dr. Joseph Bartlett and his wife Hannah (Colecord), the parents of Hon. Ichabod Bartlett, of Portsmouth.

The people of Kingston felt a deep interest in the prosperity of the colonies that went out from the town. They divided their parsonage property with the society at East Kingston, and the proprietors voted "to assist to build a meeting-house in Salisbury like that in East Kingston, and a pulpit like the one in Hawke, and that Ebenezer Webster, Joseph Bean, and Capt. John Calef must see that the work is done in a workmanlike manner."

Some years later, when called upon to choose a representative to the Assembly to meet in Exeter, December, 1775, they voted that "No person [i. e., from Kingston] be allowed a seat in that Congress who shall, by himself or any other person, before said choice treat with liquor." (Showing they had already at this early day discovered the cloven foot of the old devil, Intemperance.)

Mr. Secombe's ministry continued till his death, Sept. 15, 1763, nearly twenty-three years, during which he baptized 1257 persons, old and young, and received to the church 338 members, most of them joining after a revival, which commenced some five years after his installation.

Mr. Secombe took no active part in the contention which arose in the churches respecting the labors of Mr. Whitefield. While Messrs. Coffin, of East Kingston, and Fogg, of Kensington, signed a letter desiring their brethren not to admit Whitefield into their pulpits, Mr. Secombe probably sympathized with his views and profited by his labors.

In about eighteen months from the death of Mr. Secombe the town gave a call to Mr. Amos Toppan, who accepted, and was their pastor for nearly nine years, till his death, June 23, 1771.<sup>1</sup> From this time the church was vacant over five years, during which they were supplied by Mr. Stephen Peabody, Nathaniel Niles, Stephen Lancaster, Joshua Noyes, Moses Everett, Joseph Appleton, and probably others. Some of them declined the calls which they received, and others were not invited to settle with them. The political discussions had invaded the religious societies. In 1757 the Baptists and the Quakers had refused to aid in the support of public worship. Afterwards, if any one did not wish to pay his proportion of such expenses, he could join the Quakers or Baptists and be released from that part of the taxes paid by the rest of the town.

In 1763 the town treasurer records, "Paid Benj. Collins £7 10s. for being a Quaker, and Jonathan Collins £3 5 shillings."

In 1775 the town voted "not to raise any money for preaching." In the year following Mr. Elihu Thayer was called at a salary of sixty pounds lawful money, use of parsonage, and twenty cords of wood, and ordained Dec. 18, 1776. He soon took a high place, not only in his parish, but in the community about Kingston, as a man of piety and learning. For more than thirty-five years, till his death, April 3, 1812, he retained his well-earned reputation in the town and throughout the State. During this long period we have no account of any other organized religious society except the Methodists, a feeble band, organized in 1801.

The year after his death a census of the one hundred and twenty-nine families in the town "showed that 82 of them" preferred the Congregational denomination, and "47 the Baptists, Universalists, or Methodists," who, it seems, united their forces.

It is said Dr. Thayer kept together a large congregation, but did not in those troublesome times receive many into the church; only thirty-six in thirty-five years are named in the records as becoming members.

Dr. John H. Church, of Pelham, preached the sermon at the funeral of Dr. Thayer, upon the text (Ezekiel xxxiii. 33), "Then shall they know that a prophet hath been among them." From this time the town had no settled minister till Rev. John Turner was installed, Jan. 1, 1818. The town officers withheld a part of the income of the parsonage fund, and it was used to pay for preaching different doctrines. From this time any person in town who pays any tax can withdraw a portion of that money yearly, and direct that it be used for a different purpose.

Though the town had settled Mr. Turner, the party opposed to the rate shut the church against him, and Deacon Stevens, for forcibly entering it, was fined and imprisoned for thirty days. The opposition was so violent that Mr. Turner was dismissed May 1, 1823. Mr. Patten, in manuscript, says, "If Mr. Turner had possessed the wisdom of the serpent and the harmlessness of the dove, he could not have escaped censure." The town officers set a guard from Saturday till Monday at the doors of the meeting-house, and the Congregational people withdrew from the place where their fathers worshiped, and in 1825 erected a new meeting-house, which was enlarged in 1841, and remodeled in 1879. From this time the town and the churches have been independent of each other, except that the town holds the funds given for the support of the gospel, including the legacy of the first pastor of the Congregational Church, and that church and society have usually received about one-fourth of the income from it. The preachers in the Congregational Church since 1823 have been Rev. Ira Pearson, seven years; A. Govan, two years; George W. Thompson, three years; Samuel Mason, three years; John Smith, two years; John H. Mellish, twelve years; S. Bixby, three years; and J. Chapman, seven years, closing July, 1879, and several others for shorter periods. Mr. G. B. Balch was ordained pastor Aug. 4, 1881.

Remarks upon the Ecclesiastical History.—1. The ministers in early times were not settled in haste, but they waited for months, till each party could become acquainted with the other. The first pastor commenced labor with the people more than six months before he was settled. The second preached on trial three months, and then became pastor for twenty-three years.

2. The orthography in some of the early records is not according to the present standard, for there were no spelling-books used in the schools. The scholars read in the Testament and Psalter.

3. It seems that at first they sang, in church, the literal translations of the Psalms, but by advice of Mr. Seccombe, in 1737, the church adopted the use of some metrical versions of the Psalms, and the church voted "to sing by rule." In 1741 thirty persons united in a request "that the church sing some Christian Hymns at the Lord's Supper." About the same time "The church desired to revive the Reading of the Scriptures as a part of public service on the Lord's Day."

There is a tradition that, out of regard to the name of the town, "King's-town," the king of England sent the settlers a valuable b U for their church. But it was supposed to have stopped in Boston, because the Bostonians concluded that a cheaper article would be good enough for a little society upon the frontiers.

CHAPTER LV.

KINGSTON.—(Continued.)

Educational—Ecclesiastical—Grantees—Professional Men, etc.—Representatives from 1708 to 1883—Military Record.

THE early settlers of Kingston were not unmindful of the education of their children. In 1700 they set apart lands for the support of schools. But the pursuit of knowledge then and there was attended by many difficulties unknown in the present age. The people incurring such great expenses in clearing their lands, erecting their houses, building roads, bridges, mills, etc., besides supporting the military companies necessary to protect their lives and their property, had but little money left to build the school-house or pay the schoolmaster. Even when by hard labor they earned a little money, it was not safe to keep it long for use. Frequently in a few months their money would lose much of its value. Their paper money was of such a poor quality that it often deteriorated in the hands of the collector of taxes, or of the town treasurer, before he could pay it out for the proper objects, and the town would have to pay him for his losses.

Then the inhabitants were scattered so widely that it was extremely difficult to bring the children together into the school when they were in danger, during the long, lonely walks through the forests, from the wild beasts and from the still more fearful savages waiting to kill the little ones or carry them into captivity.

Notwithstanding all these discouragements they did not hesitate to tax themselves for the support of their teachers and their preachers. They wanted well-educated men for pastors and teachers.

Benjamin Choat, A.B., of Harvard, who was the first preacher, it is said, taught school in the garrison-house, where the children were safer from the attacks of the Indians. They had no spelling-books, grammars, and geographies, but used the Testament and the Psalter as reading-books. For writing and ciphering they probably used, as in other places, the bark of the birch-tree. Still, some of these pupils became quite familiar with the science of numbers, and with practical geometry and surveying. When we consider the imperfections of their instruments, and the other difficulties they had to encounter, we wonder that they were so accurate in their surveys.

In respect to orthography, punctuation, and the use of capitals they were not so particular. The modes of spelling differed widely, for Johnson, Walker, and Webster had not put the words of our language in proper shape.

The same writer would sometimes spell a word in two or three different ways on the same page, using such letters as would express the sound of the word as spoken. I will give a specimen, taken verbatim et literatim from a manuscript in the Provincial Court papers:

"Mar. 2 1695 at a meeting of Kingstown men in Kingtown to chuse constables & selectmen we have chose John Mason & Ebenezer Webster for constables & James Prescut sen'r & Isaac Godfrey Gershom Elkins for selectmen of the town."

We find in the records frequent notices of the expenses incurred in supporting the schools. In 1733 "Pd. Mr. Choat for Keeping School £1 16s." In 1745, Matthew Campbell was a schoolmaster. Jeremiah Webster was for some time a teacher, and Jacob Bailey, a graduate of Harvard, and afterwards rector of an Episcopal Church in Annapolis, N. S. In 1750 a colony from Kingston settled in Stevenstown (now Salisbury). During twenty-five years the enterprising people of Salisbury sent fifteen students through Dartmouth College, including the Websters, Ezekiel and Daniel, and a son of the first physician (Dr. Joseph Bartlett), who became Hon. Ichabod Bartlett, of Portsmouth.

In January, 1770, the town "Voted to give the money for which the school lands were sold to the commoners or proprietors to settle the dispute with Hampstead, etc." The commencement of the war in 1775 was a great injury to the prosperity of the schools and the churches. After many years the interest in education was revived.

"In 1826, Lieut. Thomas Elkins left by will $2000, $1000 for schools & $1000 for the support of the poor. He was the first (except Rev. Ward Clark) who left any legacy to the town. He was the son of a farmer, descended from one of the first settlers. He was a man of industry, integrity & economy." (C. Patten's MS.) Mr. Elkins had no child, and left about ten thousand dollars.

Mr. Peter French afterwards left a certain sum of money the income of which is to be devoted to the benefit of the academy, if that institution is kept open, under faithful teachers.

Peter French was born in Kingston, N. H., in 1788. His ancestors were originally English. His father, Henry French, came to Kingston in early life; married (1) Judith Jewell, (2) Anna Shepard, who was mother of Peter. He was brought up on the farm of two hundred acres owned by his father, and which he afterwards inherited; received his education principally by the private teaching of the Rev. Mr. Thayer, from whom he acquired a love of education which continued through life.

Shortly after arriving of age he married Mary Stevens, of Danville. They had one child, Henry, of brilliant intellectual powers. Great care was bestowed upon his education. He was prepared for college under Dr. Abbott, at Phillips' Exeter Academy, going thither when but twelve years old, and was graduated from Hanover; returned to Exeter, where he became a popular and able instructor until his premature death at twenty-six years of age. He was Mr. French's only child, and his death was keenly felt by him. Mrs. French died in 1839, and in April, 1840, Mr. French married Elizabeth, daughter of Benjamin and Abiah Kimball, of an old and reputable family of Kingston. Mr. French was always a farmer; his nature was kind, modest, and unobtrusive. He was always deeply interested in education and the prosperity of the young, and he and his amiable wife were always beloved by them, and their house ever their home. Many of the students of Kingston Academy (of which Mr. French was one of the incorporators) were boarded by them, and the kind interest and fatherly and motherly care manifested by them will bear fruit long generations hence. About 1840, Mr. French removed from the estate which he inherited to the place now occupied by Stephen Nichols, and as age advanced and he became feebler he sold that and purchased the place where Mrs. French now resides, and erected the house in which he lived till his death, which occurred July 4, 1870, enjoying the pleasant domestic life and the society of his amiable wife. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, his second wife was a Congregationalist, but no sectarianism ever marred their influence or the beauty of his noble life. He always shrank from official position, but was bound up in the cause of education. As evidence of that he left in his will a bequest of a tract of woodland, which was to be sold and invested in safe corporations, the interest to be applied to the payment of teachers in Kingston Academy, who should be a Methodist or member of some other evangelical denomination, etc. This land was sold for four thousand six hundred dollars, and after deducting expenses gave a permanent fund of three thousand dollars. This amount, given from an estate which inventoried not more than ten thousand dollars, shows the wonderful liberality of the gift and the giver. Mrs. French still survives, although in feeble health.

Kingston Academy.—The building was erected in 1819 at an expense of $1500. It was commenced under the patronage of the Methodist denomination, being, I think, the second institution of the kind under their management in New Hampshire. There was a hall finished over the school rooms, and after the old church became unfit for use the Methodist Society worshipped in this hall; but in a few years the control of the institution passed into the hands of a board of trustees of different denominations.

About the year 1856, by a mutual arrangement, the town took charge of the academy building and lot, enlarged and repaired the house, and continue to occupy more than half of it, while the trustees hold possession of two rooms on the first floor. This mixed ownership is not so desirable for either party concerned, and it is to be hoped that at some future period each party may become independent and be able to have a house upon its own premises. Still, with its meagre funds this school has been a great benefit to many of the young people of Kingston. It has afforded them opportunities to continue their education in branches which they could not study at the common schools.

I have not space to name here the prominent men who have studied in this institution. The list of teachers contains the names of many well-known public men. Ex-Governor Noyes has been named, Thomas W. Knox, the famous author of books of travel, and various others might be named.<sup>3</sup>

Notices of the Grantees (named in the charters) of Kingston, Aug. 6, 1694, and early settlers.—First, James Prescott, Sr., who came from Lincolnshire, England, and in 1665 settled in the part of Hampton now Hampton Falls, one and a half miles from the academy north on the road to Exeter. He married, in 1668, Mary Boulter, of Exeter, and had nine children: Joshua (2), born 1769, who went to Kingston before 1725.

James (2), born 1761, remained at Hampton Falls; married Maria Marston, and had Samuel (3), of Hampton Falls, the father of John, Joseph, and William.

Jonathan (2) settled in Kensington.

Mary (2), born in 1677, married, 1699, Jabez Coleman, who, with his son Joseph, was killed by Indians at Kingston, Sept. 4, 1724.

John (2), born 1681, married, 1701, Abi. Marston, and Nathaniel, who married Ann, sister of Abi. Marston.

James P. (1) was one of the first selectmen in Kingston, chosen March 2, 1695. He was an original member of the church in Kingston in 1725, and died

Nov. 23, 1728. For many years he had been a worthy citizen, and a member of the church in Hampton.

Thomas Philbrick, Jr. (3), (James<sup>2</sup>, Thomas<sup>3</sup>) born March 14, 1659, who in 1702 sold his property in Hampton to S. Chapman, and settled in Kingston, and had eleven children. His wife was Mchitable Ayres; married April 14, 1681. He died Jan. 1, 1712. He was an active, influential man.

Their son, Jedediah (4), born 1700, married, 1721, Mary Taylor, and had sons,—Jeremiah (5), born 1722, who married Mary Stevens, and died March, 1754, leaving three children; Samuel (5), born 1739, married, 1767, Sarah Sanborn, and died 1779, "a pious and useful man in the society."

Jedediah (4) was "representative of the town in the General Assembly of the province, captain of the town, town clerk, and in many respects a very useful and worthy leader of this society." He was in 1742 elected deacon of the church, and served till his death, March, 1754. Some of the descendants of this family remain in the vicinity, but many others are widely scattered over the country.

Samuel Dearborn was an early settler, constable in 1695, living in 1721.

Sergt. Ebenezer Webster (2), born 1st of August, 1667, was the son of Webster (1). Baptized, Ormsby, England, 20th of November, 1631. The father of Thomas died when he was three years old, and his mother married Deacon William Godfrey. They emigrated to Watertown, Mass., and between 1642 and 1648 removed to Hampton, where Godfrey died, 1671; his wife died in 1687. The son, Thomas Webb, married, November, 1657, Sarah (daughter of Thomas) Brewer, of Roxbury, and had five sons, three of whom, Thomas (2), born 1664; Ebenezer (2), and John (2), born 1673, are supposed to have settled in Kingston. The Websters were numerous and influential citizens. For twenty-one years out of sixty-two years they furnished representatives to the Legislature from Kingston. (See manuscript of Colcord Patten's history of Kingston.) Ebenezer W. (2) was a prominent man among the early settlers of Kingston. Sergt. Ebenezer (2) married, 25th of July, 1709, Hannah Judgkins, and had eight children. He died 1st of February, 1736, aged sixty-nine. His oldest son, Ebenezer (3), born 10th of October, 1714, married, 20th of July, 1738, Susan Batchelder, and had 1, Ebenezer (4), born 1739, in East Kingston, who married (1) — —.

He married (2) Abigail Eastman, lived in Salisbury, and had 1, Ezekiel (3) born 1780; 2, Daniel (5), born 18th of January, 1782 (D.C. 1801), the great statesman, whose life is written in the history of the United States.

The Thomas Webster named as grantee was probably brother of Ebenezer (2). Ebenezer (3) lived in East Kingston, and had several children.

Benjamin Sandburn (2), son of John (1<sup>2</sup>), who, with his widowed mother and grandfather, Stephen <sup>3</sup> Samuel Hubbard Stevens, born in East Kingston, Nov. 20, 1802 (D. C. 1836), was preceptor of Kingston Academy; married in Kingston, in 1840, Seraphina S. (daughter of Moses) Sanborn. He died at Concord, N. H., March 19, 1876. He was grandson of Col. Ebenezer Stevens, whose father, Maj. Ebenezer S., was an original settler of Kingston. Dr. John A. Fallette (D. C. 1857) was a teacher in the academy, studied medicine with Dr. Levi S. Bartlett, practiced in Kingston, removed to Boston. Mr. Elbridge G. Dalton was for some years a successful teacher in Kingston Academy. He afterwards taught in Exeter, removed to Philadelphia, studied medicine, and has since lived in Cincinnati, Ohio.

Bachelor, landed in Boston in June, 1632, at the age of twelve years. They removed to Lynn, and in 1638 to Hampton, where he married Mary, daughter of John Tuck, by whom he had ten children. The youngest, Benjamin (2), born Dec. 20, 1668, married (1) Sarah ———, married (2) Widow Margaret Moulton (daughter of Robert Page). I am not sure that he ever settled in Kingston, but it seems that his brother Jonathan (?) settled in the east part of the town, and that Tristram (3), son of his oldest brother, John, was a prominent business man, often in office, living in Kingston, on the Exeter road, where his descendants still remain. Rev. Peter Sanborn, of Reading (D. C. 1786), was his grandson, and Moses Sanborn, Esq., a well-known business man, was his great-grandson.

Nathaniel Sandburn is supposed to have been an older brother of Benjamin, born 1666, who married (1) Rebecca Prescott, and (2) Sarah ———, and had a large family. He was in 1695-96 town clerk of Kingston.

There was among the early settlers a John Sanborn, who married, 1706 or 1707, Mehitable Fifield, and had Tristram, born 1710, Abigail, and Paul, born Feb. 21, 1714-15. Also a Samuel Sanborn, and a Capt. Jonathan Sanborn, who died in 1741, and Jonathan Sanborn, Jr., whose families I have not the time and space to describe.

Gershom Elkins, a citizen of Hampton in 1680, may have been father of Moses Elkins, the first deacon of the church in Kingston. Gershom Elkins was selectman of Kingston in 1695, and is often named in the records till after 1721.

Henry Elkins was slain by the Indians in 1708.

Moses Elkins, from Hampton, came early to Kingston; married, Nov. 17, 1701, Aniah Shaw, and had seven sons and four daughters. The second son, Obadiah, born in 1708, who in 1731 married Abi French, and had Jacob, born in 1734; Obadiah, Jr., born in 1741; Peter, born in 1746; and Joseph, born in 1751.

Deacon Moses Elkins was chosen at the organization of the church in 1725. He died suddenly, May 10, 1737, on returning from the funeral of his pastor, Rev. Ward Clark.

Joseph Elkins (supposed), his eldest son, was chosen to fill his office in December, 1737.

Deacon Moses had also Ephraim, born in 1710, Henry, and Caleb.

Maj. Ebenezer Stevens, an early settler; married Dec. 5, 1710, Elis. Colcord, and had four sons,—(1) Benjamin, born Feb. 3, 1712 or 1713; (2) Col. Ebenezer, born June 10, 1715, married, first, 1736, Mary Colcord; second, 1768, Doley Stevens.

When seven years of age he was taken captive by the Indians and carried to Canada. When his father redeemed him, it is said, they demanded a higher price than for his companions, because he wore a better hat and better clothing than they did. He became a successful business man, and Stevenstown (now Salisbury) was first named for him. His sons were (1) Ebenezer, Jr. (Capt. Ebenezer Stevens), born in 1739; (2) John, born in 1770; (3) Moses, born in 1771; Peter Colcord, born in 1773; Paul, born in 1775. Col. Stevens died July 19, 1800.

Of his father, Maj. Ebenezer Stevens, who died Nov. 1, 1749, it is said "he was a very distinguished and useful citizen, and such was his integrity and benevolence that differences among the people were submitted to his decision with perfect confidence. He sustained many important functions, and discharged every duty with ability and faithfulness."

Capt. Ebenezer Stevens (eldest son of Col. Ebenezer Stevens), born in 1739, married, first, in 1760, Sarah Emerson; second, Sarah Stevens, and had twelve children,—Samuel, the eldest, born in April, 1761, and the youngest, a daughter, born in 1805. Capt. Stevens was chosen deacon in 1787.

Aaron, born in 1775.

Isaac.

Colcord, born Sept. 2, 1789, to whom we are indebted for much information respecting the early history of Kingston. The names of his children—

Hon. Wm. C. (mentioned on another page).

Ichabod B., a druggist in Boston.

Claudius B., of National Bank, State Street, Boston.

Ord P., of the firm of Fairbanks & Co., dealers in scales, Montreal.

Mehitable C., a teacher.

Jacob Garland, son of John, of Newbury and Hampton, married June 17, 1682, Rebecca Sedy, and had Jacob, born Oct. 26, 1682, and eleven others born in Hampton. In 1722, Jacob Garland, Sr., was a proprietor of Chester.

John Moulton, taxed in Hampton 1680, in Kensington 1721, and Daniel Moulton, probably a relative.

William Godfrey and Isaac Godfrey, from Hampton, may have been sons or grandsons of Deacon Godfrey, of Hampton, and related to the Websters.

In 1680, Isaac G. was taxed in Hampton, and in 1721 was a citizen of Kingston, was a selectman in Kingston in 1695.

John Mason, of Hampton in 1680, afterward in Kensington.

Of Francis Towle's origin I know nothing. One Francis Towle was among the early settlers of Chester.

The Sleeper family was one of the earliest and largest in Kingston. Thomas Sleeper, father of the family, was born in England about 1607, came to Hampton 1640, and died there July 30, 1696. He had seven children. His wife, "Johannah S., mother of Aaron<sup>2</sup>, died Kingston, 5th Feb., 1703," aged eighty.

Aaron (2), born in Hampton, Feb. 20, 1661; married (1) Elis. Shaw, May 23, 1682, and died in Kingston, May 9, 1732. They had seventeen children, the last five born in Kingston between March, 1701, and Sept. 15, 1708. She died Oct. 27, 1708. He married (2) Sarah, and had (18) Daniel (3), born May 9, 1715; (19) Edward (3), born Oct. 26, 1719, married Sept. 15, 1746, Anne Clongh, and had (1) John, 1746-47; (2) Sarah, 1750; (3) Jonathan, Feb. 28, 1754; (4) Ann, 1762; (5) Hannah, 1767. "Edward Sleeper," died in Kingston, 16 Mar. 1811. Act. 97 yrs. & 1 mo."

The Bean Family (v. Lancaster, Hist. Gilmanton).—John (1), from Scotland, lost his wife on the passage; married an Irish girl who accompanied them; settled in Exeter before 1661, and died. Their children: John (2), born Aug. 15, 1661, died 1666; Daniel; Samuel; John (2), born Oct. 13, 1668; Margaret; James (2); Jeremy (2), born April 20, 1675; Elizabeth.

James (2), of Kingston, married, December, 1697, Sarah Bradley, and had six children, born in Kingston: Benjamin (3), born May 5, 1699; Margaret (3), 1702; Joseph (3), Oct. 17, 1704, who married, 1734, Miriam Folsom, and had seven children, died 1753; Jeremy (3), born April 9, 1707, whose son John settled in Newmarket; Samuel, born Jan. 11, 1710-11; Catherine, born Aug. 2, 1714.

Joseph (3) and Miriam Bean had, born in Kingston (v. Records), Joseph, Jr. (4), born April, 1738; Nathaniel (4), November, 1739; Mary, 1741; Jonathan (4), Aug. 31, 1743; Daniel (4), Sept. 30, 1745; Folsom (4), August, 1747; Miriam (4), born July, 1749.

In 1725, Samuel Bean and John were heads of families in Kingston Parish or Society, which included a part of what is now Brentwood.

The family was numerous, and sent out settlers into Chester, Candia, Gilmanton, Sanbornton, and many other towns.

The following professional men have been natives or citizens of Kingston. In 1705 the town voted a lot of land to a Dr. Dale, but he probably did not remain long.

One Simeon (or Simon) Brown, in 1739 a citizen of Kingston, is supposed to have practiced medicine here at an early date; and a Dr. Abraham Green was living in Kingston in 1746. He died in 1751.

The Hon. Josiah Bartlett, M.D., was perhaps more widely known than any other citizen of Kingston. He was great-grandson of the emigrant Richard Bartlett (1), who came to Newbury, Mass., in 1635, and died in 1647. His son, Richard (2), born in 1621, died in 1698, leaving a son Richard (3), whose sixth son, Stephen, born in 1691, was the father of Dr. Josiah (5), born in Amesbury, Mass., Nov. 21, 1728, who married Jan. 15, 1754, his cousin, Mary Bartlett, of Newton, and had twelve children. In 1750 he settled in Kingston, and soon acquired celebrity by his successful treatment of the throat distemper, so prevalent and so fatal. In 1765 he engaged in political affairs, and became very popular and influential. In 1776-78 he was a member of the Continental Congress. He is said to have been the first man who signed the Declaration of Independence. His biography may be found in the first volume of "The Lives of the Signers of the Declaration," etc. He was the first Governor of New Hampshire. For near ten years he held the office of chief justice of the Court of Common Pleas or of the Superior Court. He died May 19, 1795, aged sixty-five years.

His eldest son, Dr. Levi Bartlett, born Sept. 3, 1763, succeeded him in practice and became for many years an active politician. After his death, in 1828, his son, Levi S. Bartlett, born in 1811, inherited the homestead and continued the practice of medicine till his death in 1865. He married Aroline E., daughter of Moses Sanborn.

From the settlement of the town till 1775, or later, the obstetric art was practiced by a class of experienced matrons whose names are not in the records.

The Gale family for three generations furnished physicians for Kingston and vicinity. Dr. Amos Gale, Sr., practiced more than forty years, and Dr. Amos Gale, Jr., a popular and influential man, had an extensive practice, and was for twenty-three years town clerk. He was born in 1756, and died in 1824. His sons, Dr. Levi B. Gale and Dr. Ezra B. Gale, followed him, the latter continuing in practice till his sudden death, which was on the Sabbath in the church. In 1844 he was chosen deacon. He was called "The Beloved Physician."

Dr. Thomas Bassett commenced practice here about 1827, Dr. G. W. Sanborn in 1856, and Dr. T. O. Reynolds in 1870.

Kingston has sent out quite a large number of physicians. Dr. Josiah Bartlett had a second son, Josiah, born in 1768, who practiced in Stratham, and Ezra, born in 1770.

Dr. Amos Gale, Jr., had five sons, all physicians,—Levi B., and Ezra B., above mentioned, and Dr. Amos Gale, of Manchester; Dr. Josiah B. Gale, of Lowell; and Dr. Madison Gale.

"It is believed that no two families in our country have furnished more physicians than the Bartlett and the Gale families of Kingston."

Rev. Nathaniel Webster, graduated (Harvard College) in 1769; died in 1830. For many years he was pastor of the First Church in Biddford, Me.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

DR. THOMAS BASSETT.

In early English history the Bassett family is prominently mentioned as important actors. During the reign of Henry III. (A. D. 1262), according to Hume's History of England, we find Philip Basset appointed to the highly important position of a "justiciary" of the realm. Lord John Basset and Ralph Basset were also men of mark in the fierce civil contests and agitations of that period. The first-known American ancestor of Dr. Thomas Bassett was Rev. (John?) Bassett, his great-grandfather. He was a Baptist clergyman, and was driven from Massachusetts Colony with Roger Williams. He afterwards became pastor of a church at Providence, R. I. His son John married Jan. 25, 1757, Sarah Shepard, daughter of Thomas Shepard, who was son of Jacob and Mercy Shepard, of Dorchester, or Wrentham, Mass., and settled in Sharon, Mass., whence he moved about 1780 to what is now Goffstown, N. H. He afterwards went to Weare, N. H., where he died in 1810, about eighty. He was a tall, robust man, of great powers of endurance, and was highly esteemed for his probity and strength of character. He reared a family of ten children, of whom Thomas was second son and fourth child. This Thomas was intended for the ministry, and prepared for college under instruction of Rev. Thomas Gair, settled minister of the Baldwin Street Baptist Church of Boston. On the death of Mr. Gair, in 1790, he relinquished all idea of a professional life on account of the poor state of his health, and engaged in merchandising in Atkinson, N. H. He after a few years removed to Deerfield (South road), and for a number of years was merchant there. He moved to Londonderry about 1804, was a trader there also, and was a resident of that town until his death in 1816. He was a lifetime member of the Baptist Church, a Republican in political belief, never cared for office, was a quiet, reserved, unostentatious man, very exemplary in his conduct and strict in his morals. He served his day and generation well, and stood high in the estimation of the community. He married Susanna McGregor, of Derry, N. H. They had five children, of whom Thomas and David (who reside in Derry) are the only ones now living.

Dr. Thomas Bassett, son of Thomas and Susanna (McGregor) Bassett, was born in Deerfield, N. H., Aug. 12, 1797. His mother was a descendant of Rev. James McGregor, who emigrated from Scotland to Ireland, and subsequently with a number of others to America, and commenced the settlement of Londonderry, N. H. At the age of fifteen Thomas began the studies preparatory to entering college under the instruction of his uncle, Rev. David McGregor, the settled minister of Bedford, N. H., and lived with him there three years. He then entered the Pinkerton Academy in Derry, under the tuition of Mr. Samuel Burnham, and remained at school there until the death of his father in 1816. At this time, finding himself destitute of pecuniary means, he could no longer pursue his collegiate studies, and resorted to school-keeping to obtain the object he then most desired, an education. He began teaching in Manchester, gave unusual satisfaction, and taught in every district in the town save one. After passing three years as teacher, he in 1821 entered the office of Dr. George Farrar, of Derry, as a student of medicine, remaining there till the fall of 1822, when he entered the private classes of Professors Mussey, Oliver, and Dana at Dartmouth College, and continued under their tuition until he had finished the regular course of medical instruction, and received his degree of Doctor of Medicine in 1824. In March of the next year he established himself as a physician and surgeon in Kingston, N. H., where he has since been resident. Dr. Bassett was elected in 1826, and in 1837 became a Fellow of the New Hampshire Medical Society, in which he has been censor and counselor. He has been honored with the office of justice of the peace, and has held the position of brigade major and inspector in the First Brigade of New Hampshire militia. He married, in 1828, Miranda, daughter of Samuel Spofford, and granddaughter of Maj. Jacob Peaslee. She was born in Kingston, where her ancestors had resided for several generations.

Dr. Bassett is Republican in politics. Although reared in the strongest orthodox creeds, he is a pronounced Universalist in religion, and one of the strongest supporters of that faith. He was a constituent member of the First Universalist Church of Kingston, and it is largely indebted to him for its prosperity. He gave five hundred dollars towards the construction of the church edifice, thus freeing it from debt, and the beautiful sacramental service was his gift. Dr. Bassett has been a hard-working, successful practitioner in his chosen field, and has enjoyed the confidence of the ablest of his medical brethren. Positive in his nature, with an iron constitution to sustain his efforts, he has rarely failed to accomplish any object he has sought, and has built for himself a handsome competency. Of progressive ideas and energetic character, he has invariably performed the duties of his different appointments with equal energy and ability.

AMOS C. CHASE.

The Chase family came originally from England, three brothers, William, Thomas, and Aquila, being the immigrants in the early days of the colony, and from these have sprung the numerous families of that name throughout the country. Thomas and Aquila settled in Hampton and Newbury. Charles Chase, of the Aquila line, born April 30, 1755, grandfather of Amos C. Chase, was born in Seabrook, N. H., and was a hatter by trade. He came to Kingston, pursued his trade, married Mary, daughter of William Calef, in 1787, became a lifetime resident of the town, and had seven children attaining maturity,—Nathaniel, Charles, Samuel, Amos, Merriam, Sarah (Mrs. Aaron Patten), Nancy (Mrs. Moody Colby). He lived to a good age, was of a strong physique and vigorous constitution, was very social and genial, loved a good joke, and played many a rich practical one. His son Amos was born in Kingston, April 2, 1801, had limited advantages of education, having to work hard in the carriage-shop when very young. He became a carriage-maker, and followed it in a small way all his life. He married, July 4, 1827, Hannah P., daughter of Josiah Hook and Sarah Whittier, his wife. (This Mrs. Hook was a fair type of the class of old-fashioned New England women now almost extinct, robust, energetic, going to Newburyport, Mass. (twenty miles), to market, and far on her way at sunrise. She had comfortable wealth for those days, and as her husband died young, brought up her four children without deprivations, and trained them well in life's duties. She lived to be ninety years and three months old, keeping her health and faculties well preserved to the time of her death in August, 1869.) Mr. Chase purchased the place where his son Amos C. now resides, and farmed somewhat in connection with his trade. He was a quiet, unostentatious man, a good citizen, always industrious, never idle, and provided a good living for his family, and at his death left a small property of three thousand dollars, the result of his economy and thrift. He was highly esteemed in his community, and when he died, aged seventy-two, Dec. 29, 1873, he was universally mourned. Mrs. Chase survived him, living now, in her seventy-second year, with her son, Amos C., on the place so many years her residence. Their children were William H., now of Dakota Territory; Josiah H., for twenty-five years merchant in Minneapolis, Minn.; Amos Charles; Sarah E. (Mrs. Stephen F. Nichols); Isaac H., merchant in Deadwood, Dak.; Mary S. (Mrs. James M. Philbrick). Of his four sons, none have ever used liquor or tobacco. This shows the power of a thoughtful and intelligent mother in training children aright.

Amos C. Chase was born in Kingston, N. H., March 10, 1833. He received the educational advantages of the public and academic schools of Kingston; was early taught to work, and as soon as he was large enough to stand on a box and shave a wagon-spoke he was set at that labor. From that day to the present his life has been one of activity. When about thirteen he worked for several days digging and picking up potatoes at twenty-five cents per day, and to this occurrence may be traced his future success. Twenty-five cents represented hours of labor, exhaustive toil, and was not to be thrown lightly away, and on his young mind this small sum was impressed with a force and an importance sufficient to make it and its lesson alike permanent. Until fifteen he worked with an older brother on the farm, then went to learn painting with Benjamin Cilley, who gave him long days of work, and at last paid him not a dollar for his season's labor. The only money he ever received came in this way: All hands had a holiday, were "going to the beach." A particular hard piece of work was to be done at a specified time, and Amos was asked by Mr. Cilley if he would stay and do it, offering to well reward him. Amos accepted, worked at the disagreeable task all day, performed a dollar and a half's worth of work, received Mr. Cilley's praises and one-half dollar in money. The next year Joseph B. Cilley hired him of his father, paying five dollars per week, he to board at home. Thinking this not sufficient pay, and getting no money himself, Amos was going to quit, when Mr. Cilley made a private bargain with him, adding one dollar per week to his wages, this addition to be his pocket-money.

He continued working for Mr. Cilley summers until he was twenty years old, yearly increasing his wages, and until eighteen attending school winters, his father giving him his time when twenty. He remained with Mr. Cilley the next year at less pay to acquire more knowledge of painting, and on becoming of age commenced work for himself as a painter, and for the three succeeding years laid up five hundred dollars per year. About this time we find him interspersing his painting with carriage-making, building at first three or four wagons a year, and steadily, year by year, increasing the number up to thirty per annum by the time of his thirty-third birthday, and, with the exception of one or two years, had yearly added to his capital. In 1866 he devoted himself entirely to carriage-making, began to enlarge his business, and it from that time has assumed importance, and rapidly and steadily increased, until it to-day is the leading manufactory of Kingston, and one of the recognized manufactories of the county, giving employment to many individuals. For the last fifteen years Mr. Chase has made an average of three hundred per year, principally "Democrats" (a two-seated light wagon), Cou-cord wagons, and Ives' buggies. In the conduct of his business Mr. Chase has shown first-class financial ability. Possessing practical knowledge of every department, he has steadily adhered to the policy of using good materials and working them with skillful workmanship into substantial and durable carriages. In this he has shown wisdom. His work has given satisfaction, his reputation for reliability is thoroughly established, and his name as maker is a guarantee of good work in Boston and among leading dealers. He has a steady and increasing demand for his carriages, the celebrated William P. Sargeant, of Boston, being among his best customers. This is the result of true representations and honest work, and dealers who buy of him once invariably become steady customers. Thus in a few years, by strict attendance to business, integrity, and honest dealing, the poor boy has become a man of prominence in his line, high in esteem of his townsmen, and a much wider circle of acquaintance, and in possession of a handsome competency, and is now in the prime of his life, with faculties and energies in the full maturity of strength, capable of accomplishing much before the twilight of life begins to close around him.

Mr. Chase married Sept. 29, 1858, Hattie E., daughter of Rev. L. Draper, a Methodist clergyman. They had two children, Alma F. and Clara N. (Mrs. J. M. Sanborn, of East Kingston). Mrs. Chase died Dec. 2, 1862. He married May 3, 1866, Emily A., daughter of Haynes W. Belden, Esq., a lawyer in country practice at East Havens, Vt., where she was born. Their children are Charles Q., Hattie E., Harry E., and Howard. In politics Mr. Chase has been a prominent Republican from the organization of that party, an active and valuable worker for its success, a leader in his town, and has served several years on the Republican State Central Committee. His devotion to his business has prevented his acceptance of many offices which would gladly have been conferred on him, but in 1877 he was elected to represent his town in the State Legislature, and in 1880 was called by his district to serve as State senator. He was placed in nomination in the fall of 1882 for the important office of councillor, and a Republican nomination in his district is equivalent to an election. He served as president of Kingston Academy until he would serve no longer. Of unusually acute perceptions, of quick decision and great rapidity of action, Mr. Chase is one who will always make his presence felt in whatever sphere he may be placed, and from his integrity and ability all trusts will be faithfully and honorably discharged. He has never yet failed in accomplishing any object for which he has striven. Those who know him best speak highest in praise of his rare social qualities, his kindness of heart, his business abilities, and the promptitude and dispatch with which he attends to duties devolving on him. A member of the Masonic fraternity, the bands of brotherhood in his case encircle all who need assistance and any cause demanding aid. He is one of the most liberal supporters of the Congregational Church, and responds with alacrity to any call for help in educational, public, or private matters. None of the men of his section stand higher in the esteem of community, and his town gives him a very complimentary vote whenever his name appears for suffrage.

LUTHER D. PEASLEE.

Luther Dana Peaslee, son of Daniel and Elizabeth (Secomb) Peaslee, was born in Kingston, N. H., Aug. 12, 1812. His grandfather, Maj. Jacob Peaslee, whose ancestors were Scotch Highlanders, kept the old tavern four miles from Kingston Plains, in what is now South Kingston, from 1776 to 1830, which was about the period of his death. He married, first, Martha Chellis, and had four sons and three daughters, and all settled in Kingston,—Daniel, John (married Hannah Peaslee, of Newton, and had two children), Moses (died, aged thirty-eight years), Lydia (married Samuel Spofford, and reared a family of four children, of whom Mrs. Dr. Bassett was one), Martha (married an Eastman, and had one child, Jacob P., who became prominent in railroad construction in various parts of the United States), Hannah (married Jonathan Bartlett, and had eight children, one of whom, James M. Bartlett, now owns and occupies the old homestead of Maj. Peaslee). Maj. Peaslee married, second, a Mrs. Clement. They had no offspring. During the depreciation of prices at the Revolutionary war he bought a large amount of land at merely nominal figures, and thus became an extensive real estate owner. This property rapidly increased in value, and made him very wealthy for those days. He was owner of grist- and saw-mills, and employed many men. He resembled in personal appearance and traits of character Andrew Jackson. He stood at the head and front of all matters of public interest in his town, represented Kingston in the State Legislature, was of social disposition, a great practical joker, a liberal contributor to good works, despised anything like a sham, and was universally a favorite with the people. Of vigorous physique, he lived many years, dying at the good old age of eighty-eight.

Daniel Peaslee, his son, was born about 1777, and was reared a farmer. Like his father, he was always in public affairs as selectman, representative, etc., and was largely engaged in lumbering, getting out many frames for buildings and ship timber, which his teams hauled to Amesbury, Salisbury, and Newburyport, Mass. Active and energetic in everything, he accomplished much. He was captain of a cavalry troop, in which he took great pride. Very dutiful to his parents, he was always ready to relieve suffering, especially that of widows and the fatherless. He married, about 1804, Elizabeth, daughter of Simmons and Mary (Tappan) Secomb, of Newburyport, and settled near the old homestead, on the place now occupied by his son Simmons. He resided there until his death, and here were born nine children,—Sarah T. (married Humphrey Nichols, of Merrimac, Mass.), Martha C. (married Harrison Pillsbury, of Sandown), Simmons S. (married Mary Eads, of Lowell, Mass.) and Jacob C. (now of Danville, married Juliette Page, of Danville, and has two children, twins), Luther D., John C. (deceased), Mary S. (married Dr. N. K. Kelly, of Plaistow), Samuel S. (died, aged three years), and Carrie E. Capt. Peaslee was a man for his period, and filled well his station in life. He died April 10, 1832.

Luther D. Peaslee passed his childhood on the home farm, received academic education at Atkinson and Haverhill, taught school two terms, and, not liking farm life, went with Gideon Webster, about 1833, to Holly, N. Y., and engaged in merchandising under the firm of "Webster & Peaslee." The same firm built a store at Kendall's Corners. After three years, Mr. Peaslee purchased Mr. Webster's interest, continued trade eight months, sold out, and returned to Kingston. The young merchant showed the adaptation to trade which has been manifested so successfully during his entire life, and was greatly prospered. The same season of his coming East he purchased a stock of goods in North Reading, Mass., in company with Dr. Thomas Bassett, and traded there six weeks as Peaslee & Bassett, running store, hotel, post-office, etc., and doing a heavy business, then sold out, clearing two thousand dollars on investment. Returning to Kingston in 1840, pursued the same business there. After eighteen months Mr. Peaslee bought out the doctor, and for over forty years was in business as a merchant, and prominently connected with the business interests of Kingston, and its leading merchant. (It is worthy of mention that for thirty-eight years he had for confidential clerk one of the honored and most highly valued citizens of the town, Samuel Webster, Esq.)

Shortly after his purchase of Dr. Bassett's interest, Mr. Peaslee erected the store so long his place of trade, which Baskie Brothers, his successors, now occupy. At the solicitation of the Masonic fraternity he added a third story to the store, and made a commodious and pleasant hall, where that brotherhood holds its sessions. Mr. Peaslee has not confined himself to merchandising, but has been largely interested in farming, lumbering, and real estate operations in New Hampshire, Iowa, and Wisconsin. For three years he, with William C. Webster, did extensive lumbering business in Wisconsin, with firm-name of Peaslee & Webster. In all his varied operations Mr. Peaslee has manifested great business talent, has uniformly been successful financially, and is in the possession of valuable real estate and a handsome property, largely the result of his foresight, shrewd management, and prudence, and to-day stands high in the estimation of the best people of his town. For over twenty years he was postmaster, has been town treasurer, and represented his town in the State Legislature of 1881-82. He was for years trustee of Kingston Academy, and has taken great interest in the cause of education. He has also been a liberal contributor to the Congregational Church, and always could be relied upon to assist in any measure tending to advance education, morality, or the improvement of his neighborhood, of which he may justly be called one of the solid and most reliable men.

He married, first, November, 1846, Charlotte F., daughter of Jacob and Elizabeth (Hoyt) Sanborn, of Kingston. (This Mrs. Sanborn died May 11, 1882, in Beloit, Wis., aged ninety-six years and six months.) Their only child died in infancy, and Mrs. Peaslee shortly followed, her decease occurring May 13, 1848. He married, second, Mary S., daughter of Col. Nath. Clark, of Plaistow, and Betsey Brickett, his wife. Their children were Grace B., Charlotte F., Carrie Lillie, and Mary C. (died aged six years). Mrs. Mary Peaslee died June 28, 1878, aged forty-four years. Mrs. Peaslee was a very superior woman, highly cultured, an amiable companion, a loving mother, fond of society, and at home in society centres.

Mr. Peaslee to-day has retired from active business, is carrying his years lightly, with a pleasant philosophy, and with his advancing years cheered by the companionship of his lovely daughter and a beloved sister, Carrie, he may well feel that his lines have fallen in pleasant places.

T. O. REYNOLDS, M.D.

Among the representative active and progressive physicians of Rockingham County none are more worthy a brief notice than Dr. Reynolds, and none have attained to the position where we find him to-day through more changes or greater disadvantages. Nothing but a resolute will coupled with determined and persistent mental effort, could have accomplished the task.

Thomas Osgood Reynolds, M.D., son of Rev. Thomas F. and Mary (Currier) Reynolds, was born in Chester, N. H., Dec. 24, 1842; received common school advantages, which were supplemented by attendance at Chester Academy. When not yet twenty years of age, Aug. 26, 1862, he enlisted as a private soldier in Company I, Eleventh Regiment New Hampshire Volunteers, and went at once to participate in the active service of the war of the "great Rebellion." For one year he served in the ranks, was in numerous engagements, and twice wounded,—first severely in the left side by a piece of shell, Dec. 13, 1862, at the battle of Fredericksburg, from the effects of which he has ever since suffered; second, slightly in the leg by a Minié-ball, at Jackson, Miss., in July, 1863. On returning to Kentucky from the Department of the Gulf, after the campaign following the fall of Vicksburg, he was detailed as clerk in the General Hospital at Camp Nelson, Oct. 24, 1863, and almost immediately thereafter promoted to chief clerk, and commenced the study of medicine under A. C. Rankin, Assistant Surgeon U. S. A. He continued his medical studies under private instruction, working with that energy that always insures success. His rapidity of execution and earnestness of purpose and his fidelity to every trust won him many friends, and the time passed pleasantly and profitably until the close of the war, when, May 24, 1865, he was mustered out of service at Lexington, Ky. Soon after this he was examined by a board of army surgeons, and received an appointment as assistant surgeon by contract from the United States government, with rank and emoluments of first lieutenant, and entered at once upon duty at his old station, Camp Nelson, which was the headquarters of the Freedmen's Bureau for that department. Here he remained until the camp was discontinued (December, 1865), when he returned to New Hampshire. After a stay of only one week our young surgeon went to New York City, entered Bellevue Medical College as a student, and also took the regular spring course of study at Long Island College Hospital, and special instructions from the celebrated Prof. Austin Flint. From New York City he went to Albany Medical College, and completed his medical studies and received his degree from that institution Dec. 24, 1866, his twenty-fourth birthday.

The year after graduation Dr. Reynolds passed in extensive travel through the Western States, and on his returning East was induced to enter practice at Port Huron, Mich., but the malarious climate drove him eastward after but three months' residence. He came to New Hampshire, Jan. 8, 1869, and in February, 1870, established himself as physician and surgeon in Kingston, where he is now located. He married, July 13, 1870, Miss M. Fanny, daughter of William and Mary A. (Holman) Smith, of Raymond, N. H. Her ancestors were of English extraction, but for several generations New Hampshire people. They have one child, Mabel.

Dr. Reynolds has pre-eminent natural qualifications for a physician. Of quick perception, keen powers of analysis, and rapid reasoning faculties, he is peculiarly successful in diagnosis and in tracing the progress of disease from effect to cause. He has been appreciated by the community, has been a member of the New Hampshire Medical Society since 1872, and has a large, successful, and remunerative practice. Socially Dr. Reynolds is an unusually pleasant companion. He has a great command of language, and a fund of original wit and humor that makes his society ever pleasant. He is of positive nature, throws his soul into everything he undertakes, has all the Scotch perseverance under difficulties, and rarely fails to accomplish his purpose. He is broad and liberal in his views, and in harmony with the most progressive minds of the age. He has never ceased to be a student, and from his very nature he can never cease his investigations while his mind retains the power of thought. He gives promise of an unusually brilliant future. Politically he is a Republican. He is prominent in educational matters, was for five years a member of the board of trustees of Kingston Academy, and its president in 1880. He was made a mason of "Ion" Lodge, No. 301, Potts' Mills, Ky., in 1864; was senior warden of Gideon Lodge, F. and A. M., No. 84, Kingston, in 1876-77, secretary in 1878, worthy master in 1879, '80, '81, and representative to the Grand Lodge in 1882.

JOSEPH JUDKINS.

As early as 1725, Benjamin and Samuel Judkins, brothers, were residents of the town of Kingston. Samuel had two sons,—Joel, born Sept. 25, 1712, and John, born Feb. 8, 1719. Samuel died Feb. 23, 1741. Joel, his son, married Mehitabel Calkins, Jan. 1, 1755. Their children were Samuel, born June 8, 1736; Moses, born Feb. 3, 1738; Aner, born Sept. 11, 1739; Leonard, born September, 1741 (went to Salisbury); Joseph, born Aug. 23, 1743; Abi, born Aug. 9, 1745; Mehitabel, born May 23, 1747, died 1749; Benjamin, born April 18, 1749; Henry, born Dec. 5, 1750, died Oct. 20, 1825; Caleb, born April 16, 1753. John, the second son of Samuel, married Esther Sweat, in November, 1750. Their children were John, born 1753; Stephen, born 1756; Elisha, born 1758; and Samuel, born 1760.

Henry Judkins, son of Joel, married Mary Barnard. Their children were Hannah, Mary, Abigail, Esther, Henry, Joel, and Mahitable. Henry, their oldest son, and grandson of Joel Judkins, married Lydia Brown, Nov. 28, 1811. Their children were S. B., born July 23, 1812, died July 8, 1877; Louisa S., born Oct. 10, 1814, died Oct. 25, 1825; and Joseph. Henry Judkins died June 20, 1839. Lydia, his wife, died Jan. 13, 1819.

Joseph Judkins, son of Henry, was born at the old family homestead in Kingston, Jan. 16, 1817. He received a district school education, supplemented by a short attendance at Kingston Academy. His early years were passed on the farm. When about nineteen he left home and apprenticed himself to learn carpentering, but owing to the declining health of his father he was soon recalled home to assist his brother in conducting the farm, the entire duties of which devolved upon them. There was considerable indebtedness upon it, but the two brothers, by harmoniously uniting their efforts to that end, soon succeeded in freeing the old home from the thralldom of debt, after which they divided the farm between them, yet continued to live under the same roof which had sheltered them from boyhood. They also had a grist-mill, from which considerable revenue was derived, and which they owned and conducted jointly, one taking charge one week, the other the next.

Joseph Jenkins

Joseph married Hannah E. Blake, Sept. 15, 1846. Their children are Henry E., born July 23, 1847, died Dec. 1, 1865; Enoch B., born March 6, 1850; Arthur R., born March 30, 1859. Mrs. Judkins died June 10, 1863, and Mr. Judkins married for his second wife Abbie S. Thynge, Oct. 16, 1865. By this marriage there are no children. Enoch B. married Nellie A. True, Sept. 24, 1873. They have one child, Etta M., born Dec. 21, 1878.

Mr. Judkins is not only a good representative of one of the worthy old families of Kingston, esteemed by all who know him, but is a representative man in his chosen sphere, agriculture, being one of the most diligent, careful, and energetic farmers in town, and a man whose character is above reproach. He is a member of the Congregational Society, and is liberal in his support of all good causes. A Republican in politics, he has never swerved from his allegiance to its principles. He has been honored by his townsmen with the responsible positions of town treasurer and selectman; has been agent for thirty years of Rockingham Farmers' Mutual Fire Insurance Company of Exeter. He was also a director of the same company, and held that position for twenty years.

While Mr. Judkins has been quite successful in business, he has not been miserly in hoarding money, but has ever deemed it well expended when laid out in the improvement of his mind or productive travel. He was one of the first to attend the Centennial Exposition in Philadelphia in 1876, and extended his tour to the south and prominent historical places. He is the possessor of a beautiful home on the old estate, and is passing down towards the twilight of life with the happy consciousness of having passed his entire life in honest toil, and the reflection that he has done no man wrong, and secure in the love of family and acquaintance.

DANIEL AND JOSEPH B. WADLEIGH.

Among the most prominent of the pioneer families of Kingston were the Wadleigh and the Sleeper families, and the sole male representative to-day in the town is Daniel Wadleigh. His grandfather, Daniel Wadleigh, is the first of which we have sufficient information to give dates of birth, death, etc. He was born Sept. 21, 1758. He was a positive man, unwaveringly a Democrat, was often in office, selectman, justice, etc., a great man for the drawing of wills, deeds, and other legal documents, was the legal adviser of his townspeople, and universally was known as "Squire Wadleigh." He was a man of solid worth and wealth; married Dolly Bartlett (born June 16, 1751) on March 20, 1788. Their children were John, born Jan. 10, 1789; Joseph, born Oct. 30, 1790; Daniel, born Aug. 14, 1793; Hannah, born June 26, 1797, died

Sept. 12, 1800. He died in the full maturity of life, Jan. 31, 1813.

Aaron Sleeper, the English emigrant, had nineteen children, settled in what became Kingston in a very early historic period, and endured all the trials of pioneer life and dangers of savage warfare, and despite the Indians made a farm of many broad acres, which during the years of civilization have descended from generation to generation of the family, and erected the house where, it is said, the first town-meetings of Kingston were held, filled well his place among the hardy pioneers, and departed hence at a hale old age. His son Edward, born on his father's farm, Oct. 26, 1719, was a Quaker, married Anna Clough, born Jan. 3, 1722, had children,—John, Sarah, Jonathan, Ann, Aaron, Abigail Hannah. He lived to be ninety-three, was a splendid specimen of physical manhood, a large land-owner, and one of the most prominent and wealthiest men in his section. He was king's collector of taxes for years in Hawke, comprising the territory now known as Kingston, East Kingston, Danville, and Sandown.

His son Jonathan, born Jan. 28, 1754, married Mary Clark, March 24, 1785. He was a farmer, and a very successful one. He attended diligently to his farm, was industrious, economical, and prudent, left all public honors and duties to others, and quietly pursued the even tenor of his life. His only child and inheritor of his wealth was Anna, born in 1798, who married Joseph Wadleigh, above mentioned. Joseph Wadleigh had a common-school education, became a farmer and a blacksmith, married Anna Sleeper, had five children,—Jonathan S., born March 10, 1817; Daniel, died young; Hannah, born Sept. 10, 1820; Nancy, born Aug. 18, 1822; and Daniel, who is the sole survivor. Mr. Wadleigh died April 21, 1826, when his youngest son was but two years old. The great responsibility of bringing up a family and attending to a large estate (for this section) devolved entirely upon his widow, who proved equal to the emergency, and is now living in robust health and wonderfully-preserved faculties of body and mind at eighty-four years of age. Her memory of olden times is clear and distinct, and nothing pleases her more than to live over the years of the past and tell the tale to an appreciative listener. Her closing years are being passed on the very spot of her birth, and where her son also resides. She has been for many years a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Daniel Wadleigh, son of Joseph and Anna, was born on the old Sleeper homestead, where he now lives, March 1, 1824. He had advantages of public schools and Kingston Academy in acquiring an education, became a farmer, and always remained with his mother. As he came into manhood he engaged quite extensively in lumbering, getting out large quantities of wood and lumber. Like both his paternal and maternal ancestors, he is unswervingly a Democrat. He has held several town offices, and represented Kingston in the State Legislatures of 1874-75. In old militia days he was a member of the Seventh Regiment, and was successively private, sergeant, ensign, lieutenant, and captain. He is a man representing both inherited and acquired property, and one who, when his word is given, holds it as inviolable as his bond. He is proud, and justly proud, of his ancestry, from whom he considers it an honor to be descended. He married Maria E., daughter of Benj. Hoyt, of Dover, N. H., Dec. 24, 1854. She died Oct. 26, 1856, leaving no children.

Daniel Wadleigh, son of Daniel and Polly (Bartlett) Wadleigh, was born Aug. 14, 1793. He learned the blacksmith trade of his father, and also became a farmer, and a strong, vigorous, resolute man. He held a captain's commission in the light infantry, militia, and was called always "Captain Daniel." He took great interest in his soldiery, and often entertained them, and was much beloved by them. He knew nothing of illness, working hard at either his trade or on his farm until his last sickness, which ended his days July 31, 1862. He was loving and kind as a husband and a father, was diligent in his business, and successful in the acquisition of property. He married Sally, daughter of John and Betsey (Kimball) Davis. She was born within one mile of her present residence, March 12, 1808, and was married April 11, 1839. She had been all her life a hard-working woman, of more than ordinary executive ability. Left a widow twenty years ago, she has continued in charge of her husband's farm, and under her management it has done well. She is in comfortable circumstances. Her children were Elizabeth C. and Joseph B. Elizabeth was educated at Kingston Academy and the seminary at Sanbornton, and was a highly-prized teacher for years. Shortly before her death, which occurred June 13, 1874, she married William Davis, of Hampstead. Joseph B., born on the homestead of his father, where his mother now resides, was reared a farmer, had common-school education, to which was added instruction at Kingston Academy. He remained on the farm, working it, making improvements, building new buildings, and otherwise adding to its value until his removal to his present residence in Kansas, where he is quite extensively engaged in lumbering. Like his father, he is Democratic in politics. These two, representing one of the oldest pioneer families of Kingston, are the sole male representatives of their respective branches, and the Wadleigh name in this town can be continued only through them, and neither have married.

D. L. GOODWIN.

Daniel L. Goodwin, son of John B. and Dorothy (Marden) Goodwin, was born in Kingston, N. H., May 9, 1839. His great-grandfather, Daniel<sup>1</sup>, and grandfather, Daniel<sup>2</sup> (a soldier in 1812), were both born in Newton, and were of the same family as the Goodwins of Portsmouth and Massachusetts. Daniel, born in 1789, was a cooper and a small farmer; married Sarah Heath, settled first in Newton, afterwards in Kingston, near Newton Junction, where he died in April, 1876. He had children,—John B., Samuel, Hannah, Mary, Henry, Frank, Thomas, William, Abby, Elizabeth. John B. had a limited common-school education, learned the shoemaker's trade, married Dorothy, daughter of Thomas and Hannah (Hunt) Marden in 1836, settled in the west part of Kingston, where he now resides. He had children,—Daniel (died in infancy), Daniel Lewis, John T., Hiram F. (deceased), Samuel (when sixteen he shipped as seaman in the United States marine service for one year, enlisted in the Sixtieth Massachusetts Infantry in 1861 for one hundred days, then in the Eighteenth New Hampshire volunteers, and served until the close of the war), Rhoda C. (Mrs. Henry G. Starrett, North Andover, Mass.), Harriet N. (died young), William W., Hannah D. (deceased), Sarah (Mrs. William Badger, of Newton).

Daniel commenced work at a very early age (eleven years), helping his father at the shoemaker's trade, and continued this with very slight opportunity of attending school until he was nineteen. Then he worked at his trade winters until 1860, and two seasons for Col. Moses Page on the farm in summer. Oct. 24, 1860, he enlisted in the United States army for five years, was assigned to company K, First Regiment, light artillery, then serving in Texas, and joined his battery in December, 1860. After Gen. Twiggs' surrender of the department, the battery left

Moses Page.

Thomas Page was early in life a resident of Danville, N. H., probably born there about 1750. He was a farmer; had eight children, of whom Jabez was third son. Thomas was an active business man; a justice many years, very genial and pleasant, and esteemed by all. He died about 1829. Jabez became a farmer; married, 1798, Sarah, daughter of John Kimball, of Poplio (Fremont). He settled in West Kingston, and had saw- and grist-mills there. He followed farming, milling, and lumbering for years, dying in 1856. His wife survived him several years. Their children were Thomas, John, Fanny (Mrs. John Kimball), and Moses. He was originally a Democrat, but in later years a Free-Soiler. He was an honest, industrious, prudent man, kind in his family, and generous to the needy.

Moses Page was born March 18, 1806, had a common school and academic education, and for a short time taught district school. Learned the trade of cooper in his own shop of his employees. Married, when twenty-two, Ruth, daughter of Jona and Susan (Emerson) Lane, of Raymond. Then purchased about seventy-five acres of land in Sandown, and engaged in farming. Here he lived eleven years, and here were born two children,—Mary B., married Charles Carter and has one son, Elmer C., who married Addie Davis, and has one child, Bartie; Sarah K., married Nathan Nason, and resides with her father. Her children are (1) Albion W., married Anna, daughter of Ezra, and granddaughter of Thomas Page, and has five children,—Willie, Arabella, Clarence, Ernest L., and an infant; (2) Albert F., married Laura D., daughter of Peter S. Fifield, and has two children,— Neva M. and Elora; (3) Ruth Philena, married Walter S. West, and has one child,—Nathan; (4) Mary Etta; (5) Roxana; (6) Seth F.; (7) Freeman L.

While in Sandown Mr. Page became greatly interested in militia matters, and showed great adaptation for its duties. He was promoted from the ranks to captain, his commission dating Aug. 28, 1833. After four years' service he was promoted to lieutenant-colonel, being commissioned July 3, 1837; serving in this capacity for two years, he was commissioned colonel of the same regiment—Seventh Regiment, First Brigade, First Division, New Hampshire State Militia—June 27, 1839. He filled this position with gratifying success for four years, when, July 17, 1843, he tendered his resignation, which was accepted. He purchased thirty-six acres of land in Kingston, where he now resides, and moved thither Dec. 4, 1840; and has made it his residence till the present, adding from time to time to his estate, till this place now contains one hundred and eighty acres. The colonel has largely engaged in lumbering, got out many frames for buildings, ship-timber, etc. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, joining it in 1829. He was honored by the church with the office of steward for about fifty years. He has been justice of the peace for fifteen years, and is now, in his old age, a kind old patriarch, the head of four generations, with his descendants, twenty nine in number, all living in the same neighborhood, and loved and respected by all. Mrs. Page was a Congregationalist. She died Feb. 11, 1874.

Frederick G. Nichols

Fort Duncan about Feb. 1, 1861, went to Brownsville, turned over their horses, then by steamer went to the mouth of the Rio Grande, thence to Key West, Fla. After a stay there of ten months they went to New York, and were assigned to the Army of the Potomac.

Mr. Goodwin has a more than ordinary military experience in the great struggle for the Union. His battery was engaged in the battles of Yorktown, Gaines' Farm, June 26, 1862; Golding's Farm, 27th; Peach Orchard, 28th; Savage Station, 29th; Charles City Cross-Roads, 30th; Malvern Hill, July 1st; Bull Run, August 29th and 30th; Chantilly, September 1st; Antietam, September 17th; Fredericksburg, December 12th and 13th; Chancellorsville, May 4, 1863; Beverly's Ford, June 9th; Thoroughfare Gap, June 14th; Middleburg, 19th; Upperville, 20th; Ashby's Gap, 21st; Gettysburg, July 3d; Williamsport, Md., July 6th; Boonsborough, 7th and 8th; Brandy Station, Va., August 1st and 4th; Culpeper, September 13th; Raccoon Ford, 14th; Somerville Ford, 15th; Madison Court-House, 22d; Bristoe Station, October 13th; Cold Harbor, June 1, 1864; Barker's Mills, 2d; Bottom's Bridge, 3d; Yellow Tavern, 10th; Seminary Church, 15th; Charles City Court-House, 16th; Ream's Station, 21st and 29th; Black's and White's Station, 23d; Buckingham Junction, 24th; Roanoke Station, 25th; Smithfield, August 28th and 29th; Winchester, September 19th; Fisher's Hill, 21d; Mount Jackson, 24th; New Market, 25th; Port Republic, 26th and 27th; Thomas' Brook, October 8th; Fisher's Hill, 9th; Cedar Creek, 19th. He was captured at Ream's Station June 29, 1864; enjoyed the hospitalities of Libby Prison thirteen days; afterwards that of Danville, Andersonville, and Milan, Ga. While there, Sergt. Bernard Kelly of his company, who had managed to conceal his watch until then, arranged with a rebel surgeon to place himself and Mr. Goodwin on the sick list for parole, and receive the watch. This arrangement was carried out; they were conveyed to Savannah and placed on United States transports and, with others, taken to Annapolis. Mr. Goodwin received a furlough for thirty days, when he rejoined his company, and was stationed at Pleasant Valley and Winchester, Va., during the summer. From there they went to Baltimore, when, at Fort McHenry, he was mustered out of service Oct. 24, 1865. Returning to New Hampshire he worked eighteen months in Plaistow, then one year in Haverhill, Mass., and married there Sarah F., daughter of Thomas M.<sup>1</sup> and Martha (McKinley) Brown, of that place, and shortly after moved to Plaistow, then to Kingston, N. H., where he now resides. Their children are John D., Lewis M. (deceased), Lydia A., Mattie E., Susie F., and Helen G. He now holds his second commission as justice of the peace, has been selectman, and now holds that office. Independent in politics, at the last election he received every vote cast in town for selectman. He is commander of Post "Gen. H. L. Patten," No. 34, G. A. R., Kingston, and a member of Riverside Lodge, No. 174, I. O. O. F., Merrimac, Mass.

NICHOLAS NICHOLS.

Three brothers, John, Joseph, and Nicholas Nichols, came from the island of Guernsey to New Hampshire in the early colonial days. Nicholas settled in Exeter as a barber, the other two went to Maine. His son Nicholas was born in Exeter, June 11, 1762. He was a younger son, as is evidenced by this document, which, with its quaint spelling, not only explains itself, but throws some light upon the manner of education and care of the youth of the Revolutionary period:

"This Indentor Witnesseth that I, John Nichols, of Exeter, County of Rockingham, in New Hampshire State, by virtue of a Power to me from my father, Nicholas Nichols, of Exeter, in the county aforesaid, in New Hampshire State, Barber, Have Put my Brother Nicholas Nichols, Junr., an apprentice To Stephen Williams, of Goodbury, in the County of Suffolk and State of the Massachusetts Bay in New England, Tamer with him. After the manner of an apprentice to live and serve from the date of these presents for and during the full Terme and Space of Three years to be Completed and fully Enled, which will be in the year of our Lord one Thousand Seven hundred and Eighty-Three, and on the Eleventh day of Februry, during all which Terme of Time the S<sup>d</sup> apprentice his S<sup>d</sup> master Faithfully shall serve, his Serrits keep, his Lawful Commands gladly obey, and shall not haunte Taverns, ale-houses, play-houses, nor absent himselfe from his servis without Leave, but in all things Shall behave himselfe as a good and faithfull apprentice ought to do. And The Said master Covenantes on his part on behalfe of himselfe his Heirs, &c., during said Terme to Provide for him, his S<sup>d</sup> apprentice sufficient meet, drink, washing, Lodging, apparel, Physick, and all things suitable for such an apprentice and in the S<sup>d</sup> te, me will Teach and Cause S<sup>d</sup> apprentice to be Taught and Instructed to the utmost of his Skill and Power the art, Trade and mystery of a Tamer, and at the End and Expiration of S<sup>d</sup> Terme of Time will Dismiss said apprentice with Two good suites of Apparel—in witness whereof the Parties have to these presents Interchangably set to their hands and seals the 11th day of Februry 1780, and in the fourth year of our Independence.

"STEPHEN WILLIAMS.

"Signed Sealed Delivered in Presence of us

"NOAH PERLIN,

"THEOPHIL WILLIAMS."

From this time to the present the most harmonious and pleasant relations have existed between the Nichols and Williams families. The young apprentice served his time faithfully, acquired his trade, came to Kingston, married Catherine, daughter of Dea. Jonathan and Lydia Sanborn, about 1785. They had eleven children, of whom True W., Oliver P., Stephen W., Frederick G., Nicholas, Catherine (Mrs. Nath. Brown), and Jonathan S. attained maturity. They are all dead but Jonathan, who now resides in Haverhill, N. H. Mr. Nichols commenced tanning and carrying on his first place in West Kingston. He, on April 13, 1795, purchased the farm of one hundred and eighteen acres now owned and occupied by his grandson, Stephen F., enlarged the tannery already there, and for those days did a large business until his death. He was also a farmer, was quite a business man, frequently making trips to Portsmouth, Salem, etc., for himself and others, for the whole neighborhood had the utmost confidence in his ability as well as his sterling honesty. He was always sought as a counselor by those needing advice, and was not only a wise counselor but a man of most kind heart, ever ready to respond to any call of charity or benevolence. He was erect in bearing, quick and decided in his movements. Of positive and energetic nature, he always led his laborers, and his remarkably loud and clear voice showed no consumption, and was peculiarly adapted for the duties of his military position, which he did with a zest showing great enjoyment. He was for years first lieutenant, then captain in the militia, and belonged to the Congregational Church for many years. He fell victim to rheumatism when only sixty-eight years old.

Frederic Gilman Nichols, born in Kingston, N. H., April 19, 1798, received common-school and academic education (Bradford Academy), learned his father's trade, and soon after was placed in charge of his father's business, also conducting the farm. He was, during his mature life, prominent in town affairs, town clerk for many years, frequently selectman, representative of Kingston for two terms in the Legislature. Like his father, he was an active member of the Congregational Church, and like him, also, had nowhere an enemy. He combined an active, nervous temperament with warm sociality and winning and agreeable manners, and was a power among his townspeople, and, indeed, a larger circle, in any cause to which he gave his services. He was often called to administer upon estates, and in the most complicated cases gave great satisfaction. Courteous in demeanor, affable, and with great kindness of heart, he was respected and loved by all. He had the privilege of living to more than the allotted years of man, dying July 4, 1880, passing away amid the regrets of a large circle of friends, and without an enemy in the town where his entire life had been spent, and with which his interests had been so largely identified. He married Sarah, daughter of N. P. and Sarah (Nichols) Williams, of Roxbury, Mass., Jan. 27, 1823. Their children were Sarah W. (deceased), Stephen F., Elihu T. (deceased). Stephen Frederic Nichols, born April 21, 1829, had common-school and academic education, learned the same trade of his ancestors at Roxbury, returned to Kingston after acquiring it in not good health, became a farmer, and always has followed it, succeeding first to the management and then to the possession of his father's estate, married, Feb. 20, 1861, Sarah E., daughter of Amos and Hannah P. (Hook) Chase. (See biography of Amos C. Chase.) These children are Perrin W., born Feb. 12, 1865; Clara, Aug. 31, 1867; Stephen W., Aug. 8, 1874. He is a very modest and unobtrusive man, is Republican in politics, and manifests the same social and charitable characteristics as his father and grandfather, and is one of Kingston's most valued and worthy citizens.

NEWCASTLE.

Geographical—Topographical—First Settlement—Great Island—The Fort of 1660—Fort William and Mary—Fort Constitution—Reminiscences of Sixty Years ago—Prominent Men—The Wentworth—Military Record

THE town of Newcastle is an island lying off the coast of Portsmouth, and was formerly called Great Island. The surface of this town is rocky. The following interesting sketch of this town is taken from the late Charles W. Brewster's "Rambles about Portsmouth," an invaluable contribution to the historic literature of the State:

The history of Newcastle is of some interest, as the first settlement in New Hampshire was made in 1623 upon its borders by a Scotelman named David Thompson. He was selected by the Company of Laconia, in England, to establish a permanent settlement in this province. Shortly after his arrival he built the first house on Odiome's Point, a few rods distant from what resembles the remains of an ancient fort. It was afterwards called Mason Hall, in honor of a prominent member of the company under whose auspices the settlement was begun. The house remained standing for many years.

The original designation was Great Island, but in 1693 it was separated from Portsmouth and incorporated under its present name. At the time of its incorporation a large portion of land on the west was included within its limits, but in consequence of the incorporation of Rye in 1719 its area was reduced to four hundred and fifty-eight acres. The soil, though thickly interspersed with rocks, has ever been made to produce abundantly, and owing to the plentiful supply of seaweed the farmers need never fail for want of the proper means of enriching their lands.

The original copy of the ancient charter, written throughout in old English or black letter, can now be seen in the office of the selectmen, though the seal has been cut off by some individual ignorant of its real importance. It is a very interesting document, written upon parchment, and is one of the many relics of antiquity to be found in Newcastle.

Formerly a bridge was built on the southwest side of the town, forming a means of connection between Rye and Newcastle, and previous to the building of the new bridges in 1821 all travelers for Portsmouth went by way of the "Old Bridge." Owing to carelessness and neglect nearly all signs of the "Old Bridge" have now vanished.

Soon after the settlement of Great Island a fort was built upon Frost Point, to serve as a protection to the harbor. It was an earthwork "made with certain great gunns to it," and in the year 1660 was mentioned in the documents of that day as the means of distinguishing Great Island from other islands in the vicinity. It was several times remodeled, and for many years prior to the war of the Revolution was called Fort William and Mary, named in honor of the king and queen of England. In the eleventh year of the reign of Charles the First, of England, the island, together with the fort, came into possession of Mistress Anne Mason, widow of John Mason, of London, who at the time of his death was engaged in mercantile pursuits. Portions of the island were afterwards deeded to Robert Mussel and other individuals by her agent, Joseph Mason, of "Strawberry Bank," on the river of the "Pascataqua."

At the time of the passage of an act, in 1774, by George III., forbidding the exportation of gunpowder to America, the fort was garrisoned by Capt. Cochran and five men, and the ships of war "Scarborough" and "Canseau" were daily expected to arrive with several companies of British soldiers to reinforce the garrison. On receipt of the news a company of citizens from Portsmouth determined upon seizing the arms and ammunition at the earliest period. They procured a gondola at midnight, and, anchoring a short distance from the fort, waded ashore and scaled the walls. Shortly after their arrival they encountered the captain, who delivered to them his sword. It was, however, immediately returned, for which favor he tendered his thanks. Having taken one hundred barrels of powder, they started on their return, and on leaving the fort were rewarded for the favor before shown to the commanding officer by his giving them a lunge with his sword. They tarried not at the insult, but hastened on board the gondola and rowed up the Piscataqua to Durham. On their arrival the ammunition was taken to the cellar of the Congregational Church, where it remained for some time; thence it was taken to Bunker Hill, where, on the 17th June, it was used to the disadvantage of the British. On the following day the fort was again entered, and "fifteen of the lighter cannon and all the small-arms taken away." The "Scarborough" and "Canseau" soon after arrived.

In the autumn of 1775, fearing an attack upon Portsmouth, Gen. Sullivan, at that time a resident of Durham, N. H., was appointed by Gen. Washington to take command of the militia of this State and to defend this harbor. Several fortifications had been thrown up, which he strengthened, and placed in them several companies of militia. In Fort William and Mary a company of artillery were placed, who "were allowed the same pay as soldiers of the Continental army."

In 1808 the fort was again rebuilt under the name of Fort Constitution, and remained until a new structure was commenced in 1863 upon the same spot.

The fort on Jaffrey's Point, at the entrance of Little Harbor, was once thought to be a very important post. It was garrisoned in the war of 1812 by citizens of this and other towns, under command of Capt. William Marshall, who remained stationed at that post for several years. Nine guns, 6- and 9-pounders, were placed in position, and on several occasions full one hundred and twenty men were stationed there.

A short distance from this fort may be seen another fort, situated upon rising ground near the bridge leading from Newcastle to Portsmouth. This post was not considered of much importance, yet several cannon were held in readiness to be placed upon it at short notice.

During the visits of the English ships to this harbor, in 1775-76, a spirit of hatred seemed to prevail against the British seamen, but by the major part of the citizens they were respectfully treated. The sailors would often conduct badly, and if reprimanded would threaten to fire upon the town. Oftentimes the lives of the inhabitants were endangered, and on some occasion a committee of citizens waited upon the commander of the "Scarborough," offering an apology for some fancied insult to his men, to prevent him from permitting the threats of the sailors to be carried into execution. Owing to the state of public excitement at that early period of the Revolution, many citizens left the town and many more were prepared to leave at a moment's warning.

In the rear of the Congregational Church is a well, in which some of the citizens once placed their silverware for safe-keeping, and at another place may be noticed a depression of the ground, showing the site of an old Revolutionary house, which was then occupied by a Mrs. Trefethren, who was noted for refusing water to the British sailors on account of her hatred to them. It is stated that notwithstanding her positive refusal to permit the sailors of the "Scarborough" to get water there, they once succeeded in filling their casks; and leaving them near the well, visited the central part of the town. No sooner were they out of sight than she emptied the casks. Upon their return they demanded of her why she had turned away their water. She promptly replied that she did not turn away their water; the water was her own. On returning to the ship they rewarded her by firing a ball through the room in which her family were sitting.<sup>1</sup>

The following, copied from the graceful chirography of a former much-esteemed citizen of Portsmouth, is a record of a winter excursion under unusual circumstances to Newcastle:

"Feb. 17th, 1817.—In consequence of the severe weather of last week, I was enabled to-day in company with my brother-in-law, Dr. M., to walk to Newcastle on a substantial bridge of ice. We stopped at George Bell's, who furnished us with a dinner of fine fresh cod, taken at the edge of the ice, 172 yards from the end of his wharf. We measured the ice on our return, and found it 18 inches in thickness, over which sleighing parties were merrily gliding on their way to the island. T. G. M."

Newcastle Reminiscences of Sixty-five Years ago.—Anterior to the erection of the bridges that now connect it with Portsmouth, many of the least cultivated among the older inhabitants of Newcastle, isolated as they were from the outer world, especially during the inclement seasons of the year, were about as primitive in their ideas as the dwellers at the Shoals, and scarcely less peculiar in their dialect. Separated by some three miles of water communication from Portsmouth, it was no uncommon occurrence to hear quiet, stay-at-home bodies among the old ladies acknowledge that they "had not been to town" in ten to a dozen years, and inquiries would be made as to individuals they had once known, as if the place were a thousand miles away.

A more antique locality previous to the consummation of that achievement in the march of improvement, the construction of the bridges, could not have been found in all New England. While many of the dwellings were spacious and comfortable, there were very few of modern construction; by far the larger proportion gave evidence of having been erected in the early part of the last century; many were so dilapidated by age as to be almost untenable, and others had reached that point in their history, and were undergoing the process of being converted into firewood.

One of the most antique of these moss-covered structures of the olden time was the ancient church that occupied the site of the modern edifice. Though sadly fallen to decay, traces existed to show that taste had not been omitted in its construction. Erected originally for the service of the English Church, the chancel remained in good preservation, and relics survived of ornamental devices that had once surmounted the creed and decalogue. The sills had gone to decay, and the floor had consequently sunk some inches below its original position, but the building served for summer use, and the people, loving the old place of worship where their ancestors had been wont to gather, continued to occupy it every season until the cold winds of autumn drove them to the shelter of the less spacious but more comfortable structure, where on week-days

"The village master taught his little school."

At the time of which we write there was much of social and neighborly intercourse among the people of the island, as they met and discussed the news brought by some one who had returned from a trip to town, an event oftentimes not of daily occurrence in unpropitious weather, especially during a sharp, cold spell of mid-winter. The receipt of the Journal and Gazette were semi-weekly events of rare interest, and their contents from the title to the last line of the advertisements on the fourth page were duly digested. A Boston paper was about as much of a novelty to the inhabitants as is now one from Canton or Honolulu.

The writer has some especially pleasant recollections of the friendly intercourse referred to, that seemed in a measure a realization of the scenes in rural life so delightfully pictured forth by Goldsmith in the "Deserted Village," and in the London story-books that then formed so prominent a feature in juvenile literature. One place of sojourn was at the residence of the village teacher, still in existence at the summit of a high bluff on the seashore. Opposite the house was a large and thriving garden, and higher up, on an elevation too rocky for culture, was a delightful spot, embracing a view of Portsmouth and the ocean far out to sea, where the youth of both sexes used to gather at the close of day and on moonlight evenings and participate in the ever-popular sports of childhood.

One of the incidents of life to the people of Newcastle was the frequent appearance during the summer season of a fleet from Kittery and Eliot upon their shores, for the purpose of bartering vegetables and fruit for dried codfish and halibut and other products of the brisk fishing trade then carried on from the island. As a general thing, the values of articles on both sides were so well understood as to render the business a very simple one, but an amusing scene occasionally occurred between a pair of sharp bargainers, each affecting to depreciate the other's goods, that would have done honor to the parties in a horse trade. Such a scene between an attaché of Hannab Mariner's squadron, with a stock of green corn and whortleberries, and an old lady of the island with dried halibut to dispose of, each boasting, when the trade had been concluded, of having outwitted the other, left, in its oddity, an ineffaceable impression upon our memory.

Fort Constitution imparted much animation to the island, and not a little to Portsmouth, being still under command of Col. Walbach, and with a larger force stationed there than at any other period within our memory.

Until 1693, Newcastle was a part of Portsmouth; and if we can estimate the proportion which that part held to the whole from the standing of the early residents of the island, we must call it a valuable portion. As we pass the bridges which now unite the two places, the eye is feasted with the continual change of rich and refreshing land and water scenery, and we enter upon the spot where were once the homes of the ignoble Governor Cranfield and his associate, Judge Barefoot, of the no less celebrated Judge Charles Story, of Councilor Stileman, of those honorables, Sampson and Jacob Sheafe, Theodore Atkinson, George Jaffrey, and some other individuals whose names were conspicuous in their day.

Among the men of eminence in this ancient town early in the last century Hon. John Frost held a high rank. He was a native of Kittery, Me., born in 1681, and was the son of Maj. Charles Frost (who was slain by the Indians on the Sabbath, July 4, 1697, as he was returning from meeting), and grandson of Nicholas Frost, an emigrant from England, born in Tiverton about the year 1595, and settled at Sturgeon Creek, in Eliot, in 1636, where he died in 1663. This grandson, Hon. John Frost, in 1702 married Mary Pepperell, sister of Sir William, the baronet.

Hon. John Frost and his lady were early established at Newcastle, where he soon rose to eminence. He was a member of his Majesty's Council, at one time commanded a British ship of war, afterwards pursued the profession of a merchant, and was much distinguished and highly useful in civil life. His place of residence was on an eminence westerly of the Prescott mansion, commanding a view of the spacious harbor, the river and its table-lands, with the lofty Agamenticus in the distance. Some remains of his extensive wharf may yet be traced.

His family was numerous and highly respectable, one of whom was Madame Sarah Blunt, born in 1713, consort of Rev. John Blunt, third pastor of the church in Newcastle, and after his decease the wife of Hon. Judge Hill, of South Berwick, Me. Hon. John Frost died Feb. 25, 1732, in the fifty-first year of his age. It is for their daughter that the above well-designed memorial was erected more than a century ago.

Near by it is another moss-covered monument, which bears unmistakable evidence that the same poet who sketched the above chaste epitaph has also, in as smooth and as strong lines, drawn another marked portraiture:

"To the memory of Rev'd JOHN BLUNT, Pastor of the Church of Christ of this Town who died Aug. 7, 1748, in the 43d year of his age, whose body lies here interred, this stone is erected.

"Soft is the sleep of saints, in peace they lie,
They rest in silence, but they never die;
From these dark graves, their flesh refused shall rise
And in immortal bloom ascend the skies.
Then shall thine eyes, dear BLUNT! thine hands, thy tongue—
In nice harmony each member string—
Resume their warm devotion, and adore
Him in whose service they were joined before."

The Wentworth.—Beautifully located on this historic island is "The Wentworth," which is acknowledged to be the leading seaside hotel on the New England coast.

From the front of the house, looking south and south-east, can be seen the Isles of Shoals, eight miles distant, and a vast expanse of ocean; to the northeast and north Kittery, Kittery Point, and Mount Agamenticus, in Maine; on the northwest the Ossipee and White Mountains, Portsmouth City, the navy-yard, and more than fifty islands; west and southwest the Pawtucket-away Mountain, in Nottingham, the Saddle-Back Mountain, in Deerfield, and the blue hills of Stratford; farther to the south the town of Rye and its beach-houses, five miles distant.

The high elevation of the house (seventy-five feet above the level of the sea) affords prospects of the surrounding country unequalled by that of any seaside resort upon the entire coast from Newport to Mount Desert. There is a never-ending variety for the pleasure-seeker, the student, or the scholar, while the atmosphere itself, combining land and sea breezes, is almost a panacea for all curable diseases.

On the north side is also a lagoon or inland pond of fifty acres, only two hundred feet from the house, shallow and sheltered by trees.

Towards the east, by a winding way through beautiful grounds, abounding with beautiful bowers and rural retreats, rambles on the three-mile road to Portsmouth pass through Newcastle. Altogether, nowhere else on the coast has nature done so much for summer wanderers as at Newcastle. Its perfect appointments, its high situation, its healthful atmosphere, its unequalled facilities for perfect drainage, the easy mode in which it may be reached, its advantages for boating, bathing, and fishing, the excellent drives and attractive walks in the neighborhood, all contribute to make it one of the most charming places of resort upon the coast of New England. It is owned by Hon. Frank Jones, of Portsmouth.

CHAPTER LVII.

NEWINGTON.

Geographical—Topographical—Settlement—Indian Troubles—The Massacre of "Bloody Point"—Civil History—Incorporation of Parish—Incorporation of Town—Congregational Church—Military Record.

The town of Newington lies in the eastern part of the county, and is bounded as follows: on the north by the Piscataqua River, which separates it from Strafford County; on the east by the Piscataqua and the town of Portsmouth; on the south by Portsmouth, Greenland, and Great Bay; and on the west by Great Bay and Little Bay.

The surface is generally level, and the soil near the water rich and productive.

Newington was settled in about the year 1670, and soon became an important adjunct to the settlements at Portsmouth and Dover. The year 1690 was a sad one for the little settlement which had been gathered at Fox Point. Although there were not at this time any formidable tribes of Indians residing in the vicinity, still there were strolling bands of savages roaming about, and the pioneer history relates many instances of their barbaric warfare practiced upon the defenseless settlements. Newington was no exception. In May, 1690, a band of these strolling marauders, led by a Sachem named Hapgood, made an attack on the settlement at Fox Point, and destroyed several houses, killed fourteen persons, and captured six prisoners. The aroused inhabitants pursued the savages, when a severe action occurred, in which the chief Hapgood was wounded. Some of the captives were retaken, and the plunder recovered. From this occurrence the town received the name of "Bloody Point," which it retained for many years.

Newington is one of the old historic places or parishes of the State. It was embraced in what is called the Squanscut or Hilton's Point Patent. A part of Newington was claimed to lie in Dover, and a part in Portsmouth. The name Newington was given by Governor Dudley, May 12, 1714. Its bounds were settled July 28, 1714, at which time it was called a parish. It had town privileges as early as 1737, but when incorporated is not definitely ascertained. The late John Farmer, Esq., said it was in July, 1764.

"Bloody Point" originally belonged to Dover, but soon after the "union," which took place 8th mo. 9, 1641, it was taken from Dover and given to Portsmouth. The people did not seem to like this kind of a decision, and in 1643 petitioned to be "reannexed."

The result of this petition was that the court "Ordered that all the marsh and meadow ground lying Against the Great bay on Strawberry banck side shall belonge to the Towne of Dover, together with fower hundred Akers of Upland ground Adjoining and lying as may be most Convenient for the Improving & fencing In of the said Meadow, the Remainder of the said ground to belonge to Strawberry Bancke, &c." This territory with the terrible name remained in the peaceable possession of "the Towne of Dover" until 1713.

John Pickering was a distinguished son of this town. (See Bar chapter.)

Ephraim Pickering was appointed second major in Col. Whipple's regiment in 1776, and was one of the committee of correspondence the same year, and was representative in 1780-82. He was a selectman in 1775.

Congregational Church.<sup>2</sup>—The meeting-house used by the Congregational Church in this place was erected 1710. It was repaired and the interior remodeled about fifty years ago, but with this exception

"THE ROLLINS HOMESTEAD."
RESIDENCE OF LYDIA ROLLINS,
NEWINGTON, N. H.

is the same building that was originally erected. After the destruction by fire of the Methodist meeting-house, about 1860, it has continued to be the only meeting-house in town until the present time (1882). Its bell originally came from Newington, in England, being given and sent over the Atlantic by the people of that place. It afterwards cracked, but was recast and is still in use. In former times a sun-dial on the building answered the purpose of a clock.

The church was organized Oct. 26, 1715. The original record says that on this date "a fast was kept at Newington, and a church gathered, consisting of nine members," five of whom were "formerly members of Dover Church." The first pastor of the church was Rev. Joseph Adams. He was uncle of Hon. John Adams, second President of the United States. On the 15th of January, 1716, he administered the Lord's Supper, which the record says, "was the first sacrament ever administered in Newington." He continued his pastorate for a period of sixty-eight years. During these many years the church records were kept in his own handwriting. The book, a small parchment-covered one, is still in existence, though from the effects of time the writing is dim and the pages much discolored. He died May 20, 1783. He was nearly ninety-five years of age.

It may be of interest to notice the kind of terms on which he was settled among his people in those early days. I therefore transcribe from the old book his own statement of what these were. He says, "The record that I took of the agreement I made June 20, 1715, with the committee that were chosen to agree with me about settling in the ministry at Newington. Articles, namely, that my salary be ninety pounds. But as they pleaded the poverty of the people and the great charges they had been at in building the meeting-house, I consented to accept of eighty pounds for seven years. And withal I promised on their request that in case I lived bachelor, and had not a family, I would abate the six pounds, and so accept of eighty pounds for the seven years aforesaid.

"That I was to have my salary agreed upon paid in money, and that at two payments, that is one-half on the last of July, as my salary began on the 1st of February, 1714, and the other half on the last of January, and so yearly.

"It was agreed that I should have the stranger's contributions.

"That I should have the parsonage leased for the minister's use and benefit, that is, partly cleared as is common in such cases, and all fenced with a good and sufficient fence, and also to remain for his use and benefit during his natural life.

"That they would give me 60 pounds to help build my house, together with a tract of land lying near Stony Hill, namely, behind one William Withon's lands, which tract of land they promised to give me deed of, that is, upon condition of my settling and being ordained also in the ministry at Newington."

This agreement was signed by Rev. Joseph Adams and seven other men, who are styled, "A committee chosen by the people."

Rev. Joseph Langdon succeeded Mr. Adams as pastor of the Newington Church. He was ordained in 1788, and was dismissed in 1810. At the date of his ordination there were twenty-six members of the church,—seven males and nineteen females. For the sixteen years succeeding the pastorate the church had only occasional supplies. In 1826 the church had become reduced to two members. During the next two years fifteen members were added. From this time there was occasional preaching until 1843, when another interval of fourteen years occurred, during which but little was done. After this Rev. Asa Mann supplied for a season with useful results. Rev. John Le Bosquet succeeded for a period of four years, closing his labors in 1863. Rev. Sewal Harding supplied for the greater part of the next year. Rev. Franklin Davis then labored for eleven years. Again it had occurred that there were only two remaining members of this ancient church. But in 1870, in connection with the labors of Mr. Davis, the pastor, and visits of the Young Men's Christian Association of Portsmouth, an increased religious interest was awakened. The result was an addition to the church in that year of fourteen members. During the following six years sixteen others were added to the church. Rev. F. Davis discontinued his labors in May, 1876. At this time Mr. Willis A. Hadley began to supply the pulpit. He closed his labors in December, 1877, having accepted a call to the Congregational Church in Rye, N. H. Rev. Elijah Roke preached from July, 1878, until November, 1879. The present acting pastor is Rev. George Smith, formerly of Hanover Centre, N. H. The present membership of the church (June, 1882) is twenty-five, five of these being male members. Thus it will be seen that this ancient church has had a changeful history, sometimes one of much trial. Yet it has been, in the main, during the one hundred and sixty-seven years of its existence, a light and a blessing in this community.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

JAMES HOYT.

James Hoyt, son of William Hoyt and Charlotte Pickering, was born in the town of Newington, N. H., Dec. 12, 1804. His ancestors were among the early settlers of Stamford, Conn., and Newington, N. H., and the family has been prominent in several of the States for many generations in religious and political affairs. The family is very numerous, and numbers among its members some of the most prominent men in America. There is a family genealogy published, from which may be traced nearly all the Hoyts in this country.

The grandfather of James Hoyt was John, who had four children, viz: Hanson, who settled in Maine and had several children; William, father of James; and two daughters, one of whom married a James Pickering and the other married Ebenezer Adams.

John Hoyt was a farmer in Newington, N. H.; lived and died here.

William Hoyt, son of John, was a tailor by trade, but did not work at it much after he married Charlotte, daughter of Winthrop Pickering. He was principally a farmer by occupation in Newington. He had nine children,—six sons and three daughters,—viz.: Phebe, Winthrop, Hanson, Charlotte, William, Hannah, Dennis, Thomas, and James, all of whom grew to maturity, and resided in or near Newington, and were farmers generally, and seven of whom had children. All of this large family are dead except James.

William Hoyt died Aug. 2, 1832, aged seventy years, and his wife died Aug. 3, 1840, aged seventy-seven.

James Hoyt received an injury when he was about eleven years of age, which resulted in the amputation of his left leg. Not being able to work on the farm he was sent to school, and at nineteen commenced teaching, which he followed successfully for many years in Portsmouth and adjoining towns. He returned to Newington in 1842, and has since then resided on his farm. July 21, 1833, he married Lydia, daughter of Israel O. Smith, of York, Me. Of this union eight children were born, viz.: Israel S., Corinne, James A., Joseph S. (deceased), Florence, Benjamin S., Mary H. (deceased), and William A. (deceased). In politics, Mr. Hoyt was a Democrat until the Rebellion, since which time he has been a staunch Republican. He has held various town offices with credit to himself and satisfaction to his constituents. Mrs. Hoyt died Jan. 4, 1876, leaving the impress of a noble life upon the characters of her children, one of whom, James A., resides in Arkansas, and the remainder in Newington.

WILLIAM W. NUTTER.

Matthias Nutter was born in the town of Newington, N. H., in 1740, and died in the same town in 1818. He was a ship-carpenter by trade, and owned a farm in Newington. He was three times married. By his first wife he had eight children, by his second wife six children, and by his third wife, Mary Folsom, seven children, viz.: Elizabeth, William W., Lovina, Sarah J., Alfred, who died in infancy, and Alfred (2), and Olive P. Mrs. Mary Folsom Nutter died in 1874 or 1875 at the age of ninety-five years.

William White Nutter was born in Newington, N. H., Sept. 22, 1808. His advantages for an education were limited to the common schools of his native town. His life work has been that of a farmer. He married Frances L., widow of Isaac Brackett, and daughter of Isaac Dow, in 1873. She died July 15, 1880.

Mr. Nutter is a Republican in politics, though in early life he was a Democrat, and afterwards a Free-soiler, casting one of the first votes for that party ever cast in the town of Newington. He has been selectman of his town, and representative to the General Assembly in 1855.

Mr. Nutter is a very social gentleman, a man esteemed for his many noble qualities of head and heart. He is charitable towards all benevolent enterprises, and kind and hospitable to the poor.

PAUL ROLLINS.

Paul Rollins, only son of Paul and Martha (Clark) Rollins, was born on the old Rollins homestead, in the town of Newington, N. H. He was a lineal descendant of James Rollins, who was born in England about 1605, came to Ipswich, Mass., in 1632, and was at Dover as early as 1634. The hundred-acre farm which he settled is still in the possession of the family. He owned slaves. He was reprimanded by the Governor for harboring Quakers. More than twenty-five of his descendants were under arms in the Revolutionary war, and over fifty in the war of the Rebellion, all on the right side. The family name of Rollins, sometimes spelled "Rawlins," is common in England. There are many monuments and memorial tablets of this family in Warwickshire and elsewhere, and one in the church at Stratford-on-Avon. One of his sons, Ichabod Rollins, was born before 1640, was taxed at Newington, then Dover, in 1665, and was killed by the Indians, May 22, 1707. He had a son, Jeremiah, who had a son Hon. Ichabod, who had a son John, who had a son John, who had a son Hon. Daniel G., who is the father of the Hon. Edward A. Rollins.

James T. Hoyt

Samuel Rollins, the grandfather of Paul Rollins, was a farmer in Newington, N. H. One of his sons was named Paul, who succeeded his father as a farmer on the old Rollins homestead, which has been in the Rollins family since its settlement.

Paul Rollins, the subject of our sketch, received a common-school and academic education. He was a farmer by occupation. He married Deborah, daughter of Ephraim Pickering and Martha Coleman, and to them were born four children, viz.: Martha C. (deceased); Ephraim F. (deceased), who married Abigail Frink, and had two children, one of whom, Mrs. Margaret Prescott, is living in Boston, and the other, William (deceased), left a daughter, Alice A.; Lydia<sup>1</sup>; and Daniel<sup>1</sup> (deceased).

Paul Rollins was a Democrat in politics. He held nearly all the important town offices, and was a member of the State Legislature. He died at fifty-nine years of age, and his wife died in her eighty-third year.

Lydia Rollins, the only surviving child of Paul Rollins, is now far advanced in life, but she retains to a remarkable degree her faculties, and now (1882) transacts her own business. She inserts the view of the old "Rollins Homestead" in memory of her ancestors.

CHAPTER LVIII.

NEWMARKET is situated in the northeast corner of Rockingham County, at the head of tide-water, on the Lamprey River and on Great Bay. It is thirty-six miles southeast from Concord, fourteen miles west from Portsmouth, eight miles north from Exeter, and nine miles south from Dover. It is fifty-seven miles from Boston, on the Boston and Maine Railroad, which passes directly through the town. The Portsmouth and Concord Railroad also passes on and near the southern boundary, crossing the Boston and Maine at the "Junction."

Tradition says that the Lamprey River took its name from a Frenchman by the name of John Lamprae, who first settled on its shores. Other tradition has it that the name was derived from the abundance of lamprey eels that formerly thronged its waters.

About one and a half miles northwest of the village is what is known as the Chapman Spring; it issues through a large aperture under the roots of a maple-tree at the foot of a gentle declivity. The water is very pure, soft, and limpid. Its flow of water has been gauged, and it was found to discharge 149,610 gallons of water every twenty-four hours, about 6234 gallons per hour, and over 100 gallons per minute. As far back as tradition can trace its history it is said that there has not been any perceptible variation in the quantity of water discharged. Whether the seasons are wet or dry, cold or hot, the quantity does not vary. About twenty rods below the spring, across the ravine worn by its waters, a dam has been built and a building for mechanical purposes of various kinds erected, where quite an amount of business is done by machinery propelled wholly by the waters of this spring. The waters then fall into the Piscassic River, a branch of the Lamprey, about one mile above the village, and constitute one of the main sources of supply to that stream, especially during dry seasons.

The geological formation of Newmarket is mostly a sandy loam with a clay subsoil. Near Newmarket Junction is quite a large area of drift, from which the Boston and Maine Railroad take sand for repairing and building the bed of the road. Ledges of granite crop out here and there with great frequency. There are also ledges of dike or trap-rock, with some quartz and feldspar. A short distance south of the village, near the highway leading to Exeter, is a granite formation known here as Great Hill. In a seam or vein of quartz faced with trap-rock running through this hill gold and silver and other ores have been found; but it has not yet been explored to sufficient depth to determine whether they exist in paying quantities.

What is now Newmarket and South Newmarket was formerly, and down to the year 1737, a part of Exeter, and its history prior to that date belongs to the annals of the latter town. Newmarket has no official records extending back further than the year 1784. These records, prior to that date, were seven years since destroyed by fire.

Prior to the incorporation of Newmarket as a separate town, Exeter extended to the line of Dover, which latter town included Medbury and Durham. For many years quite a controversy existed between Dover and Exeter as to where the boundary line between the two was or should be located, Exeter claiming that the line was the Oyster (now Durham) River, while Dover claimed that the Lamprey River was the dividing line. Finally, about the year 1868, a committee was appointed to settle the question of the boundary, which they decided to be Lamprey River.

There is now no means of determining who erected the first house or commenced the first settlement here. The most that can now be ascertained is that at an early date, probably about the time of the settlements at Exeter, Dover, and Durham, a small settlement was made here. The principal business of the settlers at that time was fishing, and the name may have been derived from the fact that a new market was opened for the sale and purchase of fish. Afterwards a saw-mill, grist-mill, and carding-mill were erected, and the place became quite a lumber mart. Much ship timber was cut and carried from here, and at one time, for quite a period, a large ship-yard was in active operation, and ships of the capacity of five hundred tons were built here and floated to Portsmouth, where they were rigged and put in order for sea.

Seven vessels, some of them quite large for those times, have been on the stocks here in process of building at one time, and twenty-one of all kinds have been built here in a single year. Ship-building was also carried on at Newfields village (then a part of Newmarket, now South Newmarket) by Zechariah Beals, Dudley Watson, George Hilton, and others, and lumber and shooks were shipped there direct from the West Indies.

The first official reference we have been able to find to the site and organization of this town is in the proceedings of the Provincial Legislature, and in the legal proceedings, as found in the records of the courts, for fixing the boundary between Exeter and Dover.

In 1668 one Edward Colcord testifies that the northerly bounds of Exeter, mentioned in an agreement made with We-han-naw-now-it, the chief sagamore of the Indians located here, was the westerly part of Oyster River, about four miles northerly beyond Lampriere River. This (Oyster) river is several times mentioned as the boundary between Exeter and Dover, Exeter claiming to own a strip of land northerly of the river. Like many early names of localities, rivers, and mountains, we find the name of this river spelled in various ways, as Lampriere, Lampreele, Lampreel, Lamprell, and Lampreele. It was claimed to be six miles from Exeter, and six miles from Dover. It is, in fact, about eight miles from Exeter and about nine from Dover.

In 1652 one H. Nutter makes a deposition that in the year 1636 the land about Lamprill River was in possession of the inhabitants of Dover, on both sides the river, both for fishing and planting and felling timber. One William Furber also testifies to the same. John Baker testifies that he was one of a committee to fix the bounds between Exeter and Dover, and that Lamprey River was the bounds. Here we find the name of this river spelled Lamprey for the first time.

In 1719 a committee was appointed to renew the line of a tract of land granted by Massachusetts to Portsmouth, and that two miles were added to the six miles before granted; which two miles to be appropriated to the encouragement of the iron-works building at Lamprill River, for cole, wood, etc., and for settling people thereon, to be imported for that service, and settled in such order as a committee appointed for that purpose shall direct, and that Mark Hunking, Geo. Jaffry, and Richard Waldron, Esqs., and Col. James Davis, Capt. Timothy Gerrish, and Capt. Samuel Tibbetts be the committee for laying out and building said land, and that Samuel Penhallow, Esq., be added for directing the settlement.

The next mention we find of this river and settlement is also in connection with the line between Dover and Exeter, in the same year. It is therein provided that those holding the eldest grants of land shall be good to them that have them, always excepting highways and such land sufficient to mills or works set up on Lamprille River.

The next mention found of this place is that a petition was presented to the Legislature, praying for the erection or establishment of a parish in the north part of Exeter. Upon this petition the following action was had:

In Council, Dec. 14, 1727, it was ordered that the prayer of the petitioners be granted, and that the petitioners have leave to bring in a bill accordingly, and that the name of the parish be NEWMARKET. In the House of Representatives the same day, "Read and concurred."

In the proceedings of the Provincial Legislature, Aug. 18, 1737, it was voted that Newmarket have liberty to bring in a bill, and to have the privilege of choosing their town officers as other towns have. Newmarket, then, seems to have been formed into a parish in 1727, and in 1737, ten years later, given town privileges, or incorporated as a town.

Prior to June 27, 1849, what is now the town of South Newmarket constituted a part of Newmarket. At that time South Newmarket was set off and incorporated into a separate town. Before this the village here was called "Lamprey River," and the village now in South Newmarket was called "Newfields," the Concord and Portsmouth Railroad at Newmarket Junction being at that point, on or near the line of separation. Newmarket remained as then constituted till June, 1870, when a portion of Durham was annexed to and became a part of this town. By this annexation the population of Newmarket was increased to about 2300, being, by the census of 1870, 1987. In 1880 the census gives us a population of 2369, which has since increased, so that at this date (1882) we have a population of rising 2500.

At one time Newmarket was the sixth town in the State in population, and is now the third in Rockingham County; but by the settlement and growth of such places as Manchester, Peterborough, Keene, Rochester, Somersworth, Milford, Nashua, and others, and the cutting off of South Newmarket, notwithstanding the annexation of a portion of Durham, it has proportionally fallen behind, so that it now ranks as about the fifteenth in the State.

Manufactures.—As before stated, the principal business of the town in its early days was fishing, lumbering, and ship-building. In 1822 the Newmarket Manufacturing Company was incorporated, and the building of No. 1 mill was commenced the next year, and completed in 1824. This mill had 2560 spindles. No. 2 was built in 1825, and had 4096 spindles. No. 3 was built in 1827, and the machinery put in two years afterwards. This mill had 1034 spindles. In 1832 the company ran 13,824 spindles in the whole. No. 2 was destroyed by fire the 1st of September, 1857, and rebuilt the next year. No. 4 was completed in 1869. After the erection of this mill the company ran 39,000 spindles, 906 looms, employed 500 operatives, and turned out about 160,000 yards of different kinds of cotton cloth per week. Their pay-roll then amounted to about $11,000 per month. These mills are all built of stone, the three first of large blocks of granite, and the fourth of a kind of trap-rock or slate. In 1881 a fifth mill was built. This is built of brick, is 363 feet long, 94 feet wide, and two stories high, with a tower and basement. This mill is used for weaving. The company now run 55,000 spindles, turn out 300,000 yards of cloth per week, employ 700 operatives, and their monthly pay-roll amounts, on an average, to about $17,000. The amount of invested capital is about $1,500,000.

Hon. Daniel M. Durell was the first president of the company. The agents have been, first, Stephen Hanson; he was succeeded by Stephen A. Chase, and he by Benjamin Wheatland; after him came John Webster, who was succeeded by George W. Frost. Mr. Frost held the office of agent about thirty years, and down to July 1, 1879, when he died very suddenly while bathing. He was succeeded by Ambrose J. Nichols, who still fills that position. The company is in a flourishing condition of prosperity, and under his prudent and careful management is paying the stockholders fair dividends.

In 1862, Lafayette Hall erected a machine-shop nearly a mile out of the village, on the Packer's Falls road. The water of the Piscussic River furnishes most of the motive-power for the machinery in this shop. When the water falls short he has steam-power to supply the demand. The first mill or shop was built in 1862. In 1876 this shop and machinery was destroyed by fire. This was immediately rebuilt, and again burned to the ground in 1877. With characteristic energy, Mr. Hall again rebuilt, and is now doing a successful business. He uses here from six hundred to eight hundred tons of iron in a year. This is manufactured into bolts, nuts, washers, screws, railroad furnishings, etc. He employs on an average about fifteen men, and pays out for help some five thousand dollars annually. Quite a little village has grown up here, which has taken the name of Hallsville.

Churches and Religious History.—Prior to 1730

a meeting-house had been erected a few rods north of where the hotel now stands at the "Junction." The minister was supported by public taxation. The first preacher settled here was Rev. John Moody in 1730, who died in 1778, having supplied the pulpit forty-eight years, the last five years of which he seems to have been assisted by Rev. Nathaniel Ervin, who was settled in 1773, and dismissed in 1797, and who died in 1806. Rev. Samuel Tombs, as colleague of Mr. Ervin, was settled in 1792, and dismissed in 1797. Rev. S. M. Natell was employed to supply the pulpit six months in 1798.

In 1799, Rev. James Thurston was settled over this church, and dismissed about the year 1808. He was the last minister settled by the town and church. This was then called the Established Church, but was classed as Congregational.

There seems here to have been a kind of religious interregnum or hiatus of about twenty years, during which the church must probably have employed a preacher without the aid of the town or public support. For some little time prior to 1828 the Congregationalists held their meetings in the Newmarket Manufacturing Company's wooden warehouse, the same building that now stands on or near the wharf in their yards. The first sermon was preached there by the Rev. John P. Cleaveland, and the first Sabbath-school in town was organized there.

May 22, 1828, Rev. David Sanford was installed pastor of this church. Immediately thereafter the society took measures to build a meeting-house, which was dedicated December 20th the same year. Rev. Mr. Cleaveland, who had preached the first sermon in the old warehouse, preached the dedicatory sermon here from the text (Neh. ii. 18), "So they strengthened their hands for the good work." This is the same house where the society now worships.

Mr. Sanford continued their pastor till June 22, 1830, a period of a little over two years, when he was dismissed. He was succeeded by Rev. Ossimus Tinker, who was ordained and installed Dec. 8, 1830, and dismissed Oct. 29, 1833, remaining with the church a little less than three years. He was succeeded by the Rev. Constantine Blodgett, who was installed Dec. 2, 1834, and dismissed June 15, 1836.

Following him was the Rev. J. Gunnison, who was installed Feb. 22, 1837, and preached till October 9th the same year, a period of about eight months. Rev. T. T. Richmond was acting pastor of said church from 1838 to 1842, a period of about four years.

Rev. S. S. N. Greeley was installed as pastor Dec. 15, 1842, and dismissed Feb. 23, 1847. Rev. C. Chamberlin was acting pastor one year, from 1847 to 1848. He was succeeded by Rev. E. C. Cogswell, who acted as pastor from 1848 to 1854, about six years. After him the Rev. James Palmer acted as pastor from 1855 to 1858. Rev. Elias Chapman followed him as acting pastor from 1859 to 1862, about three years. In 1862, May 21st, Rev. George D.

Blodgett was installed pastor of this church, and was dismissed October 1st the same year. Then Rev. S. D. Bowker was acting pastor from 1863 to 1864, a period of about one year.

The next year, 1865, Rev. Isaac C. White became acting pastor of said church, and has ever since to the present time acceptably filled that position, a period now of about seventeen years, about three times as long as any one of his predecessors. Under his ministrations the church has prospered, increased in numbers, and been strengthened. He is an able, prudent, and discreet man, much beloved and respected, and has filled his position with honor to himself and benefit to the church and to the community.

A Methodist Episcopal Church.—was organized in this town in 1827, and a meeting-house built the same year. The Rev. Samuel Kelly was their first preacher, and ministered to this church during the years 1828 and 1829. He was succeeded by Rev. Ezra Sprague, who remained only one year, 1830. Rev. Ezekiel Stickney followed him and remained two years, 1832 and 1833. Rev. William Hatch was their preacher one year, 1834. He was succeeded by Rev. James M. Fuller, who remained during the years 1835 and 1836. Rev. James M. Marcy ministered to this church for the years 1837 and 1838; Rev. Elisha Scott for the year 1839, and Rev. Silas Greene for the year 1840. After him came Rev. William Hatch for the second time, who remained during the years 1841 and 1842. He was succeeded by Rev. Samuel Kelley, who also came for the second time, and remained during the years 1843 and 1844. He was followed by Rev. Lorenzo D. Burrows, who remained during the years 1845 and 1846. Then came Rev. James Pike, who labored with the church during the years 1847 and 1848. Rev. James Thurston succeeded him, and ministered to the church only one year, 1849.

Rev. Henry H. Hartwell preached here in the years 1850 and 1851. Then came Rev. Newell Culscer, who officiated in the years 1852 and 1853. He was succeeded by Rev. Charles R. Harding for the years 1854 and 1855. He was succeeded by Rev. Calford M. Dinsmore, who officiated for the years 1856, 1857, and 1858. Next came Rev. Samuel Beedle, who remained only one year, 1859. In 1860 and 1861 the church was presided over by Rev. William H. Jones. He was followed by Rev. Robert Stubbs, who remained only one year, 1862. Then followed Rev. John L. Trefren, who preached two years, 1863 and 1864.

Next came Rev. George W. H. Clarke, who remained one year, 1865. After him came Rev. Henry P. Copp, who was here two years, 1866 and 1867. In 1868 and 1869 the church was presided over by Rev. O. H. Call. In 1870, Rev. Thomas L. Flood came here as pastor, and remained two years. Under his administration the old meeting-house was abandoned and sold, and the new one now occupied by the society on Main Street was built at an expense of about twenty-five thousand dollars.

Mr. Flood was succeeded by Rev. Elijah R. Wilkins, who remained only one year, 1872. Then followed Rev. Orange W. Scott, who remained two years, 1873 and 1874. He was succeeded by Rev. George J. Judkins, who remained two years, 1875 and 1876.

He was followed by Rev. Henry Dorr in the years 1877 and 1878.

Next after him came Messrs. T. Cilley, who ministered to the church in the years 1879 and 1880.

Then followed Rev. Charles B. Pitblado, who came here in 1881, and is still preaching in this church in his second year, 1882.

And, what is a remarkable fact, these preachers, a short time since, were all still living with two exceptions, and these have quite recently died. These exceptions were the Revs. Greene and Stickney.

In 1827 the Free-Will Baptists built a meeting-house a little west of the village, near where the dwelling-house of George K. Leavitt now stands. In this the Rev. John Osborne preached for a short time. He was not a Free-Will Baptist, but belonged to the Christian Baptist order. He was followed by Rev. Daniel P. Cilley, the first Free-Will Baptist minister settled here. The present Free-Will Baptist meeting-house in the village was erected in 1836. In this Cilley also preached a number of years. He was succeeded by Rev. Elias Hutchins. Their next minister was Rev. Sidney Frost.

After him came Rev. Maxy W. Burlingame, and he was succeeded by Rev. Allen Eastman, who was followed by Rev. Levi B. Tasker, and he by Rev. Willet Vary, and after him came Rev. A. J. Davis. Then they employed Rev. Edwin Marison, who was succeeded by Sullivan Cicero Kimball. After him Rev. John A. Lowell ministered to this church. He was succeeded by Rev. DeWitt C. Durgin, who was followed by Rev. J. H. Durkee.

Then followed Rev. John Malvern, and after him came Rev. David A. Adams, and next Rev. B. F. Jefferson, who is still preaching for this church.

A few years since the Roman Catholics organized a society here, and at first purchased and occupied a building previously used as a carpenter's shop, near the depot, the same now occupied by Thomas and John Griffin as a dwelling-house. The Rev. Father Walsh was their first pastor. During his ministration the stone house on "Zion's Hill," formerly occupied by the Universalists, and later by the Unitarians under the ministration of the Rev. Mr. Damon, was purchased and is now occupied by them. Father Walsh was succeeded by Rev. Father Charles Egan, and he by Rev. Father Lewis. Then Rev. Father McDonald ministered to this church, and he was succeeded by Rev. Father C. W. Calligan, and he by the present pastor, Rev. Father Dennis Ryan.

These churches are now all in a healthy, flourishing condition.

Banks.—Newmarket Bank was first incorporated

A.D. 1855, capital eighty thousand dollars. In A.D. 1865 it was changed to Newmarket National Bank, with the same capital, and still continues as such. The presidents of the bank have been Z. Dow Creighton, Joseph S. Lawrence, William B. Small, and Joseph C. Burley, who now holds that office. At its first organization Samuel A. Haley was elected cashier, and has held the position continuously to the present time.

Newmarket Savings-Bank was incorporated A.D. 1832. Henry C. Weatherby was its first treasurer. Then James M. Chapman held that office. He was succeeded by David Murray, who held the office till his failing health and advanced age compelled him to resign, and Samuel A. Haley was chosen to the position, which he now holds.

The first president was George W. Kittridge, who held the office till his health was so impaired he had to resign its duties, and William B. Small was elected to fill the place, which position he held to the time of his death. After his decease Napoleon B. Treadwell was chosen to the position, and now holds the office. The deposits now amount to rising one hundred thousand dollars.

Both of these banks are in a sound, healthy, and flourishing condition, and doing a profitable business.

Biographical.—Among those who have been prominent business men in this town and held important public positions are the following:

George W. Kittridge was born in Epping, N. H., Jan. 31, 1805. He fitted for college at Phillips' Exeter Academy, and entered the medical class at Cambridge, Mass. In 1825 he settled in Newmarket as a physician, and continued in active practice till about two years before his death, when his failing health compelled him to retire from business. He represented this town in the Legislature in 1835, 1847, 1848, and 1852. In the last year he was elected Speaker of the House of Representatives. He represented this district in the Fifty-third and Fifty-fourth Congresses. For over twenty years he was a director of the Boston and Maine Railroad, and was president of the Newmarket Savings-Bank for over forty years. His father, Dr. Kittridge, of Epping, had eight sons, all of whom became physicians. He (George W.) died in Newmarket, March 5, 1880, aged seventy-five years. The doctor never was married. He left an estate valued at about forty thousand dollars.

David Murray was born Oct. 5, 1796. His educational advantages in his school-boy days were quite limited, yet by reading and study in later life he came to be a well-informed business man, and held many positions of public trust. Commencing in 1829, Mr. Murray probably had charge of the settlement of more estates and other business in the Probate Court up to the time of his decease than any other man in the county. He was three years a member of the Legislature, eleven years selectman, six years town treasurer, and three years register of deeds for Rockingham County, and a justice of the peace from 1827 to the time of his death. For fifty years he held some one or more minor offices. He was notary public thirty-three years and treasurer of the Newmarket Savings-Bank about twenty years. For about thirty-five years he prosecuted claims against the government for soldiers' bounties, land warrants, and pensions, and was for many years an agent for several reliable leading fire insurance companies, among which were the Etna, Home, People, Howard, and Rockingham Companies. He died Jan. 16, 1879, aged eighty-two years,—that "noblest work of God," an "honest man."

Abner P. Stinson some years ago kept a hotel near the "Junction," which was a noted resort for politicians in those days. He was a man of considerable influence in the old (Jeffersonian) Republican party, and was at one time warden of the New Hampshire State prison. He afterwards emigrated to some place in the West, where he died, an old man, in 1871. This hotel was afterwards kept for many years by Joseph Langley, Esq.

Prior to the incorporation of the Newmarket Bank in 1855, Samuel A. Haley and his brother Benjamin F. were engaged here in trade and the manufacture of clothing quite extensively, under the firm-name of S. A. & B. F. Haley. Some years after, S. A. Haley was employed as cashier of the bank. They dissolved the partnership, and Benjamin F. carried on the business alone, greatly increasing the business, employing about five hundred hands, male and female. He has quite recently made another change, selling out most of his retail trade, and gone extensively into the manufacture of clothing, not only for the Boston and New York wholesale traders and jobbers, but sells many goods West and South. Besides his large manufactory here, he has also another at Dover. In addition to these he also has a custom clothing department, and has been extensively engaged in the manufacture of military and band uniforms.

John S. Bennett commenced the tin and hardware business in Newmarket in 1843. In 1850 his brother Edwin entered into partnership with him, under the firm-name of J. S. & E. Bennett. The business was enlarged, and included coal, wood, and lumber, in which they dealt quite extensively. They employed from forty to fifty men at one period, and did an annual business of about one hundred thousand dollars. In 1873 they sold out here, and bought a two-thirds interest in the Merrimac Foundry in Lawrence, Mass. John S. died in Lawrence in 1876. He was an active, energetic business man, and the town was enlivened and made progressive by his business associations. Edwin still lives in Newmarket, but is not in business at present.

Hon. William B. Small was born in Lewiston, Me., May 17, 1817. He was educated at Phillips' Exeter Academy, and taught school in Exeter. He read law in the office of Bell & Tuck, in Exeter. He came to Newmarket in 1846 or 1847, and commenced practice here. By studious application and faithfulness in all his duties he soon took a front rank in the profession, and had a large and successful practice. He represented the town in the Legislature, and was chosen State Senator from this district. He was a member of Congress in 1874-75. He died April 7, 1878, aged sixty-one years, honored, respected, and mourned by a large circle of friends.

"God works a wonder now and then—
He was a lawyer and an honest man."

James B. Creighton commenced business in Newmarket with Gardner Towle, under the firm-name of Towle & Creighton, and afterwards in company with his son, Z. Dow Creighton, as J. B. Creighton & Son. He represented the town in the lower branch of the Legislature several years, and was a member of the State Senate in 1836. He afterwards retired to his farm, and is still living at the advanced age of ninety-two years, highly respected.

James M. Chapman was a lawyer of some local repute, was two years treasurer of the savings-bank. He was an active politician, represented the town in the State Legislature, and filled at some time almost all the town offices. Under Pierce's administration he was postmaster here in the village.

Arthur Brascombe was engaged in privateering in 1812; after the war closed came to Newmarket, and for many years was engaged in trade here. He was a man widely known and much respected. He represented the town in the Legislature many years. He died some twenty-seven years ago.

Rev. John Broadhead resided in that part of the town which now forms South Newmarket. He was a man of much ability, and contributed in a marked degree to make the Methodists the leading religious society in this section. He was at one time a member of Congress from this district.

The first newspaper printed here was in 1841, by J. L. Beckett, called the Granite State Democrat. It was moved from Exeter here, and continued but a short time. In 1842, Brackett Palmer, Esq., started a paper here called the Argus, which also soon died out. In 1873, J. D. P. Wingate started the Newmarket Advertiser here. It has changed hands two or three times, and is now owned, printed, and published by Frank H. Pinkham, an enterprising young man of this village, who, in connection with a good "job office," has made it a success.

Representatives.—The representatives from this town in the State Legislature from 1784, which is the earliest date of which we have any official record, have been as follows:

1786. Voted not to send.

Physicians.—The physicians who have lived and practiced in this town are as follows: Nathaniel Kidder, George W. Gale, Perly Blodgett, George W. Kittredge, John R. Sanborn, William Folsom, — Bugbee, Henry Hayes, Nathaniel B. Chase, Reuben M. Gray, — Holmes, Benjamin N. Towle, Isaac N. Perley, James Bassett, H. B. Haskell, Clinton A. Ricker, Lafayette Chesley, — Horr, Chase Moulton, Samuel H. Greene, Joseph L. Elkins, Charles A. Morse. Of these, Bugbee, Perley, Bassett, Holmes, Haskell, Ricker, Chesley, and Horr, each remained but a short time. Kittredge, Kidder, Sanborn, and Folsom were all long residents and practitioners, and all died here. Drs. Green and Elkins have long been, and are now in successful practice here. Dr. Morse

is a young man who has quite recently commenced practice, and is beginning very well indeed.

Attorneys.—Before the settlement of any attorney in this town, Wentworth Cheswell, one of the early settlers, and an educated business man of good judgment, ability, and discretion, and a justice of the peace, drew deeds, leases, agreements, contracts, wills, and other instruments for his neighbors, and also acted as a justice in the trial of causes. The first practicing attorney that settled here was — Huntson; after him William Timney. Since then there have been attorneys here as follows: Amos A. Parker, Gilbert A. Grant, Hezekiah B. Stevens. — Eldridge, James M. Chapman, William B. Small, Augustus B. Clay, Amos W. Towle, Aaron L. Mellows, Charles H. Knight, Charles H. Smith, I. T. George, and Elisha A. Keep. Of these, Grant, Stevens, Eldridge, and Towle remained only temporarily. Parker at first went West, and afterwards married for a second wife one of the celebrated "Smith sisters," of Glastonbury, Conn., who have given the local authorities considerable trouble by refusing to pay their taxes unless they can be allowed to vote. Mr. Clay died here, after having been in practice some three or four years. Hon. Mr. Small died here, after having been in practice over thirty years. His death was caused by a fall, and striking his head upon the rail of a railroad, producing concussion of the brain, which ultimately caused extravasation and suffusion, ending in death. Mr. Mellows, Mr. Smith, Mr. George, Mr. Knight, and Mr. Keep are still in active practice in the village.

Soldiers in the War of the Rebellion.—Newmarket furnished more than the quota required in the late war between the States. The record of their names is somewhat incomplete. As correctly as can now be ascertained the names of those who went in the army to fill the quota of Newmarket are as follows:

Harrison G. Burley.	John P. Perkins.

Miscellaneous.—In the spring of 1870, Hiram Jones, who had lived in this town but a short time, murdered his wife by cutting her throat with a razor. Jealousy was the cause. The next October, Jones was tried at Portsmouth, convicted of murder in the first degree, and sentenced to be hanged. On account of his age, near seventy, and of doubts as to his sanity at the time, his sentence was commuted to State prison for life. He was much displeased at this, but lived only about three years, and died in prison.

July 30, 1873, an excursion party of nineteen went from the village down Lamprey River out into Great Bay for a pleasure trip. While all on board were enjoying themselves at a distance from the shore, in a depth of forty feet of water, without any warning of danger the packet on board which they were, from some cause never satisfactorily explained, was found to be sinking. She filled and went to the bottom, and the whole nineteen were precipitated into the water. Of these, three young ladies, named Abbie Garland, Millie Moulton, and Jennie Burnham, were drowned. The others supported themselves, some on oars, some on the hatches, others by swimming and supporting those who could not swim, till those who had seen them from the shore put off in a sail-boat and rescued them.

In April, 1868, one John Hussey, belonging in Rochester, N. H., at work for J. S. & E. Bennett as a peddler, committed suicide by hanging in Bennett's stable. A coroner's jury investigated the case, but could find no assignable reason for the act except low spirits, and discouragement caused by want of success in business.

Dec. 26, 1879, Patrick Behen, a resident of this town, was found dead in the back room of a house occupied by Michael Carrigg and his wife. There were apparently suspicious circumstances attending his death. A coroner's inquest was held, but after the most thorough and searching investigation no evidence of foul play could be found. He lay upon his face and side, with his legs and arms drawn up, and appeared to have died from suffocation. No bruises, wounds, or marks of violence could be found upon the body.

On the 6th day of February, 1866, a disastrous fire visited this village. The fire was first discovered in a barn belonging to Lucy Maria Watson, near the Boston and Maine Railroad depot. This barn was surrounded by dwelling-houses and other buildings, in close proximity to which the fire soon spread, and there being at the time a high wind, it raged with great fury. Six dwelling-houses, two barns, a large paint-shop and wood-house, with other out-buildings, were burned here. The fire and cinders were blown to near the centre of the village, where four stores, containing several tailor-shops and tenements, were destroyed. After it was found that the fire threatened the village, a telegram was sent to Dover for assistance, and in twenty minutes a fire company with a steamer was here from that city, a distance of nine miles. This town had only two hand-engines, and without this assistance from Dover a large part of the village would have been destroyed by the devouring element. Aside from this conflagration and the burning of No. 2 Mill in 1857, the town has been comparatively exempt from fires.

A Masonic Lodge, Rising Star, No. 47, was organized in this town in 1824 or 1825. Under the "Morgan" excitement it did not flourish, and its charter was surrendered to the Grand Lodge. In 1858 the charter was restored, and the lodge again commenced work. Since then it has been continuously in a flourishing condition, and has now a membership of about 150. They have one of the finest lodge-rooms in the State. Since the restoration of its charter its Masters have been David Murray, Samuel A. Haley, George W.

Kittredge, Benjamin Brooks, Orrin Murray, Aaron L. Mellows, Charles E. Tasker, A. Dana Wiggin, Bradford S. Kingman, Woodbridge W. Durell, who is the present Master.

There is also a large and flourishing lodge of Odd-Fellows in this town. It has been in existence some forty years, and has a large membership and quite a large fund.

For several years there has been here, and is now, a temperance organization of Good Templars. This association has been and still is doing a noble work. Its beneficent results are manifest on every hand, and the good work is still in progress.

Previous to the building of the Boston and Maine Railroad in 1840 and later, the Portsmouth and Concord Railroad, most of the goods sold here and the raw materials for the manufacturies, as well as the manufactured goods, were transported by water conveyance. Packets and schooners from Boston, and gondolas between here and Portsmouth, made a lively business on the Piscataqua River across Great Bay and up the Lamprey River. Since the building of these railroads the freighting has nearly all been done by them, yet schooners from Philadelphia and gondolas from Portsmouth continue to bring coal and other heavy goods by water. Last year Congress appropriated ten thousand dollars to improve the navigation of Lamprey River, which was expended under the supervision of Gen. Thorn, and ships of three hundred tons or larger can now come up the Lamprey River without trouble or danger. Another appropriation of ten thousand dollars has recently been made to further improve this river. With the judicious expenditure of this sum the river can be made navigable for any vessel usually engaged in the coastwise trade.

We have very few wealthy men, none retired from business. The permanent population is composed of active, energetic, business, and hard-working men, striving to acquire a competency. This fact contributes to make the town active and business lively. And no town in the State of its size has more active, live men, and none has about it a more active, progressive, lively, business appearance. It is now growing rapidly. Some forty family tenements were built the last year, and for its size the town has few rivals in progress and prosperity.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH.

JONATHAN BURLEY.

Jonathan Burley, of Newmarket, N. H., is a lineal descendant of Giles Burley, who was an inhabitant of Ipswich, Mass., as early as 1648, and a commoner in 1664. The History of Ipswich says, of the little we learn of Gyles or Giles Burley, that he was a planter, living eight years on Brooke Street, and owning lot No. 105, situated upon Great Hill, Hogg

Jonathan Burley.

Island. He died, leaving his wife, Elizabeth, and children, Andrew, James, Giles, and perhaps John.

James Burley<sup>2</sup> (Giles<sup>1</sup>), born Feb. 10, 1659, died at Exeter, N. H., about 1721. He was twice married,—first, May 25, 1685, to Rebecca, daughter of Thomas and Susannah (Worcester) Stacy; she died Oct. 21, 1686, and he married for his second wife, Elizabeth —, and had the following children, viz.: William, Joseph, Thomas, James, Josiah, and Giles.

Josiah<sup>3</sup> was born in 1701, and died at Newmarket. He married Hannah, daughter of Hon. Andrew and — (Chase) Wiggin. In 1718 he received thirty acres, assigned by a committee at Exeter. He signed a petition for a bridge at Newmarket in 1746. The date of his will is 1756, Hon. Andrew Wiggin was the judge of probate. Children of Josiah<sup>3</sup> and Hannah (Wiggin) Burley:

Josiah<sup>4</sup>, Thomas, and Samuel. Josiah<sup>4</sup> (Josiah<sup>3</sup>, James<sup>2</sup>, Giles<sup>1</sup>) married a Judith or Mary Tuttle, and had children,—Sarah, Josiah<sup>5</sup>, Judith, Hannah, Betsey (in place of Betsey Burley, genealogy gives Deborah), and Mary.

Mr. Burley was a farmer in Newmarket, on the same farm where Jonathan Burley now (1882) resides. He settled in Newmarket in 1767. He died at the advanced age of eighty years, and his wife at seventy-two.

Josiah<sup>5</sup>, (Josiah<sup>4</sup>, Josiah<sup>3</sup>, James<sup>2</sup>, Giles<sup>1</sup>), son of Josiah<sup>4</sup> and Judith or Mary (Tuttle) Burley, was born in Newmarket May 20, 1760, and died at his residence in his native town May 10, 1842. He married Susan Edgerley, who was born June 30, 1767, and died Nov. 9, 1851. Of this union the following children were born: Josiah, Susan, Mark, Clarissa, Deborah, Betsey, Jonathan<sup>6</sup>, Jeremiah, and Lavina, all of whom were born in Newmarket, N. H., and all are now (1882) dead except Deborah and Jonathan.

Mr. Burley was a farmer by occupation and a soldier in the Revolutionary war for a short time. In politics a Democrat, as his descendants have been. He held some of the minor offices of the town.

Jonathan<sup>6</sup> (Josiah<sup>5</sup>, Josiah<sup>4</sup>, Josiah<sup>3</sup>, James<sup>2</sup>, Giles<sup>1</sup>) was born on the farm in Newmarket, Oct. 9, 1804. He has always been a farmer. He cared for his parents until their death, then came in possession of the "Old Burley Homestead," which has been in the family for many generations. He has been successful as a farmer, and as a man enjoys the confidence of his townsmen.

Politically, he is a Democrat of the old school, and thoroughly believes in those great and grand principles proclaimed by Jefferson and Jackson. He married Sarah C., daughter of John and Betsey (Sawyer) Neal, of London, N. H., Dec. 28, 1831. She was born Sept. 23, 1808. Mrs. Burley's father was born at South Newmarket, Feb. 14, 1777, married Betsey Sawyer, of Lee, and had eight children, of whom Sarah C. is the fourth. Mr. Neal was a farmer by occupation, and a Democrat in politics. He died at the advanced age of eighty-three. Mr. and Mrs. Burley have the following children: (1) A. Augusta (Mrs. Charles E. Smith, of South Newmarket); (2) Harrison G.; and (3) Lavina J. (Mrs. Horace B. Doe, of Durlham).

Mr. and Mrs. Burley are attendants at the Baptist Church, of which she is a member. Harrison G. Burley<sup>7</sup> (Jonathan<sup>6</sup>, Josiah<sup>5</sup>, Josiah<sup>4</sup>, Josiah<sup>3</sup>, James<sup>2</sup>, Giles<sup>1</sup>) was born on the old Burley homestead in Newmarket, N. H., Dec. 9, 1834. He received a common-school education, supplemented by a few terms at the academy of Pembroke. He was reared on the farm, and agriculture has been his chief business. In 1874 he was appointed agent for Rockingham Farmers' Mutual Fire Insurance Company, and in 1878 was elected one of its directors.

Whatever business Mr. Burley has been engaged in has been successful. Politically he followed in the footsteps of his fathers, and votes the Democratic ticket. He has held various offices of trust and honor in his native town, among which we mention those of selectman three years, and member of the Legislature in 1872-73, serving on the Committee of State Normal Schools. He married Fannie E., daughter of Jewett and Lydia (Norris) Connor, Jan. 17, 1877. Mrs. Burley was born in Exeter, N. H., Sept. 20, 1848. Their children are Walter D. and Lillian M.

CHAPTER LIX.

NEWTON.

THE town of Newton lies in the southern part of the county, and is bounded as follows: by Massachusetts line, commencing at Brandy Brow Hill, at a stone by which Plaistow, Haverhill, and Merrimac are bounded; thence following Massachusetts line to a stone at northern side of Taxbury's mill-pond to South Hampton line; thence following said line to East Kingston; thence following the Shaply line on Kingston to the Pond Bridge at the outlet of County Pond, which stream is called Powow River; from thence across the pond to the White Sands, so called; from thence southerly to a stone between Kingston and Newton, about ten rods west of the railroad at Newton Junction; thence southerly to a bound in land of Mrs. Crane to meet Plaistow; then westerly on Plaistow line to a bound between the towns of Plaistow and Newton; thence easterly on Plaistow line to Brandy Brow Hill to the bound began at. Estimated to contain about five thousand (5000) acres, besides the pond.

The surface of the town is generally hilly and the soil fertile, yielding good crops of grain and grass. Newton is forty miles southeast from Concord and twenty-eight southwest from Portsmouth.

Petition for Erection of Town.—The first petition on record concerning this town is that of sundry persons opposed to a petition which, it seems, had been presented praying for the erection of a new town. This was under date Feb. 18, 1741-42, and was as follows:

To His Excellency Benning Wentworth Esq Governor and Commander in Chief in and over his Majesty's Province of New Hampshire in New England and to the Honourable his Majesty's Council for said Province.

The Petition of Sundry of the Inhabitants of that part of the Town of Amesbury that lyeth to the Northward of the Boundary line between the Province of New Hampshire and Massachusetts Bay by the late Settlement of the 8th Line and to the Southward of Shapleys Line so called most humbly shews That your Petitioners understand that about sixty persons in Number who live in that part of Salisbury that lyeth between the two aforesaid lines and that part of Amesbury aforesaid have petitioned your Excellency and Honours for a Township of seven miles in Length as mentioned in their Petition. That your Petitioners are included within the bounds of said Township. That the meeting house they have Erected for themselves is so situated as that it is no ways convenient for your Petitioners. That many of those who signed their Petition now say they were deceived. That it will be a great Burden to your Petitioners if they are under an obligation to be holden by what their Neighbors have asked for themselves. That your Petitioners desire they may have liberty to be annexed to such Parishes as are most convenient for them till such Time as they shall be able to make a parish among themselves.

Wherefore your Petitioners pray your Excellency and Honours to grant your Petitioners liberty to speak for themselves before your Excellency and Honours and your Petitioners as in Duty bound shall ever pray &c.

Newton was settled about 1700; it was then called Amesbury Newtown. The State of Massachusetts was bounded three miles from Merrimac River; so the final settlement of the line this part of the territory was left off from Massachusetts.

In 1749 it was incorporated as a town, taking a part of South Hampton.

The inhabitants in 1816 were about four hundred and fifty, with eighty-nine legal voters.

In 1882 the inhabitants exceed one thousand, with over three hundred legal voters.

The first record of a meeting is as follows:

"Province of } To Sargent Heath, Constable for Newtown, these New Hampshire } are to require you to warn the Inhabitants of Newtown Qualified for voting to meet at the House of Sargent Heath In-holder in said town on Wednesday the twenty-sixth of March instant at one of the clock in the afternoon, then and there when met as, first, to choose town officers as the charter direct, 2d to see who the town will employ to build a pound & stocks, & 3dly to see how much money the town will raise for a school, 4thly to see how much money the town will allow for the selectmen & constables for service done the town for the year past

" Dated at Newtown March y<sup>e</sup> 11th A. D. 1755

" JOSEPH PEASLEE } Selectmen
" ROBERT STUART } of
" FRANCIS CHASE } Newton"

By the records we find the above meeting was called at the time and place, and David Bagly was chosen moderator, William Rowell, town clerk, and Joseph Peaslee, William Rowell, and Aaron Currin, selectmen. After choosing the minor officers the meeting was adjourned till Monday, 31st of March, "to be held at the meeting-house." At the adjourned meeting it was voted to build a pound and to raise fifty pounds for schooling. A vote to see if the town would pay the constable sixpence a pound for collecting rates was defeated. Then the closing record of the meeting is, "at the same meeting voted not to act any further on the foregoing warrant, and the meeting was dismissed."

The next meeting was warned for Monday, the 21st day of April; the principal object was "to see whether the town will raise any sum of money and how much in order to clapboard said meeting-house, and lay the floor and build the doors and to provide window-frames and sashes and glass for said house," etc., and also to choose a committee to select a suitable piece of ground for a "burying-place."

This meeting was called; "400 pounds O. T. was voted to be raised to repair the meeting-house." Committees were appointed to "provide stuff" for the meeting-house and "look out a burying-place," said committees to report at an adjourned meeting to be held May 19th. Also, at the above meeting, "it was put to vote to see whether the town would agree with the 'poolers' from South Hampton, both to do duties and receive privileges in full with the inhabitants of Newton, and voted in the affirmative."

The meeting was called May 19th. Nothing done; adjourned to June 2d; then adjourned to June 16th. At this meeting another committee was appointed to "examine and receive the accounts of the former committee," they to report at an adjourned meeting to be held June 23d. One bill brought in by this committee, to "pay for shingling and laying the sleepers 150 pounds, old tenor," was negatived; but a bill to provide window-frames and sashes and a "joyner to assist in putting them up," was passed in the affirmative. It was also voted to allow 60 pounds old tenor for preaching, and to be taken out of the money appropriated for repairing the meeting-house. Voted to hire Mr. Solomon Paige to preach seven Sabbaths.

It appears by record and other evidence in Newton that the Congregationalists were all the religious people in the town at its first settlement, and the inhabitants of this town seem to be the first to come out from the old Established Church, and some of them refused to pay the parish tax for the support of the Congregational Church preaching; the parties were arrested and a lawsuit ensued. Mr. Stuart and a Mr. Carter were the two persons that appeared in court, and the church or collector on the other part. The lawsuit lasted three years or more, and Mr. Stuart and Carter came off victors, which dismayed the church, and enabled the dissenters to form a society and church about 1750 or 1755, called the Baptist Church, and on account of the lawsuit the Congregational Church gave up their meeting-house that had been raised about three years to the town, who finished it for their use and meetings of all religious societies, who occupied it for a number of years.

In 1832 the Christian Church was formed, the first of the denomination in this State. Joseph Boadey, Douglas Farnum, John Rand, Mark Funnald, Henry Plummer, John Hartymann, and others. Nathaniel Day preached his sermon in June, 1836, and is still their pastor, making twenty-five years of pastorate. Members of the church, one hundred and forty-four.

Most of the town-meetings called for a number of years following were for the purpose of finishing the meeting-house, and for procuring preaching, and to prosecute parties who refused to pay parish rates. It seems that the Baptist Society which had formed in the town objected to paying a tax to support the Congregational Church, which was the principal church of the town. They resisted every effort, civil and ecclesiastical, and were finally successful, for in 1769 the town voted "to pay the cost which hath arose by reason of the Baptist people being rated to the Congregational minister in years past." Other resolutions of like character were passed, thus virtually abandoning the contest.

In 1758 a call was given to Rev. Jonas Eames to settle over the Congregational Society. At a town-meeting held Oct. 30, 1758, they voted to give Mr. Eames one thousand pounds. The meeting adjourned for one hour to confer with the reverend gentleman. He refused the call unless they would add six hundred pounds to their offer. The meeting re-assembled and immediately accepted the amendment, and Mr. Eames' answer was in the affirmative.

Thursday, the 7th day of December, was appointed "a day of fasting and prayer in this place, in order for the gathering a church in Newtown," reads the record.

Mr. Eames was ordained the 17th day of January, 1759.

In the first settlement of the town it appears by records and other evidence that there was a Quaker meeting-house in the south part of the town. Some of the Peaslees belong to them.

About 1750 the Baptists built a house of worship in sight of the other.

The Chases and others from out of town formed a church between the years 1750 and 1755. The building or a part of it was moved into the central part of the town subsequently, was converted into a dwelling-house, and is now occupied and owned by Mr. Archibald Dunn.

This church was the first Baptist organization in the State of New Hampshire, and contains at this date, June, 1882, ninety-five members.

The Congregationalists raised a meeting-house on the spot where the Town Hall now stands, but were never able to complete it, and finally gave it up, and the town purchased it for their use and the use of the different religious societies in the town.

The Christian Church was formed in the year 1832, and is still continuing.

The Second Baptist Church was formed at the Junction in the year 1875.

Newton has always been very patriotic, furnishing men for the different wars the colonies were engaged in. The Revolutionary war, the war of 1812, and down to the great Rebellion she did her whole duty.

At a town-meeting held in 1774 it was voted "to choose two men to go to Exeter and choose a committee to go to Philadelphia to join the Congress." Abraham Kimball and Stephen Butler were so chosen. Also voted to pay one pound, fifteen shillings, to pay the committee that goes to Philadelphia the 10th of May.

Sept. 3, 1775, at a town-meeting, it was voted "to raise some men to go to Portsmouth to work on the Batteries, by request of the Committee of Safety." Voted to send as many men as will go.

July 11, 1776, voted to give nine men seven pounds, two shillings, lawful money to each man to go to reinforce Gen. Sullivan at Crown Point.

Dec. 13, 1776, the town voted to give three men three pounds, lawful money, to go to New York to join the Continental army.

April 26, 1779, voted that the selectmen be a committee to go and hire four Continental soldiers during the war. The above are but a few of the many records in regard to hiring soldiers.

Revolutionary Soldiers.—Lieut. Micah Hoyt, afterwards captain by the death of the captain of the company, Reuben Hoyt, and Wister Sauborn went to Bunker Hill when the British tried to drive the Americans from Breed's Hill. How long they stayed in the service is not known. William Gould, Elliot Jewell, David Goodwin, and others went to Ticonderoga or Crown Point, and stayed during the war. Thomas Challis was an officer, and many others left their homes for the seat of war that they and their children might be freemen.

During the war of 1812 we find the following names: Enoch Hoyt, Sargent Heath, Moses Huse, Moses Hoyt, William Foot, Job Stevens, William Harveyman, Israel Ingalls, and others.

John Cooper enlisted when the war broke out as a government soldier, and remained till after the war closed. His family and friends heard nothing from him during the whole war, and supposed him dead. His wife donned her mourning garments and supposed herself a widow. What was her surprise one day at the close of the war to see her husband, dressed in his suit of blue and gilt buttons, enter the house, alive and well. Many such cases no doubt occurred during the war.

In the war of the Rebellion the town furnished as many or more soldiers than any town in the State according to her valuation. She sent eighty-five soldiers to the army and navy, at an expense of thirty-five thousand dollars.

Always ready from the Revolution to the last war to furnish men and money when called upon by their country to protect her rights, would fight her enemies, and maintain her honor as a nation.

Prominent Names in the Town.—Mr. William Rowell was a very prominent man in his day, was first selectman in 1749, and held most of the offices in the gift of the town, sometimes serving as clerk, at others as selectman. His descendants to this day have upheld the integrity of the name, and are our most honored townsmen.

The next name we find is Peaslee. John Peaslee had nine children, the first born in 1734. His descendants are among our most prominent men.

The name of Currier is next, and they were very numerous, and quite a number of their descendants still live in the town, and many of them hold offices of trust. The name of Bartlett is next, and they were among the first to hold office in town. Eliphalet Bartlett, a noted man, and Matthias Bartlett, a surveyor, were often elected representatives, and for many years selectmen. Joseph Bartlett was a noted man, was captured by the Indians at Haverhill in 1708, was held by them four years, settled in this town in 1720. The descendants of the Bartletts are very numerous in the town.

Hoyts come next in order. Four of that name were soldiers in the Revolutionary war. The records of Amesbury show that in the year 1776 ten of that name enlisted from that place. Samuel Hoyt was one of the selectmen a number of years, and town clerk for forty years. Micah Hoyt, son of Micah Hoyt, was a prominent man in the time of the Revolution; was a lieutenant in the army till the war closed. Benjamin and Eli Hoyt held the offices of selectmen and town clerk for many years. John Hoyt, one of their descendants, was selectman for twenty years, and town clerk for fifteen years, and is at this date a hale and hearty man, loved, honored, and respected by all.

The Chases were among the prominent men in the first settlement of the town, were among the first to become Baptists, and helped build the meeting-house in 1750.

Among the Peaslees was one Joseph, who was a Quaker, and, driven from other towns, he took up his abode in the south part of Newton, to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience, without any one to molest or make him afraid. From him sprung the Quaker meeting-house and Quaker burying-ground, near by where remains the dust of all the Quakers of this town.

At a meeting held July 6, 1780, the inhabitants of Newton met upon "journalment," and the meeting opened, William Rowell for moderator. It put to vote to see if said town will give any sum of money for encouragement to hire "nullishia" soldiers to go in the army three months; voted in the affirmative. It put to vote to see if said town will choose a committee to hire said soldiers; not passed in the affirmative—Capt. Robert Stuart, Ensign Daniel Morse chosen a committee to hire said soldiers, and to give any price as they shall think proper. Ye meeting was journed till the tenth day of April instant at five of the clock in ye morning. At the adjournment it was put to vote to see if said town will give five soldiers for three months twenty bushels of Indian corn a month, or make it as good to them in money; the vote passed in the affirmative, and the meeting was "dismist."

Newton at the present date (1882) contains a population of about one thousand; over three hundred voters on the check-list.

The Boston and Maine Railroad passes through from south to north, from Plaistow to Kingston. A branch leaves the main track at Newton Junction and passes through the Centre, where there is another station, to Merrimac, Mass. At the Junction, before the Boston and Maine Road was built, there was but one house in sight, now there are over fifty dwelling-houses, besides several stores. A church and a large saw-mill and box-mill has been recently burnt, but will probably be rebuilt.

Newton supports seven groceries, two meat-markets, two hotels. In the matter of hotels the town has fell behind her record, for in 1807, with a population of about four hundred, there were seven licensed taverns in the town.

We have a carriage manufactory doing a large business, five shoe contractors, several manufacturers of shoes, blacksmiths, house contractors, etc. At the Junction the telegraph-office is situated, and at the village the telephone.

There are three religious bodies in town, two Baptist and one Christian.

NORTH HAMPTON.

Geographical—Topographical—The First Settlements—Garrison-House—Indian Depredations—Petition for Parish Privileges—Organization of Parish—"The North Hill Parish"—Incorporation of the Town—Petition to be Released from Parish Rates—Ecclesiastical History—Miscellaneous—Military Record.

NORTH HAMPTON is one of the coast towns, and is bounded as follows: on the north by Greenland and Rye; on the east by Rye and the Atlantic; on the south by Hampton; and on the west by Stratham.

The surface of the town is generally level and the soil fertile.

The early history of this town will be found principally in the history of Hampton, of which North Hampton originally formed a part. The early record history, Revolutionary history, names of early settlers, etc., are incorporated in the history of the mother town.

Settlements began within the bounds of the present town of North Hampton at one of the earliest periods in the history of the State. It was in about the year 1636 that the first intrepid explorer set foot upon this soil, and this was an event of no ordinary magnitude. The Indians were still pursuing their erratic warfare, and the hardy pioneers earned their bread at the continued hazard of their lives.

Garrison-House.—One of the first acts of the inhabitants was the erection of a garrison-house where all might take refuge in case of an attack by Indians. This garrison-house stood a few rods southwesterly from the site of the first meeting-house, on the southern border of what was formerly called the "Green."

Notwithstanding the precaution taken by the pioneers, the murderous tomahawk of the red man left its imprint upon the little settlement. June 13, 1677, during King Philip's war, four persons, viz., Edward Colcord, Jr., Abraham Perkins, Jr., Benjamin Hilliard, and Caleb Towle, fell victims to his savage cruelty. With the death of Philip, in 1676, the war in the southern part of New England ceased, but in New Hampshire it raged two years longer, and for a time seemed to threaten the extinction of the whole colony.

With the return of peace the settlement resumed its former activity, and not many years elapsed ere it became a prosperous and important element in the colony, and in 1719 we find it petitioning for parish privileges. The Council appointed a committee, by whom the boundaries of the proposed parish were run out, which reported to the court Oct. 29, 1719. The petition, however, was not granted. The next petition relating to the parish of which we have any record was under date Nov. 30, 1730, as follows:

Petition relating to the Parish.

To the Honourable Ions of Representatives of this his Majesties Province of New Hampshire Greeting.

Gentlemen we your honours humble petitioners humbly sheweth that whereas his Honour ys Governor with his Majesties Counsel in answer to a petition from hampton del Grant a parish at North Ende of said town as shall appear by a Copy of sd grant, but it did not com to the honorable Ions of Representatives for their concurrence therewith Therefore we your honours humble petitioners humbly crave your concurrence therewith, and in so doing you will much oblige us your humble Servants As in duty bound we shall ever pray,

The first petition, however, which was reported favorably, was under date of Nov. 17, 1738, when the parish was organized with power to act in affairs concerning the ministry and schools. It was variously named in the town records as the "North Hill Parish in Hampton," "The North Parish in Hampton," etc.

It was incorporated as a town by the name of North Hampton, Nov. 26, 1742.

The delegate from this town to the Constitutional Convention of 1778 was Levi Dearborn, and to that of 1781 was Abraham Drake.

Petition of inhabitants of N. E. part of Hampton to be exempted from nuisance tax

To His Excellency Benjamin Wentworth Esq. Governor and Commander in Chief In and over his Majesties Province of New Hampshire in New England and to the Honourable the Council and house of Representatives of said Province In General Assembly Convened—November 3rd 1742.

The Humble petition of us the Subscribers Most Humbly sheweth—that the houses and habitations of your petitioners are in the north easty part of the town of Hampton at or near Little Bores Head near Little River or near the Sea and that we live most as near upon a lane to the meeting-house at the town as to that of North hill and that it is much easier for us to go to meeting at the town than to North Hill by reason of the Goodness of the way to the town and there not being any way for us to go to meeting at north hill nor ever like to be unless we travel much farther than to go to the meeting-house at the town:

Your petitioners Humbly pray that your Excellency and Honours would be pleased to take this petition into consideration and in your grte Goodness exempt us from paying to the support of the ministry at North hill and that we may still remain—and be taxed to the support of the ministry and the other Publick charges of the town as we used to be and your petitioners as in duty bound shall ever pray.

Moses Leavitt, of this town, was appointed captain in the Continental service, June 13, 1776, and authorized to raise one hundred men to join the army in New York. He was on a committee of officers at Hampton, in 1777, to petition the honorable committee of safety to take measures for the defense of the sea-coast. In 1778 he was again appointed to enlist soldiers for the Continental army; was appointed lieutenant-colonel of Third Regiment New Hampshire militia in 1781, and was representative to the General Assembly in 1782 and 1783.

The Congregational Church.<sup>1</sup>—Our forefathers were careful to erect the meeting-house and provide for the preaching of the gospel as soon as they had formed any distinct and considerable settlement. Many of the townships originally were large, and as the population extended to the borders of the town, a portion of the people were often obliged to travel a long distance to church. The only way to obviate this difficulty was in forming a separate parish whenever the population became sufficient to support a minister. So it came about that many towns had more than one church of the same denominational order, and not infrequently were there new parishes afterwards incorporated into towns.

Within one hundred years after the first house was built in Hampton a considerable settlement had formed at North Hill, about three miles from the meeting-house. Those settlers suffered many trials because of their isolation, the difficulty in clearing the land, and Indian depredations. Their first houses (two of which are now standing) were lined with bricks to make them bullet-proof, and a garrisoned house was built on the green, to which they resorted in time of especial danger. While they felt that they must vigorously wield the axe, and drive the plow, and unceasingly watch the stealthy savage, they grew dissatisfied with their religious privileges, believing that it was needless for them to go three miles on the Sabbath to worship when the preaching of the gospel could be supported in their midst.

With the impression that some steps should be taken towards a better state of things on the 2d of May, 1719, "Samuel Chapman and others presented a petition to the Council Board" that they might be relieved from giving support for the minister at the old parish in Hampton, and be permitted to lawfully sustain the gospel among themselves. This was respectfully received, and a committee of four persons was appointed to ascertain "the bounds and limits of a parish in the north end of Hampton." On the 29th of May that committee reported that the parish lines should be nearly the same as the present boundaries of North Hampton, with the exception of a part which has since been set off to the town of Rye. But as the selectmen of Hampton remonstrated, the petition was dismissed, and nothing further of account was done towards effecting a separation until 1734, when, on the 9th of October, thirty-five persons petitioned the General Assembly, praying that the parish bounds might be established agreeable to the report of the committee appointed to define them fifteen years before. This request was carefully considered, but on account of the opposition which the selectmen offered, and a remonstrance signed by twenty-six individuals who lived within the bounds of the proposed parish, they stating "we rather continue as we are, one parish," the bill passed in the negative. At the beginning of the year 1736 several members of the church living near North Hill obtained the consent of their pastor, Rev. Ward Cotton, to hold religious meetings among themselves on Sabbath evenings. He drew up some articles of agreement to govern the meetings, which all who proposed to attend signed.

Whether this was done as a compromise to quiet the known restlessness is not quite certain. However, it was not sufficient to meet their desires for religious advantages. It rather deepened their sense of deprivation, for, in 1737, they renewed their request to be constituted a distinct parish, but this effort also proved fruitless.

There were persevering men in those days, especially in things which they knew were right. Accordingly, on the 2d of November, 1738, another petition of a similar nature was presented to the General Assembly, then held at Portsmouth. On the 17th of the same month a bill granting the request passed the House of Representatives, was concurred in by the Council, and received the indorsement of the provincial Governor.

Thus the parish at North Hill was formed, on the condition that they would support a minister and a schoolmaster, and would pay their annual proportion of the grant which the town had made to Dorothy Gookin, widow of Rev. Nathaniel Gookin, who, at his death had been minister of the town twenty-four years.

Although the exact date cannot be determined, yet prior to 1734 a meeting-house was erected a little south of the centre of what is now the common. It was thirty by forty feet, framed for galleries, and was without pews for years, notwithstanding an agreement had been made that one range of pews should be laid out adjoining the walls of the house, to be valued from ten pounds to fifteen pounds, "according to the dignity of the pews." The evidence is only inferential that meetings were held in that house until the parish was legally formed.

The first parish meeting was called by Daniel Sanborn, on Christmas day, 1738, when a committee was appointed to agree with Mr. Nathaniel Gookin, son of the lamented minister of the first parish, to preach to the society for three months.

The first annual meeting which, by act of the General Assembly, must occur in March, was held on the 20th of that month, 1739, at which they agreed to employ a minister for one year. But at an adjourned meeting, held on the 8th of May following, they voted to settle a minister within twelve months. To aid in making a right choice, they proposed to follow the usual custom of those days by calling a fast and inviting neighboring ministers to spend the day with them in prayer and consultation. Agreeable to the advice then given, the parish chose a committee on the 12th of June "to treat with Mr. Nathaniel Gookin to settle with them in the work of the ministry." They voted to procure for him a parsonage of at least ten acres of land, fence it, and build upon it a convenient house and barn, to furnish him annually sufficient firewood, and to give him one hundred and ten pounds a year, adding five pounds each succeeding year until the amount should reach one hundred and forty pounds, and if it were needful, and they were able, further additions should be made. This was to be given him, even if, because of sickness, he might be unable to perform Sabbath service. Surely such was a generous offer for those times.

After due consideration the call was accepted. In his letter to the parish committee, he said, "I accept your invitation, demanding of you, as you will answer it at the great day, that you give diligent heed to the truths I shall bring you from the gospel of Jesus Christ, and practice according to them; also that you be continually earnest at the throne of grace for me, that I may be a faithful and successful laborer in the gospel among you." He at that time was twenty-five years of age, having graduated at Harvard College seven years before.

As yet there was no church organization, but on the 23d of September, 1739, those persons living within the bounds of the new parish who belonged to the First Church made application for letters of dismission, that they might organize a church at North Hill, but the purpose was not favorably regarded, and their request was refused. Nothing daunted, the North Hill people called an Ecclesiastical Council, ex parte, of course, which met on the 30th of October. The Council and brethren sent a declaration to the First Church, but they were not recognized. Afterwards a public conference was agreed upon and held, yet the church refused to grant the required letters of dismission. Smarting under such treatment, on the day following, the Council and brethren took matters into their own hands, and organized what they called "the Fourth Church of Christ in Hampton," and at the same time ordained Mr. Gookin as pastor. This was a bold stroke, but it proved to be a wise one. The First Church afterwards acquiesced in the movement, and within three years they granted letters of dismission to several persons and recommendation to the church at North Hill.

After much perplexity and deep feeling the desire of the people in the north part of Hampton was secured so far. But as in all new public enterprises there are many calls for money and labor, so the North Hill parish found many things which needed attention.

In 1741 a parsonage-house was built, of dimensions twenty-five by thirty feet, with a lower addition on one end. During the same year the first pew in the meeting-house was built, having the extent of five feet on the wall from the pulpit stairs, and five feet front, covering an area of twenty-five square feet. In this the family of the minister sat, while the rest of the people had to arrange themselves as best they could, for there were no other regular seats built in the house until 1746. In the year following a parsonage barn, twenty by twenty-four feet, with twelve-foot posts, was built. This completed the agreement of the society in providing a parsonage. It must have been at great personal sacrifice that they provided so much; and had not relief been given by their right in some of the first parish property, their struggle would have been very severe and prolonged.

On the 30th of November, 1742, the parish was incorporated as a town. This act brought up new matters for adjustment between the two parishes. The second minister of Hampton, Rev. Timothy Dalton, who died in 1661, left a large ministerial fund for the town. When North Hampton was incorporated the tax-payers felt that they were justly entitled to their proportion of that property, and in a friendly way they requested that it might be conveyed to them. For some unexplained reason the request, which was several times repeated, was not granted; and it was found necessary to carry the case into court, where, after some delay, it was decided in favor of the complainants. As nearly as can be ascertained, about one-fifth part of the old parsonage property was conveyed to North Hampton. This greatly aided in the support of the minister. Especially helpful was it, since about that time the colonial currency began to depreciate in value, so that the parish was obliged to add to Mr. Gookin's salary. At first they increased it five pounds, then twenty, then ninety, afterwards adding more and more every year until it became twelve hundred pounds.

As the parsonage-house was too small for the increasing family of the pastor, a section of eighteen feet was put on to one end in 1753. In order that it might better accommodate the minister, the house was afterwards moved to a place opposite the present parsonage, and nearer the meeting-house, on to a lot of land secured by exchange with Capt. Abner Fogg. There it was occupied by different ministers until the year 1800.

The first meeting-house had never been fully finished. There was nothing costly about it. Even the pulpit was unornamented and simple, although of good workmanship, and the only pew was not elaborate. There had arisen a feeling that the old house was inadequate to meet the wants of the increasing congregation, and withal it was probably inferior to houses of worship in the neighboring parishes, so after much discussion and planning they decided to erect a new one. The work was begun, and for the main part of the house completed in 1761. It was forty by fifty-eight feet, with galleries after the style of those days, and was built in a substantial manner, being unique and comfortable, except in the cold weather, when the windows would rattle and the people would shiver, and the preacher would try to wax warm over his well-written manuscript. The days of carpeted floors, elastic cushions, anthracite burners, and steam-pipes had not come. The addition of a steeple to the meeting-house was earnestly discussed, some wanting it on the west end, some on the east end, and some not caring to have it at all. Because of this diverse feeling the whole matter was dropped, and it was fifty-five years before the tower was erected and the much-needed bell pealed forth its invitations to worship.

After the completion of the meeting-house the interests of the church and parish moved on without especial innovation or jar until the 23d of October, 1766, when Mr. Gookin was removed by death, after faithfully laboring for the salvation of souls and setting before his people a worthy example for twenty-seven years.

His ministry was marked by many of the hardships which pioneers of the gospel necessarily experience. He is said to have been "a sound divine, a serious, plain preacher, a wise counselor, and a much-beloved pastor of his flock." He was thrice married,—first to Miss Judith Coffin, daughter of Eliphalet Coffin, of Exeter. His second wife was Miss Anna Fitch, daughter of Rev. Jabez Fitch, of Portsmouth, by whom he had three children. His third wife was Mrs. Love Wingate, by whom he had eight children.

After the death of Mr. Gookin the town generously provided for his widow, furnishing a comfortable home for a while at least, and giving her fourteen pounds lawful money.

As the most of the early church records have been lost, the number of members when organized and the additions during the first pastorate cannot with certainty be given, but it is probable that the original number was quite small, and that about forty belonged to the church at the time of Mr. Gookin's death. Although it was a sad day to the church when their first pastor laid off his care and entered into everlasting rest, yet they were not long willing to be without some one to break to them the bread of life. Accordingly, Mr. Joseph Stacy Hastings, a native of Newton, Mass., then twenty-five years of age, was invited to preach as a probationer. So highly pleased were the people that they at once gave him a call to settle with them as minister of the town. Feeling that "a great and effectual door was open" to him, he accepted the call, and was ordained over the church on the 11th of February, 1767. He was a good and true man, although somewhat eccentric, keenly sensitive, and sometimes impatient of human weaknesses. He deeply mourned over the worldliness and cold formality of Christians, and earnestly labored to effect a greater spirituality in the church. He believed that every Christian life should be luminous with love. He accomplished a worthy work during his ministry of seven and a half years, receiving fifty persons to church membership. He adopted the Sandemanian doctrines and notions, after which he declared the resignation of his ministry in a brief and decided manner on the 3d of July, 1774. Although informal, the church courteously acquiesced in his decision. He was treated with great kindness by the people. They voted to make him a present of one hundred and twenty dollars, the crops on the parsonage for that year, and the use of the parsonage-house until they should want it. During Mr. Hastings' ministry the people became agitated about the subject of singing. Different opinions were entertained concerning what they should sing, but in the month of May, 1771, the town voted "to sing one of Dr. Watts' hymns once every Sabbath," and in the following April a special parish-meeting was called to see if they would introduce "Dr. Watts' Psalms and Three Books of Hymns," to be sung in the church and congregation. It was decided to use those hymns in their worship which proved to be satisfactory; at least the subject was not seriously agitated again.

Soon after the pulpit became vacant a Mr. Cotton preached for a few Sabbaths, and so much were the people pleased with his services that on the following February they invited him to settle as their minister, but he was not disposed to comply with the request.

After this their attention was turned to Rev. Samuel Morrill, and although they were not harmonious, yet he received a call to become their pastor and teacher in September, 1775, which was accepted. The opposition to settling became greatly intensified, and it was agreed to call a council to advise upon the matter. After much trouble the parish voted not to settle Mr. Morrill, and requested him to withdraw his acceptance of the call. Next, Mr. Jeremiah Shaw preached acceptably to the people for a few Sabbaths, and on the 7th of August, 1776, was formally asked to become their minister, but for reasons not now known that vote was reconsidered twelve days after. Thus they were obliged to look further for a pastor. Rev. David McClure, who had just declined a call to the church in Portsmouth, was invited to supply the pulpit for a time. Being highly pleased with his ministrations, the people invited him to settle with them, offering as a stipulated salary "eighty-five pounds, lawful money, together with the house parsonage and the buildings on the same." With unanimity of feeling he was installed on the 13th of November, 1776, twelve churches having been invited upon the council.

He was a native of Boston, twenty-eight years old, and graduated from Yale College seven years before. He was a man of high culture, good judgment, and pleasing address, and for twenty-three years (1777 to 1800) was one of the trustees of Dartmouth College. His Alma Mater gave him the degree of D.D. in 1803.

As the colonies were at war with the mother-country when he was settled, having but a few months before declared themselves independent, as things in the political world were in an unsettled state, as excitement on all great national questions ran high, as the country was comparatively poor, and as no human mind could forecast the future, it was a trying period to commence a pastorate. Since national affairs were of absorbing interest, great effort was needed to make men feel their accountability to God. But under the wise and judicious labors of Mr. McClure the church and parish prospered, and during his nine years of ministrations twenty-two were added to the membership. Soon after his settlement depreciation in the currency of the country became alarming, and at times the prospect of supporting a family seemed discouraging. The people nobly exerted themselves to relieve him. During his first year they gave him one hundred dollars more than they had agreed. The next year they gave him five hundred dollars additional. In 1779 the town added one thousand dollars, and afterwards increased it by one hundred bushels of corn; and in 1780 his salary was raised to twelve thousand dollars and twelve cords of wood! He bravely struggled on, receiving the affections of his people, and carefully calculating how to make his thousand dollars a month purchase the necessities for himself and family. Finally he felt it his duty to resign his charge, which he accordingly did in August, 1785. Having been dismissed, he moved to East Windsor, Conn., where he preached until his death in 1820.

As the pulpit was again vacant, the church called a fast, and consulted with several ministers of neighboring churches in reference to securing a pastor. Mr. Benjamin Thurston, of Bradford, Mass., then about thirty years of age, was recommended, and being well liked, he received a call for settlement, and was ordained on the 2d of November, 1785. Although an able preacher, he was not very Christ-like in character, yet during his ministry of about fifteen years fifty-three were added to the church. A debt was contracted of considerable amount, to pay which a portion of the parsonage was sold. Agreeable to the known desire of the people, he tendered his resignation, and was dismissed on the 27th of October, 1800.

The parish chose a committee to look up another minister, and Col. Thomas Leavitt, chairman of that committee, went to Andover, Mass., with the purpose of inviting Mr. Jonathan French, son of the beloved pastor of the South Parish in that town, to preach as a candidate. He gave up the prospect of another field of labor, and agreed to spend a few Sabbaths in town. The people were well pleased with him, and without delay he was requested to become their minister. He was ordained on the 18th of November, 1801, being twenty-three years of age, and having graduated at Harvard College three years before. Little then did he realize the work which God had marked out for him in North Hampton. Little did he think that he would be instrumental in moulding the character of more than one generation in the same parish. Little did he suppose he should write a history on human hearts that would cause his name to be fragrant in memory long after he should rest from his labors. It is well that he could not divine the future. He proved to be the right man in the right place.

of the present century, and as the parish included the whole town, this feeling was expressed in ecclesiastical as well as civil affairs, and was pronounced in an apparent opposition to the settlement of Mr. French. Great wisdom was needed to meet such a state of things, but the young pastor was equal to the occasion, and so deported himself as to command the respect of all classes.

It was one condition of the call for settlement that the parish should repair the parsonage-house or build a new one. They found it advisable to build. The work was undertaken in earnest, and in 1803 they completed a substantial and commodious house after the style of those days. About this time the pastor was married to Miss Rebecca Farrar, of Lincoln, Mass., a lady fair to look upon, lovely in spirit, and possessed of sterling virtues. As he was returning to his home with his bride, after having taken a short vacation, the people, desirous of showing their esteem, sent a delegation to meet him just beyond the border of the State, while the greater part of them went out to escort him from the Hampton line to the recently finished and furnished parsonage-house, and to make the occasion complete a grand reception was held in the evening. This auspicious beginning was followed by years of peace and prosperity, the pastor continuing to receive that high respect, and sometimes reverence, which people of those days were accustomed to give to ministers of the gospel, while his words of instruction and counsel were received without much serious questioning or even mental dissent. In those days it required great boldness, and certainly it was a violation of the sentiment of the people, to make a public issue with the minister. In such a state of society the pastor's influence was potent and usually prevailing. He was consulted on temporal as well as spiritual interests, and often became the final arbitrator when parties disagreed.

In the year 1816 the parish decided to add a tower to the church and place in it a good-sized bell. This was what their fathers felt the need of and long talked about. Its completion was a matter of congratulation, as it gave new life to the community by being rung to regulate their daily labors, as well as to summon them to worship.

Although the parish included the town, yet all the inhabitants of the town were not in sympathy with the church. For a generation some had entertained the belief and sentiments of the Baptists, and had protested against the support of orthodox worship. This number increased until a Free-Will Baptist Society was formed. Many of this class early availed themselves of a statute law, by which their ministerial tax could be used for other than the support of orthodox Congregational worship. This prepared the way for a proportional claim of the parsonage property. A period of great trial now came on. Nothing more difficult to manage had occurred since the North Hill parish was formed, nearly one hundred years before. Party feeling was strong, and it became needful to support the preaching of the gospel independent of the town. This necessitated the formation of the North Hampton Congregational Society in 1834, although the constitution was not adopted until the month of June, 1835.

In order to equitably divide the parish property, the town voted to sell the parsonage for sixteen hundred dollars, and that each voter should say to which religious society his proportional part should be given. Much the larger proportion was given to the Congregational Society. On the 27th of April that society voted to purchase the parsonage for the sum specified. In payment of this they had to tax themselves only for the amount which the Baptist people had received.

As the town ceased to provide ministerial support after the sale and transfer of the parsonage, Mr. French was employed by the Congregational Society. So strongly attached was he to his people that in their period of trial he proposed to relinquish one-fourth part of his salary, when the entire amount was scarcely sufficient to maintain himself and family. But the people never knowingly allowed him to be in want.

The meeting-house still belonged to the town, and an unsuccessful effort was made to secure its transfer to the new society. They now began to feel that they must have a house of their own in which to worship. This feeling deepened, and they soon decided to build on the parsonage land. Arrangements were made for executing their purpose, and on the 21st and 22d of June, 1838, "the frame of the new meeting-house was raised. Prayer was offered by the pastor on the foundation before the raising commenced. No ardent spirit or other intoxicating liquor was furnished at the raising. It was accomplished without noise and without injury to any one." The house was dedicated to the worship of God on the 31st of October of the same year, the sermon being preached by the pastor from John x. 23. This was a little more than one hundred years after the first meeting-house was built in town, and seventy-seven years after the dedication of the second house. Nine years afterwards a new bell was hung in the tower, and in the year following that important addition measures were taken by the ladies to purchase the hall in the old brick school-house, which years before was built for a lodge of Freemasons. This was fitted up for a vestry, and dedicated on the 31st of January, 1849, and was one of the many improvements secured to the church and society by the Ladies' Sewing Circle.

No social meetings of a religious character were held when Mr. French entered upon his ministry. In 1816 he wrote: "Taking into consideration the low state of religion in our church and parish, and viewing it to be exceedingly desirable that professors of religion should be awakened to a spirit of piety and a life of godliness, and that religion should be revived in this place, Mrs. French and myself retired in the evening of August 2d after our communion lecture, and united in a prayer especially for a revival of religion in our own hearts and family, and in the church and town." He was greatly in earnest to secure a higher type of godliness. At the close of the public lecture on October 3d he "proposed a religious conference at the parsonage-house at seven o'clock in the evening, and invited the members to whom such a meeting would be agreeable and convenient to attend." Eight persons were present. That was the beginning of the weekly church prayer-meeting, which has never since for any considerable period been omitted, and which has been of incalculable benefit to the people, the seed-corn of repeated revivals of religion.

The membership of the church was about one hundred when Mr. French became pastor, but additions were frequently made during his ministry. In 1806 ten were received into the church, in 1817 eleven were added, in 1823 there was an increase of forty-two, in 1827 twenty-five were admitted, in 1832 thirty-four publicly confessed Christ, and in 1839 the church was strengthened by thirty-five new members. During this active pastorate of fifty-one years two hundred and eighty-five were admitted to the church, increasing the actual membership to one hundred and forty-five. One year before having a colleague the pastor was honored with the degree of Doctor of Divinity by Dartmouth College. On the 13th of December, 1856, he died among his beloved people and surrounded by his large family, until this time unbroken by death, at age of seventy-eight years, having been ordained over this church a little more than fifty-five years before.

Mr. John Dinsmore, from Bangor Theological Seminary, was ordained as colleague pastor on the 18th of November, 1852. At that time the church and society were in a healthy condition, and there was reason to suppose that the severest days of trial and hardship were over. Under his ministrations the interests of the church strengthened, and the growth steadily continued. The demand for seats in the meeting-house became greater than the supply, so an addition to one end was made sufficient for sixteen pews in 1855, the greater part of which were soon purchased by different individuals. Essential changes were made in some of the parsonage buildings, and in other respects the pastorate was memorable for harmony and general prosperity. "The word of God grew and multiplied." The church retained her good report among sister churches, and the door was opened for increasing usefulness in the future. Sixty-six were received to the church during Mr. Dinsmore's pastorate, securing a net gain of eighteen. After about ten years of faithful service he resigned and accepted a call to Winslow, Me.

The church did not care to be long without a pastor to break to them the bread of life, and being highly pleased with the temporary ministrations of Rev.

RESIDENCE OF DR. MOSES L. HOBBS,

Elijah Cutler, they invited him to settle with them, but he did not see fit to comply with the request.

After this Mr. John O. Barrows, from Andover Theological Seminary, by his pleasing address, fine culture, and unquestioned piety, won the hearts of the people after a few Sabbaths' supply, and received a unanimous call from the church and society to become their pastor. He was ordained on the 9th of June, 1864.

During his pastorate of two years there was considerable religious interest, and thirteen were received into the church. Believers were enjoined to be active in every department of Christian labor, and the pure and perfect standard of Christ was constantly held up for imitation. The greater part of the parsonage farm was sold about the time of his settlement, while a legacy of two thousand dollars had just been left the society by Rufus Leavitt, Esq., and at a subsequent period Miss Olive Hobbs left one thousand dollars for the society. Mr. Barrows asked to be relieved from the pastoral office, and was dismissed on the 8th of September, 1866, soon afterwards being installed over the First Church in Exeter.

In the spring of 1867, Rev. Thomas V. Haines, then preaching at Ossipee Centre, was invited to the vacant pulpit. On the 5th of May he became acting pastor, which relation he sustained to the church until the 27th of April, 1870, when, under the guidance of a marked Providence, he was installed.

The people caught the spirit of external improvement which was becoming quite general among the churches, and as the old vestry purchased by the ladies twenty years before was inconvenient and much out of repair, and withal by some regarded as unsafe, the meeting-house was raised in 1869, and large and comfortable rooms added as a basement for social meetings, lectures, and Sunday-school purposes. For several Sabbaths the church was necessarily unoccupied, but the work was pushed to completion, and the dedicatory services were held on the 26th of October. This was a much-needed improvement, which the people appeared to appreciate.

In 1874 the interior of the meeting-house was remodeled, finely finished, and beautifully adorned. New furniture was provided by the generosity of J. W. F. Hobbs, Esq., who at a later period added stained windows tastefully designed. A pipe-organ was secured and set up, and the finishing touches were given, so that the rededication services were held on the 2d of July.

Several seasons of religious awakening have occurred within the present pastorate. In 1872 seventeen were gathered into the church. In 1876 occurred the most remarkable revival known in the history of the church. The entire town was deeply moved by the presence of the Holy Spirit. The Christian religion became the great theme of conversation. Professors were awakened to a fuller sense of their responsibility, while many entered upon a new religious life. Seventy-five united with the church. In 1879 nine were received into church-fellowship. During the fifteen years of the present pastorate one hundred and twenty-one have taken upon themselves the covenant relations of this church, giving a net gain of fifty-seven members, the present number being two hundred and four. The growth of the church has been slow but steady from the beginning. More than seven hundred have been enrolled among the membership.

Benevolent causes for the evangelizing of the world have received attention. Soon after the great idea of missions to heathen lands had been projected a response was given by this church. One missionary—Rev. Simon L. Hobbs, to the Choctaw Indians—has gone from the membership.

In 1814 the Female Charitable Society was organized, which accomplished a good work for fourteen years. In 1817 the Gentlemen's Charitable Society began operations, and liberally contributed for ten years. In 1818 the Juvenile Charitable Society was formed, in which active work was done for twelve years. In 1845 the Female Cent Society, auxiliary to the State society of the same name, was started, which is still helpful to the cause of missions. In 1873 the Women's Missionary Society took shape and activity, which is doing a good work for foreign lands. In 1878 the Young People's Mission Circle had its rise, and is characterized by commendable zeal. In 1818 the Sunday-school was started by Rev. Dr. French, in which the children repeated texts of Scripture and were catechized. It has been maintained with greater or less interest, and has grown to be a service of much importance, being promotive of earnest study of the Scriptures, and having a membership at the present time of two hundred and ninety-three, embracing all ages, and standing second only to the preaching service in methods of accomplishing good. The present superintendent, Deacon Frank R. Drake, has filled the office for the past eleven years.

This church and people have generally been interested in the great events occurring around them. They have been true to their convictions, loyal to their God and the great principles of our political government. Some of them suffered much during the last French and Indian war. When the Revolutionary war began they raised minute-men, paying them seven dollars a month, and six out of the number were required to guard the coast of this town each night from sunset to sunrise. They furnished soldiers when called upon, and those at home deprived themselves of comforts to pay the bounties.

During the great Rebellion the largely prevailing sentiment was truly loyal, and a considerable number of the young men experienced the hardships of the battle-field. During our national existence the people have been patriotic and truth-loving, always industrious, and, manifesting ordinary frugality, never disposed to create lines of caste in society, or to live religgardless of one another's interests. They have been a "peaceable folk," knowing the meaning of "neighborly kindness." Every generation has risen above the preceeding in comforts and culture. The influence of the church has been powerfully felt for good, while the instruction of the pulpit has had more to do in moulding the character of community and giving a grand uplift to all the people than any other agent.

Appendix.—Nearly one hundred years ago a few of the people of the town lost their love for Congregationalism, and complained against paying their rates for the support of orthodox worship. They were deeply aggrieved, and on the 27th of March, 1787, the town voted to give them their minister's rates, dating back to the year 1783. The greater part of those who dissented called themselves Free-Will Baptists. They erected a small house of worship in the south part of the town some time before the close of the last century. Their meetings were held for a number of years, although they had no organization either of church or society. One of their number was regarded as the preacher, but at length the interest waned, and their house of worship was moved to Hampton.

After a considerable interval their interest revived, and the First Free-Will Baptist Society of North Hampton was incorporated on the 18th of December, 1816. Religious meetings were held for a while, but again their ardor cooled, and soon the society had only a nominal existence. But it was reorganized about the year 1834, and the interest became so great that a Free-Will Baptist Church was formed.

About this time there arose another class of Baptists who preferred the Christian persuasion. They held separate meetings, and in all particulars were denominationally distinct from the former.

In 1838 the Free-Will Baptists built a meeting-house in the east part of the town, where they worshipped for a few years, but as there were but few of them they soon grew weak, and abandoned their enterprise. This was their last attempt as a denomination to maintain the gospel in the town.

The Christian Baptists, who had increased in numbers and strength while they held their meetings in the school-house, began to talk of building a house of worship. They saw that it might not be best to erect another house by the side of the one then unoccupied, so in 1846 they bought up the pews in the Free-Will Baptist house, and came into possession of it, and on the 22d of January, 1859, the Christian Church was organized with twenty members; but their number has considerably increased, although they have not had regular preaching all of the time since. This is an important part of the town, rapidly increasing in wealth and, during the summer months, in population.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

REV. JONATHAN FRENCH, D.D.

John French, one of the progenitors of the subject of this sketch, came from Thorneic, Scotland, when about twenty years of age, and was admitted a freeman in 1639. He lived to be about eighty years of age, dying Aug. 6, 1692. His early married life was spent in Dorchester, but subsequently he removed to Braintree. He was the father of eight children, the seventh of whom was Thomas, who was born in Braintree, Jan. 10, 1657. Thomas was married and had ten children, the third of whom was Moses, who was born Feb. 16, 1700. He married Esther, daughter of Ephraim and Sarah Thayer, Dec. 24, 1730, and continued to make his home in Braintree. Their children numbered seven, the sixth of whom was Jonathan, the father of the subject of this sketch. He was born Jan. 30, 1740. When about seventeen years of age he entered the army employed against the French and Indians, and in March, 1757, repaired to Fort Edward. Debilitated by the smallpox and the fever and ague, he returned home in October. He was afterward stationed at Castle William, where, in the capacity of a sergeant, he often had the chief care of the garrison. In that situation his life was twice in great jeopardy. An Indian servant at the castle, to whom he had refused rum, assailed him with a drawn knife. With great presence of mind and agility he avoided the weapon and brought his antagonist to the earth. The Indian, completely vanquished and surprised that his life was spared, was ever after grateful and obliging. In the other instance, at great hazard, he seized an Indian prisoner who had escaped from confinement, and, armed with a large club, threatened the life of any one who should attempt to take him. Contemplating the practice of physic and surgery, his leisure was employed in the study, and so much did he enjoy the confidence of the faculty that the medicines and care of the sick were often intrusted solely to him. It is related of him that in an emergency calling for medicines that could be obtained only in Boston, when no one could be induced to make the perilous trip because of the dangerous condition of the ice, he crossed and recrossed the harbor, carrying a long pole horizontally, and making a safe trip, although often in great danger. It is gratifying to know that the patient in whose behalf the trip was made was restored to health by means of the medicines procured.

Mr. French prepared for college, and on leaving the army entered Harvard University, from which institution he graduated in 1771. He was ordained a minister of the gospel in the South Parish in Andover, Sept. 23, 1772. His manner of preaching is described as "serious, solemn, and impressive." He was an industrious worker, a cheerful man, and "given to hospitality." His house was frequented by visitors of all ages, and he was ever a favorite with both old and young.

In religious sentiment he was such a Calvinist as the first fathers of New England. He had a strong attachment to the Assembly's catechism, in which he regularly instructed the children in the seven districts of his parish. He was one of the founders of the Massachusetts Society for the Promotion of Christian Knowledge, and being a wise, prudent, and judicious counselor, was called to attend a great number of ecclesiastical councils in all parts of New England.

Aug. 26, 1779, a little less than a year after his ordination, he was married to Miss Abigail Richards, a daughter of Dr. Benjamin Richards, of Weymouth. To them were born five children. The third of these was the only son, and took his father's name. Rev. Jonathan French, of Andover, died of a paralytic affection, July 28, 1809, in the seventieth year of his age, and the thirty-seventh of his ministry. A sermon was delivered at his funeral from John xiv. 28, by Rev. Mr. Stone, of Reading.

We come now to speak of Rev. Jonathan French, of North Hampton. He was born Aug. 16, 1778, at Andover, and, as stated above, bore his father's name. He also followed in his father's footsteps, and became a minister of the gospel. Both his parents were direct descendants from John Alden, the first man who stepped his foot on Plymouth Rock, and one of the most prominent and influential men in the Plymouth Colony. Growing up in a Christian family and highly favored by the religious influences which surrounded him, his life-work was early determined upon. Indeed, it is said that he formed the purpose in his fourth year, during a distressing confinement from a deep scald, to become a preacher of the gospel, a purpose which he never afterward relinquished. He made a public profession of faith in Christ at the age of sixteen years, and during his first year in college. Always of a studious nature, he was given the best opportunities for education to be enjoyed in New England, which opportunities he improved to the utmost. At sixteen years he entered Harvard College, and when at twenty he graduated with the highest honor of the class, the opportunity to deliver the valedictory oration was proffered him, but declined. After leaving college he was employed for a time as a teacher in Phillips' Academy, at Andover. He studied theology under the direction of his father, and began to preach at North Hampton in July, 1801, being ordained on the 18th of November, in the same year, as pastor of the Congregational Church. He is described as being at that time "youthful in appearance, small in stature, of a florid countenance, and quick and nervous in temperament." His record as a minister is a most remarkable one in this, that for fifty-five years he labored with this one church, and for fifty-one years was its sole pastor. It is said, too, that in this long ministry he was prevented by sickness from attending public worship only eight and a half Sabbaths.

In 1804, three years after his ordination, a new parsonage was built at North Hampton for the "young minister," with the expectation that he would shortly occupy it with his bride. But the lady of his choice became infatuated with a sea-captain, and refused to marry the minister, tartly remarking that she preferred a ship with three masts. Mr. French subsequently married Rebecca, only daughter of Deacon Samuel Farrar, of Lincoln. Deacon Farrar was a captain at the battle of Lexington, and his father was a member of the Continental Congress. Mrs. French's brothers were Samuel Farrar, Esq., one of the founders of the Theological Seminary at Andover; Prof. John Farrar, of Cambridge; and Deacon James Farrar, of Lincoln, who spent his days at the home of his ancestors in Lincoln.

In the early days of his pastorate there was a lack of harmony in the parish, largely growing out of political differences. In fact, one of the factions finding that the others were favorable to him objected to his being settled at all, and he hesitated about taking the place. But the Ecclesiastical Council upon investigation decided that the opposition to him was not at all personal, and promptly ordained and installed him. Time vindicated their action, for in a little while he became popular with the men of both parties or factions, and brought the church into entire harmony in its work. He entered heartily into all neighborhood work, and took a lively interest in township affairs. He enjoyed the confidence of the people to a remarkable degree. It was a common thing for them to consult him in their business plans, and in sickness he was as frequently called as the physician, and often he made the first visit and was advised with as to whether or not a physician should be called. He studied human nature to good purpose, and was able to deal with the eccentricities of his parishioners in a manner to win them to the better way without giving lasting offense.

He was among the first to comprehend the evils of intemperance, and to engage actively in the reform movement. Even while it was considered a mark of disrespect not to set the decanter before one's guests, he resolved to banish it from his house and expose the cause of reform. To those engaged in the liquor traffic, he said, "Your business is counteracting the influence of mine. Serious thoughts instilled into the minds of our people on our Sabbath, appear, with a considerable class of men, to be dissipated at the store or the tavern before another Sabbath comes." He was not only a man of strong convictions and fixed principles, but of deep, earnest piety as well. His church was never numerically large, but it was a working church, and frequently blessed with religious revivals. Few changes except by birth or death occurred in the community, but nevertheless it was his privilege to receive into the church two hundred and eighty-five members during his pastorate. Other communities were also blessed by his labors, for he aided and encouraged them in the building of churches and the sustaining of public worship. More than once he was called to preach the election sermon before the State Legislature, and he was invited to attend one hundred and seventy-three eccle-sistatious councils. He joined the Piscataqua Association when there were but twenty members. For a long time he was the youngest, and always one of the most active and most deeply interested. Dartmouth College conferred upon him the degree of D. D. in 1851. The Sabbath-school and the Bible-class early awakened his attention and interest. The prayer-meeting was always a place of interest when he was there. During the fifty first year of his ministry, and when the shadows of life were rapidly lengthening, there came a season of especial interest to the aged pastor and his people, and some fifty or sixty persons devoted themselves to the cause of religion.

He was a happy man in his family, and lived to see his eleven children—five sons and six daughters—grow to manhood and womanhood, and all occupying useful positions in society. One has said of him that "he was a good man and just, being sound in judgment, well informed in ecclesiastical events, orthodox in his theology, a scriptural preacher, loyal to his convictions, affable in his manners, and, without studied effort, inviting the confidence of his people." He wrought well for the Master. He was a bright and unblemished example of Christian and ministerial life, uniformly devout and prayerful, eminent for gravity, simplicity, and sound speech. In doctrine he was incorrupt, in labors abundant and successful. His death, which occurred in his seventy-eighth year, was peaceful and triumphant.

DR. MOSES L. HOBBS.

Dr. Moses L. Hobbs, son of Col. David L. Hobbs and Judith Jenness, daughter of Samuel Jenness, was born in the town of Freedom, N. H., July 1, 1800. His father was a son of Capt. David Hobbs, and was born in North Hampton. He descended from Morris Hobbs, who emigrated from England and settled in New England, and became the progenitor of all the Hobbs family now residents in New Hampshire, and many others who are scattered through the different States. Capt. David Hobbs was a son of Deacon Benjamin Hobbs, a farmer. The captain served his country faithfully during the Revolutionary war.

Col. David L. Hobbs was a farmer by occupation. He reared a family of five children, viz., Moses L., Victory, John, Alvah, and Mary, who married, first, a Dr. Moses Marston, and had three children, and, second, Dr. Stephen Adams, and had two children. Mr. Hobbs was colonel in the State militia for many years. He died in 1865, at the age of eighty-five, and his wife in 1860, aged eighty-one years. Dr. Moses L. received a common-school and academic education at Hampton and Eppingham Academies. He taught school several winters during the time he was acquiring his education.

He began the study of medicine with Dr. Moses Sweet, a celebrated physician and surgeon, at Parson-field, Me. Dr. Hobbs remained with him some four years, and then attended lectures under the direction of Dr. Alexander Ramsey, a distinguished physician and surgeon, formerly of Edinburgh, Scotland. He commenced the practice of medicine at Dover, Me., about 1825, and remained there some three years, when he went to Parkman, Me., and remained a short time. In July, 1829, he settled in North Hampton, on the same farm where he has since continued to reside. For more than half a century Dr. Hobbs has had the principal practice in his adopted town, and his ride has extended into all the adjoining towns. He married Fannie, daughter of Simeon Marston and Abigail Leavitt, July, 1829. Of this union six children were born, viz., David (deceased), who graduated at Hanover College; Joseph B. (deceased), who married, and left a son, Earnest; Victory (deceased), who also was a graduate of Hanover, and a physician by profession at the time of his death; Ann Jennette, Mrs. John Smith, of Saybrook, N. H.; and Leavitt M., who resides in California.

Mrs. Hobbs died June 30, 1854, and he married for his second wife, March 10, 1858, Caroline, daughter of John Dodge, of Newburyport, Mass.

Politically he has been a lifelong Jeffersonian Democrat, and has held important offices in his town, such as selectman and member of the Constitutional Convention of New Hampshire. At one time he was surgeon of a regiment of State militia, which position he held for many years.

He has always taken a deep interest in educational matters, and has served as school commissioner for several years. The doctor stands deservedly high in the estimation of his fellow-townsmen, not only as a good and safe counselor in times of distress, but as a genial and kind-hearted gentleman. He is far advanced in life, yet he retains his reasoning faculties remarkably well, and can interest one by the hour in reciting poems learned in early life.

J. W. F. HOBBS.

John W. F. Hobbs, son of Jonathan Hobbs, Jr., and Fanny Dearborn, his wife, was born Jan. 3, 1815, on the same farm in North Hampton where in the twilight of a more than ordinarily successful life he now resides. He is a lineal descendant of the first one known now of the name, one Thomas Hobbs, an early native of Hampton, who married a Sherburne, combined the avocations of farmer, tanner, and shoemaker, and was father of several children,—Jonathan being the first born. He died far advanced in life in the communion of the Congregational Church. Jonathan was born in North Hampton May 15, 1774, followed the same avocations as his father, married Fanny, daughter of John Dearborn, about 1798. They had nine children,—Mary F., Fanny (deceased), Leocady D., Sarah, Fanny<sup>2</sup>, Horatio D., W. J. C. and J. W. F. (twins), and Harriet N. (deceased). Seven attained maturity. Mr. and Mrs. Hobbs were from early life communicants of the Congregational Church, and Mr. Hobbs was one of the delegates who met their old pastor, Rev. Jonathan French, with his new bride, beyond the State line to Newburyport bridge, as an escort to accompany them to their new and pleasant parsonage at North Hampton. He was strongly Whig in politics. Mr. Hobbs died Nov. 23, 1852, aged seventy-eight. Mrs. Hobbs died Oct. 5, 1826, aged fifty.

John W. F. Hobbs received the educational advantages of the common schools of North Hampton, supplemented by a few weeks' attendance at an academy at Andover, Mass., where by his industry and economy he not only paid his expenses but laid up ten dollars. This accomplishment in the few weeks is typical of the successful after business life of the man, and was the early expression of the prudence and thrift so characteristic of the better class of New England people. In 1837, being just past his majority, our young man went to Boston and engaged as coachman for Col. Benjamin Pickman, of Salem, Mass., and remained three years in his employ. He first received sixteen dollars per month, which was afterwards advanced to twenty. He began life poor, and he early learned to appreciate the value of money and the necessity of economy in expenditure; consequently he kept his expenses during these years within the limits of from twenty-five to thirty dollars each year. A mention in this connection of his first earnings and their proceeds may not be inappropriate. His first labor bringing financial return was doing little errands while yet very young for five cents. These sums were carefully saved until they amounted to three dollars and eighty-five cents. This was counted occasionally, and on going to Boston he had accumulated ten dollars in these little savings. This sum he deposited in the Provident Institution in 1844 at the birth of his oldest child, and this with some small additions has increased to the almost incredible sum of more than five hundred dollars.

About 1849, Mr. Hobbs entered into partnership with J. S. Leavitt in a provision store. This copartnership continued two years, and was very successful. Then for three years Mr. Hobbs continued merchandising alone, closing in 1845 his mercantile career, at the age of thirty, with a capital of about sixteen hundred dollars, which he invested in the omnibus business, and was the first man to run an omnibus on Washington Street from Dock Square to Canton Street. He first conceived the idea of entering this business while on a visit to New York City as a delegate to a Whig celebration; and noticing the omnibuses plying up and down Broadway, he was led to inquire why they might not prove equally beneficial and remunerative in Boston. Accordingly he purchased two "busses," with horses and other necessary equipments, and drove one himself, and was the first man to carry passengers for five cents fare in Boston.

He very soon took in as partner Henry C. Prescott, of Fitzwilliam, N. H., with whom he continued in the omnibus business for about six years. They were both honest, energetic, and efficient men, not ashamed to drive their own teams, and the business developed and extended far beyond their expectations, proving not only highly remunerative to them, but infinitely beneficial to the citizens of South End, and the city of Boston itself, which at that time was the owner of most of the vacant lands in the vicinity of the southern terminus of their route.

When they closed their connection with the business they had twenty-five omnibuses and one hundred and sixty horses, which, with their route and good will, they sold for one hundred thousand dollars. While in this business Mr. Hobbs invested in real estate, which increased largely in value, and after the sale he confined himself to real estate operations. From 1837 to 1866 he resided in Boston, passing the summers of the last four or five years, however, at his present home, the old home farm of his ancestors and the place of his birth. This came into his possession about 1850, since which time he has erected the beautiful buildings and made the numerous and elaborate improvements on what is now the finest place in his immediate vicinity. (A correct view of the same appears on another page of this work.) Since 1866 Mr. Hobbs has made this place his permanent home. His farm consists of more than one hundred acres, which is in a high state of cultivation. In all the affairs of life Mr. Hobbs has found unusual success, owns to-day the largest interest in his native town, and is accounted its wealthiest citizen.

He married (1) Elizabeth J., daughter of Deacon Francis Drake. She died Sept. 14, 1856, aged thirty-eight. They had four children, all of whom save one are dead. (2) Mary F., widow of James Nightingale, and daughter of James Folsom, of Exeter. She died Oct. 14, 1865, aged forty-two. They had two children,—John F. and Lizzie M.,—both dead. (3) Olive A., widow of Thomas Hobbs, and daughter of Samuel J. Drake, of North Hampton. She was born Jan. 12, 1828. Mr. Hobbs' life has been one of unusual prosperity and joy, mingled with deep affliction and sorrow. He has been exceedingly felicitous in the choice of his wives, with each of whom he has lived most happily. He manifested in their selection the same discretion and forethought that characterized him generally. They were all singularly adapted to the position they were called to fill and to the various duties pertaining to their station, and Mr. Hobbs attributes no small share of his success in life to their excellent qualities and cordial co-operation.

In politics Mr. Hobbs has been affiliated with the Republican party from its organization until recently, but supported and voted for Gen. Hancock in 1850. He has never been an office-seeker, preferring always the quiet of home to official place and honors. While a resident of Boston he was assessor, and held various other local offices, and since his residence here has been county commissioner three years. He was also justice of the peace several years. For years a member of the Congregational Church, Mr. Hobbs has taken a deep interest in all things tending to advance the moral, educational, or business interests of his town, and has done his share and more in advancing all benevolent enterprise. In 1876 he aided slightly by the districts in removing the old houses and drawing materials for the new) erected the beautiful school-house and town hall, at an expense to him of more than eleven thousand dollars. He has also at his own expense entirely remodeled and beautified the Congregational Church, and has purchased a very valuable hearse, which he has given to the town. Mr. Hobbs combines the qualities of the good Anglo-Saxon stock transplanted in New-England soil, has quick perception, keen discrimination, robust constitution, good judgment, steady perseverance, and indomitable will, coupled with simplicity and frugality,—a union which will always achieve financial success when combined, as in him, with honesty of purpose and fair dealing.

JOHN F. HOBBS.

John F. Hobbs, son of J. W. F. Hobbs, was born in Boston, Mass., Feb. 4, 1859. He was educated at Boston, Phillips' Exeter Academy, Hampton Academy, Newburyport, Mass., and one year at Amherst Agricultural College. As a scholar he was deep and thorough rather than superficial. He married, Nov. 12, 1879, Annie D., daughter of John F. French and Lenira Leavitt, with whom he lived happily a year and a half. He was a young man of rare promise, possessing qualities both of head and heart that (fully developed) would have fitted him for almost any station in life. It was his nature to be frank, kind-hearted, and generous. He combined industry with frugality, and "ate not the bread of idleness." Though modest and unassuming, he never lost his balance or self-possession. He was resolute and persevering, yet cautious and considerate. He was eminently honest, truthful, and conscientious, and possessed great integrity and uprightness of character and life. There was no hypocrisy or deceit in him, and he was never afraid under any circumstances to express his honest convictions. He was endowed with a mind of no ordinary vigor and compass, a retentive memory, and took much pleasure in investigating and comprehending every question with which he came in contact. Though born in affluent circumstances, he was never proud or arrogant; being trained to care for himself, he never deemed any useful employment beneath his dignity or his care. He was fond of gunning, fishing, and other manly sports, but was never fickle, aimless, or inclined at all to indolence. He was a natural mechanic, and provided himself with tools, which he used with much skill and profit during his leisure hours, and wrought numerous articles ornamental as well as useful. He loved to see good farm-stock and keep them in fine order; took great delight in highly-cultivated fields and raising luxuriant crops; believed in good implements of husbandry, and never allowed them to be neglected. He knew the value of a good garden, and took pride in its arrangement, that he might have everything in its season. He was thoroughly posted in all his father's varied interests, and kept his books. Whether on the farm or in his business affairs elsewhere, he watched with jealous care its minutest details and rarely made mistakes. In his father's absence it was his habit to lead and guide, and not to follow, and he never required of another what he would not perform himself. Whatever his hands found to do he did it with his might, and what he did was done thoroughly. Though but twenty-two years of age, he was old in experience, mature in judgment, and progressive in all his plans and endeavors. His position was almost precisely the reverse of his father's at the same age, who was obliged to acquire by his own unaided efforts all he possessed. The son had abundant resources and ample means to gratify his youthful ambition and desires, but he never squandered them, and though often surrounded with temptations to alluring for the weak, he imbibed no bad or vicious habit.

He was emphatically a young man of substance rather than show. He had a benevolent disposition and sympathizing heart, and was ever ready to care for the unfortunate and assist the needy. He loved his home, and was ever active in providing for its wants and adding to its attractions and comforts. He loved the town of his abode, and took a deep interest in its material, social, intellectual, and moral advancement. He was surrounded with a large circle of friends and associates, in whose society he took much delight, and for whose welfare he was untiring in his efforts. He was the mainstay and support and hope of his father, the one on whom he was solely to depend, to whom he was to commit his varied interests and transmit his large estate. He was the pride and solace of his young wife and ever-faithful mother-in-law, whose hearts, hopes, and lives seemed wholly bound in his. Mr. Hobbs was a member of the Congregational Church, and lived a most upright and exemplary life. Such were the qualities and characteristics of our young Christian friend, and such his aims and aspirations, when a mysterious Providence dashed to the ground these brilliant hopes and severed these tender ties, and shrouded his family and friends and the whole community in gloom.

His death occurred by accident, Aug. 27, 1881, an account of which is here appended, together with accompanying resolutions:

On Saturday morning, as a western-bound passenger train on the New York Central Railroad was approaching Amsterdam, N. Y., something projecting from a passing freight train entered a window of one of the Wagner cars, striking Mr. John F. Hobbs, of North Hampton, N. H., upon the left arm. The bones were shattered, but no other person was injured, although several of the cars were raked by the projecting object. Mr. Hobbs and his wife were members of the New England excursion party which left Boston last Wednesday for Saratoga and Niagara Falls. He was conveyed on the train to Amsterdam, and sent to the Commercial Hotel, where every possible aid was rendered. It was found necessary to amputate the arm, but this did not prove effectual in saving his life. He died about half-past four o'clock Saturday afternoon. He was widely known in his native town and its vicinity, and was very greatly respected. Resolutions of deep sympathy with the widow and other relatives were adopted by the members of the excursion party at Niagara Falls.

THE LATE JOHN F. HOBBS.

The members of the Raymond Excursion Party were called together in the parlors of the International Hotel, at Niagara Falls, Sunday, August 28th, Mr. John S. Rand, of Portsmouth, presiding, at which time a committee was appointed, who presented the following resolutions, which were unanimously adopted:

"Whereas, Mr. John F. Hobbs, of North Hampton, N. H., one of our number, met with an accident on the way, which, to our surprise and grief, proved fatal,

"Resolved, That we extend our tender and heartfelt sympathy to the companion so sadly bereaved, and to the parents and friends who have been suddenly plunged from light and joy into the deepest shadow of woe, and we fervently pray that divine comfort and strength may be given them from Him whose ways are just finding out, and whose wisdom and love are infinite.

"Resolved, That in this and calamity, which has shadowed our enjoyment, we feel that no blame whatever can be attached to any connected with the management of the excursion, under the careful and gentlemanly charge of Mr. I. A. Whitcomb.

"Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the personal friends of the deceased and to the Portsmouth press and The Boston Journal.

JAMES BATCHELDER.

James Batchelder, son of John and Molly (Cotton) Batchelder, was born in North Hampton, N. H., May 17, 1795. His first American ancestor was Rev. Stephen Batchelder, a Congregational minister, who came from England at an early colonial period, and settled in Old Hampton, becoming a progenitor of a large and intelligent line of descendants. The great-grandfather of the subject of our sketch was John Batchelder, who removed from Hampton to North Hampton when his son James was six years of age. He was a farmer, as have been his descendants, and a man well esteemed. John Batchelder, father of James, was born Oct. 6, 1757, married, Nov. 30, 1780, Molly Cotton, born April 16, 1762. Their children were Abigail D., Sarah B., Mary, Sally (who at the age of ninety years yet retains her faculties), Charlotte, James, Patty, Jeremiah, Asemath, Thomas, and John. He was a substantial farmer, one of the leading men of his town, was a Revolutionary soldier, and was present at the execution of Maj. André. He married a second wife, his first dying in middle life, by whom he had one child. He died Aug. 6, 1835, aged seventy-eight.

James Batchelder received a common-school education, became a farmer, remaining with his father as long as he lived, taking charge of his business, and, with his brother Jeremiah, succeeding to the old homestead. His has been a busy life, and one important branch of his business for a number of years has been the taking of summer boarders, who sought the pure and peaceful quietude of North Hampton so near the fine ocean beaches as a summer luxury. In political matters he was a Democrat of the old school, following the teachings of Jefferson, Jackson, etc. When the Republican party was formed, his views on liberty and union placed him in accord with its platform, and he has been an unqualified supporter of its men and measures. He has been placed in various official positions in town, has been selectman, and three times served as representative from his town in the State Legislature, serving while there on several important committees. He married (1) Sally, daughter of John Batchelder, May 23, 1815. They had two children, John and Sarah Jane. (2) Elizabeth, about 1822. She was sister of Mr. Batchelder's first wife. They had eight children.—Almira (who married Sheridan Jenness, of Rye), James (deceased), Ambrose, Emily (married J. S. Bancroft, of Massachusetts), Mary A., Ann Maria (Mrs. George A. Hill), Warren C., and Albert, all born where Mr. Batchelder now resides.

Mr. Batchelder is, after many years of active life, now living at the age almost of "four-score and ten," with clear memory, sound judgment, and can look back along the many years of life and see its record unspotted, and himself honored and respected, and also can know with glad satisfaction that his children are among the leading citizens of their respective places of abode.

CAPT. SIMON BROWN.

Capt. Simon Brown, Jr., son of Capt. David and grandson of Jacob Brown, was born in North Hampton, N. H., Feb. 5, 1809. His grandfather, Jacob Brown, was born in Hampton in 1740, married Hannah Lamprey, daughter of Morris Lamprey, and to them were born the following children, viz.: Elizabeth, Jacob, Abigail, David, Nancy, and Sally, all born in what was then called Hampton, now North Hampton, and all married and had families except the last two. Jacob was a farmer. He was a Democrat in politics, and held the various offices of his town. In religion he was a member of the Congregational Church. He died in 1819, in the eightieth year of his age. His wife died in March, 1825, aged seventy-eight.

Capt. David Brown, son of Jacob, was born in November, 1777; was twice married, first to Ruth, daughter of Reuben Lamprey, and had eleven children, viz.: Reuben (deceased), Reuben L., Simon, Nancy, David, Jacob L., Adna, Albert D., and Sarah, who died young, and two others, who died in infancy. Capt. Brown was a carpenter by trade, and during a portion of his life was a contractor and builder of large vessels, some of which would carry seventy-five tons burden. In 1819 he made two fishing voyages. He also owned a farm, on which his family was reared, and where he spent the larger portion of his time.

Politically, he was a Democrat. His fellow-townsmen often called upon him to fill the more important offices, which he did well. He was selectman a number of times, and representative to the General Assembly two years, besides having filled various minor positions.

He was chosen captain in the State militia, and for many years held that position. He was a member of the Free-Will Baptist Church. He died Aug. 23, 1854, and his wife died April 23, 1852. His second wife was a — Marden, from Rye. She died about 1857 or 1858.

Capt. Simon Brown received a common-school education. He remained at home, working on his father's farm, till Nov. 20, 1836, when he married Harriet A., daughter of Moses and Sarah Leavitt, of Hampton. She was born Oct. 24, 1815.

Of this union the following children were born: (1) Edwin L., (2) Freeman A., who married Meribah A. Lane, widow of Jonathan Dow, of Hampton, and has two children.

(3) Otis S., married Emma F., daughter of Joseph Johnson, and has one daughter.

(4) Ella M. (Mrs. John P. Hoyt, of Hampton); and, fifth and sixth, two children who died in infancy.

In politics, Capt. Brown is a Democrat of the old school,—a believer in the principles advocated by Jefferson and Jackson. He has been selectman of his town, and member of the Legislature in 1860 and 1861. He has always been identified with the educational interests of his town, and often a member of the school committee. His life's work has been that of a farmer, though in his younger days he was more or less interested in the fishing business. His wife died in 1881. She was an amiable lady, very fond of the domestic circle, a kind mother and a devoted wife. Her memory is cherished by the family, and her example for good is indelibly stamped upon the characters of her children.

Capt. Brown has filled the various positions in the regular order of the State militia from private to captain, and is known as Capt. Brown. He is not a member of any church, but an attendant and supporter of the Christian Church at North Hampton.

JOHN F. FRENCH.

John F. French, son of Rev. Jonathan and Rebecca French, was born in North Hampton, Feb. 10, 1818, and was the seventh of eleven children, all of whom lived to a mature age. When two years old he fell into a ditch, and came very near drowning. His father's salary was but four hundred dollars a year, with a parsonage and twenty cords of wood annually, consequently with a large family and unbounded hospitality they were obliged to economize closely in everything. The boys and girls, too, were early trained to habits of industry and frugality, but at the same time to generosity and benevolence. John neglected no opportunity, even when a very small boy, to earn little sums of money for benevolent and charitable purposes. As soon as he was old enough to work the soil his father allotted him a rod or two of land, which he planted with potatoes, the proceeds of which, by previous agreement, were to be given away to some benevolent object. Aside from this, as he grew older he earned small sums in various ways for his own use or investment, sometimes by picking candy on town-meeting days, sometimes by picking small stones, and also by dropping and picking potatoes at twelve and a half cents per day, or in one instance by the bushel, at one cent for every ten bushels picked. He picked for this price in one day eighty-five bushels, and received for it just eight and one-half cents. Half-cents were then coined and in common use, and John was paid to a fraction as stipulated, and only regretted that the men did not dig one hundred bushels, as he could easily have picked them and earned (to him) the large sum of ten cents. He with his older brother, James, worked out for a neighbor one very hot 4th of July, hoeing corn, while other boys (his mates) were celebrating. By mutual consent, at their parents' solicitation, they gave their days' earnings (two shillings each) towards a Protestant Church in a foreign country. John embraced every opportunity to work out by the day when not needed at home.

The money thus earned was always his own, and as often as it amounted to one or two dollars was deposited by his father in the savings-bank at Portsmouth. In this way, at about fifteen years of age, he had accumulated about twenty dollars. John's advantages for education were necessarily limited to common school and academy, and only qualified him for teaching a common district school. While attending the academy he worked enough out of school hours to pay his board and tuition, and in one instance brought back quite a little sum, more than he expended. He taught school seven winters, six of them in his own town, at the same time taking charge of a stock of cattle and doing other chores about home. During the summer season he worked wholly on the farm. In this way, during the five years before marriage, he had earned one thousand dollars. He was at this time paying attentions to the only daughter and only child of a highly respected farmer in town. Her father died suddenly at about fifty years of age, leaving a widow and this daughter upon the farm, rendering it expedient that Mr. French should go there and take charge of it. He was married Nov. 8, 1843, at the age of twenty-five, to Lemira Leavitt, daughter of Simon and Dolly Leavitt. Lemira was born March 31, 1823, and was twenty years old at marriage. They have four children, two sons and two daughters, all living. The eldest daughter, Nellie L., married Newell W. Healey, of Hampton Falls. John L. is unmarried, and resides in East Boston. Oliver S. married Clara B. Drake, of North Hampton. They have one child, Annie D., married John F. Hobbs, of North Hampton, a sketch of whose life and sad and sudden death accompanies his portrait in this volume. Mr. French has lived in a large family always, yet no one ever died where he lived till he was past sixty years of age, and she, his wife's mother, at the advanced age of ninety-four years and three months, who at her death remembered distinctly seeing George Washington as he passed through her native town (Hampton) when she was four years of age. Mr. French has been unusually felicitous in his family relations through life, and attributes whatever of success or happiness he has enjoyed in a large degree to his wife, who for nearly forty years has been the main-spring of his domestic bliss, the guardian angel of his life. In all the important interests and vicissitudes of life he has never failed to consult her wishes and seek her counsel, and has ever found her true and trustworthy as the needle to the pole, and he wishes above all else to record his high appreciation of her excellent qualities and rare virtues.

Mr. French always venerated and honored his parents, and considered them models in their domestic, ministerial, and Christian qualities, and does not remember ever to have spoken disrespectfully to them, or neglected to do ought in his power to promote their comfort or welfare.

From his youth he was extremely fond of agriculture in all its branches. That his farming has been of the progressive type, his homestead and surroundings will fully verify. He is a firm advocate and believer in tile drainage, and has laid over two miles on his own place. He approves the consumption of hay and other forage crops on one's own place, and thus he always manufactures his own fertilizers. He believes in good buildings, good stock, good implements of husbandry, and a variety of good crops, but has derived his income largely from milk, fruit, and vegetables. He was one of the first to contract for the sale of milk by the can for the Boston market. He has sold milk for thirty years, and now makes it his leading business. During the past five years, in connection with his two sons, who now reside in Boston, he has run a milk-car between North Hampton and East Boston daily. The business has developed rapidly under his supervision. He employs eight teams in North Hampton and vicinity for the collection of milk, and two in Boston for its delivery. One of his sons takes charge of the milk-car at East Boston, and the other runs a creamery, where surplus milk is manufactured into butter or cheese by the use of steam-power, with which is also connected a wholesale milk route.

Mr. French has been industrious, temperate, and frugal in his habits, making it a rule to earn money before spending it, and always pays all bills promptly. He is a great lover of home and home comforts, and believes in making it the dearest and most attractive spot on earth. He always advocated and entered with zeal into all public improvements. He believes in good churches and an able ministry, in good school-houses and good schools and good roads, and is always ready by word and work to help forward every enterprise that promotes the material, social, intellectual, and moral interests of his native town. He has frequently spoken and written on agricultural and other subjects; has never identified himself so closely with political parties as to desire or seek office; has been selectman two years, and was appointed a member of the State Board of Agriculture for Rockingham County, but declined serving on account of pressing home duties.

In politics he was formerly a Whig, and belonged to the school of which Webster and Clay were leaders, and he clings to men of their stamp and their principles still. He hates sectionalism in whatever form it appears. He is not a believer in universal suffrage. He considers the fear of voting (or intimidating) on the one hand and the purchase of votes on the other the most dangerous elements in our government at present, and says emphatically that a person who sells his own vote or purchases another is not fit to exercise the rights of suffrage in a free government like this, and ought if proved guilty to be disfranchised for life. Mr. French believes in universal education for all classes and colors, and his sympathies are always with the toiling millions rather than with the pampered few. He votes independently in local affairs, and usually with the Democrats on national questions.

Mr. French has been a member of the Congregational Church for nearly fifty years, and treasurer of the Congregational Society nearly twenty. He likes its democratic form of church government, but takes exception to some of its tenets. As in politics he cares little for names, so in religion he believes in character rather than in creeds, and places no confidence in professions unless backed up by strict uprightness in character and life. He calls the Bible his creed, and Christ's example his pattern, and would fellowship with all those who sought to obey the one and imitate the other, judging them by their fruits as he expects to be judged himself. He is now in the decline of life, but retains much of vigor and energy still, and was never disabled by sickness. He combines strength of purpose with a resolute will, and believes strict honesty the best one quality any man possesses.

JEREMIAH H. ROBY.

Jeremiah H. Roby, son of Thomas Roby and Betsey Elkins, was born in the town of North Hampton, N. H., on the old Roby homestead, which has been in the family for five generations, July 15, 1828. He is a lineal descendant of Thomas Roby, who settled in North Hampton at an early day, and became one of the substantial citizens of the town. One of his descendants was John Roby, grandfather of the subject of this sketch. He married Mary Garland, and had a family of five children, viz.: Thomas, Bashaba, Betsey, Mary, and Simon, all of whom were born in North Hampton. John was a farmer by occupation, and a man esteemed for his many virtues. He was a member of the Congregational Church. He died in 1842, at the advanced age of eighty-four years. His wife died previous to 1842.

Thomas Roby, son of John and Mary (Garland) Roby, was born Sept. 6, 1783, and died at his native place in North Hampton, N. H., April 4, 1872. He married Betsey, daughter of Jeremiah Elkins, of Hamilton, Dec. 11, 1826. Of this union three children were born, viz.: John H., who died in infancy; Jeremiah H., and Mary E. A. (Mrs. Washington Parker). She was born Jan. 5, 1830, and died Dec. 16, 1865. Thomas Roby was one of North Hampton's good farmers. He served in the war of 1812. In politics he was a Democrat. His son, Jeremiah H., received such an education as the common schools afforded, supplemented with a few terms at Hampton Academy. He has followed in the footsteps of his fathers, and has been a farmer. He also deals more or less in grain. He is a Republican in politics.

He married Hannah P., daughter of Ephraim and Betsey Seavey, May 20, 1852. She was born June 24, 1831. Her father descended from the old Seavey family, one of the earliest and most substantial families in Rye, N. H.

CHARLES C. BARTON.

Charles C. Barton is a lineal descendant from Ebenezer Barton and Margaret Hunt, who emigrated from England and settled at Pittsfield, N. H., at a very early day. He is the son of William and Mary A. C. (Frost) Barton, and was born in the town of Stratham, Rockingham Co., N. H., Jan. 9, 1821. His parents were very poor, and he was the second child in a family of three children, viz., William (deceased), Charles C., and Mary A. C.

His mother died when he was but three years of age, and the family had no place they could call their own. The father, discouraged and homeless, soon fell a victim to the strong hand of disease, leaving his little ones to the tender mercies of a cold and not always friendly world when Charles C. was only six years of age. About this time he was taken sick, and it was at one time thought that he too would die; but, recovering, he was put out to work on the farm, working at different places during the summer, and attending the district school a few weeks during the winters, unless the man where he happened to be had some work to do, which was more than likely to be the case.

At the age of fourteen he commenced working for one Joseph S. Marston, of North Hampton, and continued to live with him until he was twenty-one years of age, receiving one hundred dollars. He continued to work for Mr. Marston four or five years, receiving seven dollars per month for seven months during the summer, and his board for the remainder of the year. Out of this small sum he clothed himself and saved a pittance. He then worked for Squire Batchelder eighteen months at nine and a half dollars per month, and then went to Lowell, Mass., and began working for a boot and shoe corporation, where he remained some nine years, receiving ninety-six cents a day when he commenced, and one dollar and twelve cents towards the close of his term of service. Out of this amount he had to board himself.

During this time, June 9, 1850, he married Dorcas, daughter of James Libbey, of Ossipee, N. H., and to them were born three sons, Charles L., James W., and George E., the first two in Lowell, Mass., and the last in North Hampton, N. H., where they now reside.

In 1855 or 1856, Mr. and Mrs. Barton settled on the farm where he now (1882) resides. At first he had but forty acres, on which he owed several hundred dollars, but by energy and economy they were soon out of debt, and then he wanted more land, which he bought adjoining his. Mr. Barton has now some three hundred acres of well-improved land, on which are some of the best farm buildings in the town.

Mr. Barton is a man of good executive ability, of indomitable energy, and of quick perception. He has always been very prudent, yet charitable to the church and hospitable to the poor.

Mr. and Mrs. Barton are members of the Congregational Church at North Hampton, N. H.

Politically he has always been a Democrat, and as such was selectman from 1876 to 1879. What he lacked in learning he made up in good common sense, and discharged the duties of his office with credit to himself and satisfaction to his constituents. He has also held other minor offices, both in his district and his town. His only sister, the widow of Daniel Eastman, resides in Lowell, Mass., and carries on a thriving business. She has a daughter, Betsey Ann.

PEPPERELL FROST.

Pepperell Frost, son of William Frost and Sally Johnson, was born in Parsonfield, Me., Dec. 8, 1815. His grandfather, Simon Frost, was a native of Maine, married Emice —, and had one son, William, and several daughters. Simon was a farmer in Maine; he died in the prime of life, but his widow survived him till 1837, when she died at about eighty years of age. William Frost, only son of Simon and Emice Frost, was born in Kittery, Me., May 3, 1788, and settled at Parsonfield, Me., with his parents when nine years of age. He was twice married,—first to Sally, daughter of David Johnson, and had eight children, viz.: David, Lydia, Pepperell, Jonathan J., Simon, Sarah J. (deceased), Mary A., and Anna (deceased).

Mrs. Frost was born Dec. 6, 1791, and died July 22, 1830. Mr. Frost married for his second wife a Mrs. Oliver Murfey, by whom he had three children, viz.: Betsey F., Olive T., and Ann M.

Mr. Frost was a farmer at Parsonfield, Me. He was a Democrat in politics. He died March 11, 1875, aged eighty-six years and ten months. Pepperell Frost worked on his father's farm summers and attended the district school winters till he was twenty years of age. In 1835 he left the old home and went out to seek his own fortune. He spent the following three years in the woods on the Penobscot River in Maine, and many and exciting are the scenes through which he passed. In 1838 he went to Massachusetts and worked on a farm till March 29, 1843, when he came to North Hampton, N. H., and settled on the farm where he has since resided.

He has been twice married,—first to Lydia, daughter of Levi and Lydia (Loving) Brown (see Mr. Brown's biography), July 4, 1843. She was born March 14, 1811, and died Nov. 28, 1878. Their children are Thomas B., died at twenty-two; Lydia A. (Mrs. William J. Breed, of Lynn, Mass.); Levi W., died at eight; and George E., born Oct. 31, 1856. Mrs. Frost was a member of the Baptist Church. She was a fine Christian lady of noble parentage. She was universally esteemed for her many virtues. She died suddenly, but left the fragrance of a good name as a precious legacy to her children. Mr. Frost married for his second wife Hannah L., widow of P. White, and daughter of James Libbey, July 3, 1880.

Mrs. Frost had by her first husband two children, one of whom, George G. White, is living in the town of Rye, N. H.

Mr. Frost's life-work has been that of an unostentatious farmer in North Hampton, N. H. He commenced life a poor boy, and by his own hands has dug from "mother earth" his daily bread. He has been prudent with his earnings, and now (1882) has a competency. Politically, he follows in the footsteps of his father and is a Democrat. He has never sought political honors, although he has held some town offices. His only surviving son, George E., married Maria G., daughter of Ephraim Hall, Nov. 13, 1878, by whom he had a son, deceased, named Levi W., after his two great-grandfathers.

Mrs. George E. Frost was born in Lawrence, Mass. Her ancestors were originally from Chester, N. H.

LEVI BROWN.

Levi Brown, son of David Brown, was born in the town of Hampton, N. H., Sept. 26, 1777, and died at his home in North Hampton, N. H., July 28, 1861, aged eighty-four years.

His father was a practical farmer and miller by occupation in Hampton, reared a large and intelligent family of children to industry and economy. His children were as follows: Levi, Samuel, Simon, John, and Mary, who married Jacob Dearborn, all of whom were born in Hampton, married, and had children.

Levi Brown, being the eldest of the family, was early put at the blacksmith trade, and soon became a good workman. Later in life he united farming with his trade. He early settled in North Hampton, where he carried on his business until his death.

He married Lydia, daughter of Thomas Loving, Nov. 15, 1803. Their children were Hannah L. (Mrs. John P. Grouard), born Jan. 13, 1807, and died April 10, 1871; Lydia, born March 14, 1811, married Pepperell Frost, of North Hampton; Thomas L., who died March 21, 1829, aged twenty-four years.

Mrs. Levi Brown died Feb. 7, 1852, aged seventy.

Politically Mr. Brown was a Democrat of the old school, and held some town offices. He was very firm in his opinions, always intended to weigh matters well before he came to a conclusion, but when he had once made up his mind it was difficult to persuade him differently. He was a man of great energy and very fond of athletic sports; a man of large, powerful frame, hence a hard man to handle.

The above biography and its accompanying portrait is inserted by his only surviving grandson, George E. Frost, an enterprising young farmer of North Hampton, in memory of his venerable grandfather.

THE MARSTON FAMILY.

The first of the name of which we have any knowledge was Thomas Marston, born in 1728, and died April 4, 1807, aged seventy-eight years, seven months, and twenty-nine days. He married Elizabeth Page, who died Sept. 21, 1796, aged sixty-one years, one month, and one day. Their children were Jeremiah, Thomas, Abraham, Deborah (who lived to be ninety-eight years of age), and Elizabeth, who died at twenty-three.

LEVI BROWN.

Marston, was born Nov. 10, 1756, married Hannah, daughter of David Knowles, Dec. 9, 1783. She died Feb. 28, 1820, aged fifty-nine years, six months, and twenty-five days. Their children were as follows, viz., Elizabeth, who married Levi Jewell for his second wife; Hannah, who married Levi Jewell for his first wife, and had the following children: Emiline,<sup>a</sup> John L.,<sup>b</sup> Mary E.,<sup>c</sup> Hannah M.,<sup>d</sup> Sarah F.,<sup>e</sup> De Witt C.,<sup>f</sup> and Orinda A.,<sup>g</sup> all born in Stratham, N. H.; Mary, who died June 20, 1871, aged 81; Thomas, who married Mary Leavitt, and has one living daughter, Sophia; he died Dec. 16, 1870, aged seventy-seven years; David K., married Mary Tasker and had six children, viz., Mary E.<sup>h</sup> (deceased), David T.<sup>i</sup> (deceased), Almira,<sup>j</sup> Charles,<sup>k</sup> Lucy A.<sup>l</sup> (deceased), Cyrus L.<sup>m</sup> (deceased); Deborah and Sally, twins; Deborah married Edward Lang; she died April 10, 1871, aged seventy-one; the other twin, Sally, is still living, and was born Dec. 15, 1799; Fanny, born Nov. 10, 1802, has spent more than thirty years of her life with the family of Amos Lawrence, of Boston; Almira, died Sept. 13, 1870, aged sixty-six; Benjamin, born March 15, 1807. All of this large family were born in North Hampton. Thomas and Abraham Marston were soldiers in the Revolutionary war. Abraham settled in Effingham, where he died. Thomas was a selectman in North Hampton nine years; he and his wife were members of the Congregational Church, of North Hampton, N. H. Benjamin Marston was a farmer in North Hampton, and a Democrat in politics. He held various offices in the town, such as selectman, etc. He married Sarah D. Nutter, and had two children, of whom Thomas E. is the only surviving one. Mr. Marston was a member of the Baptist Church, and a plain, unostentatious man. He died Aug. 5, 1862, aged fifty-five years, four months, and twenty-one days. His son, Thomas E., married Margaret Dow, and has one son, Edward Everett.

DRAKE GENEALOGY.

Robert<sup>1</sup>, born in Devon County, England, in the year 1580; settled in Exeter about the year 1643; removed to Hampton in 1651. His house stood on the spot now occupied by the old Baptist meeting-house. Children: Nathaniel, Susannah, and Abraham<sup>2</sup> (settled at Drakeside about the year 1651).

Abraham<sup>2</sup> by his wife Jane had children as follows: Susannah, Abraham<sup>3</sup> (born Dec. 29, 1654; married Sarah —; died in 1714), Sarah (born Aug. 20, 1656), Mary (born March 25, 1658), Elizabeth (born July 11, 1660), Hannah (born Oct. 14, 1662), and Robert (born Sept. 27, 1664).

Abraham<sup>3</sup> by his wife Sarah had children as follows: Sarah (born Nov. 7, 1686), Abraham<sup>4</sup> (born March, 1689; married Theodate Roby; died, aged seventy-eight), Jane (born 1691; married John Shurborne), Mary (born 1692; married Shubar Sanborn), and Nathaniel (born 1695; married Jane Lunt; died 1763).

Abraham<sup>4</sup> by his wife Theodate had children as follows: Elizabeth (born Feb. 28, 1712; married Jeremiah Page), Theodate (born Nov. 7, 1713; married Josiah Sanborn), Abraham (born Dec. 4, 1715; married Abigail Wearle), Samuel<sup>5</sup> (born Dec. 15, 1717; married Esther Hobbs, April 14, 1743; died 1786), Sarah (born April, 1720; married Samuel Batchelder), Mary (born Sept. 23, 1722; married Eliza Marston), Abigail (born Nov. 28, 1724; married John Taylor), John (born Jan. 2, 1728; died Jan. 29, 1731), Simon (born Oct. 4, 1730; married Judith Perkins), and Thomas (born July 8, 1733; married Patience Towle).

Samuel<sup>5</sup> by his wife Esther had children as follows: Theodate (born Jan. 8, 1744; married Samuel Page), Elizabeth (born Nov. 26, 1745; married John Fogg), Mary (born Nov. 26, 1747; married Stephen Coffin), Esther (born Nov. 29, 1749; died in infancy), Samuel<sup>6</sup> (born Aug. 3, 1751; married Mary Jenness; died Sept. 10, 1812), John (born Oct. 4, 1753; married Huldah Lane; died 1842), Esther (born Jan. 20, 1756; married Benjamin Dearborn; died 1831), Sarah (born July 25, 1759; married James Hobbs; died 1842), and Abigail (born Aug. 3, 1761; married John Jenness).

Samuel<sup>6</sup> by his wife Mary had the following children: Abraham (born March 29, 1783; died June 25, 1861), Abigail (born Sept. 24, 1784; married Moses Batchelder; died Jan. 17, 1872), Theodate (born Oct. 31, 1786; married Joseph Jenness; died March 27, 1836), Mary (born Sept. 20, 1788; died Feb. 10, 1859), Samuel (born Sept. 24, 1790; married Elizabeth Berry; died Jan. 16, 1864), Ebenezer T. (born Sept. 2, 1792; married Abigail Berry; died Aug. 25, 1839), Elizabeth (born Jan. 12, 1795; married Thomas Brown; died May 9, 1868), and Sarah (born Jan. 31, 1798; died April 11, 1882).

CHAPTER LXI.

Geographical—Topographical—Early Settlements—Names of Pioneers—Incorporation—First Town-Meeting—Officers Elected—The Revolution—The Association Test—Ecclesiastical—Calvin Baptist Church—Congregational Church—Free-Will Baptist Church—Co's Northwood Academy—Villages and Hamlets—Physicians—Early Families.

THE town of Northwood lies in the extreme northern part of the county, and is bounded as follows: on the north and east by Strafford County, on the south by Deerfield, and on the west by Merrimac County.

Early Settlements.—The century preceding that in which the history of this town is involved was one of comparatively small beginnings throughout New England. In the territory now known as New Hampshire small settlements, independent of each other, had been made at Dover, Portsmouth, Exeter, Hampton, and elsewhere. As they suffered from the misrule of men claiming proprietorship of territory, and from the unfriendliness of some of the Indian tribes, they sought protection from the State of Massachusetts. This State had claimed that the territories of New Hampshire and Maine were included within the limits of their original charter, and willingly took these settlements under their care, which proved not a little beneficial. Immigrants from England came in greater numbers, not only increasing settlements already existing, but pushing farther from the seacoast into the interior, making settlements at Epping, Lee, and Nottingham. Nottingham was incorporated as early as 1722, including what may now be known as Deerfield and Northwood, in addition to its present limits. Deerfield was incorporated as a town in 1766. But the eyes of the energetic and restless settlers of the lower towns did not fail to observe the high slope of land lying on a line between Portsmouth and Concord. Hunters found this region abounding in game, and gave on their return to settlements nearer the coast glowing descriptions of the excellence of the soil and the richness of the forests. A few had from time to time constructed temporary huts and purposed permanent settlements; but they were not the men to fell the trees and rear a population so remote from any considerable settlement as was this tract of country long known as North Woods.

"In 1762 there arrived in the east part of the town, and halted there for the night, four wearied, weather-beaten, determined men. The day was one of those warm, sunny days in spring, when the south winds blow, and the heart leaps with joy at the sight of fresh soil and green leaves, and at the sound of the blue jay and the cunning raven, as well as at the plaintive strains of the thrush. These men each bore upon their shoulders an axe and a gun, with provisions to last them a few days. No wife, no child accompanied them. They build their booth of pine boughs, kindle their fire, and, partaking of their rude fare, lay them down for rest. Wearied as they were, they could not sleep without interruption from the howlings of the wolves in their vicinity. On the morrow they survey the tract of land around their camp-fire, and find it to be a beautiful swell, sloping towards the rising sun, in the neighborhood of meadows abounding in forage and adequate water-power for mills. Three of these men—Moses Godfrey, John and Increase Batchelder—resolved here to make for themselves permanent homes, while the fourth—Solomon Bickford—resolved to look further. Accompanied by Godfrey, he spotted his way over the height, where the eye may detect the blue waters of the Atlantic, and reached the northwestern part of the town, now known as 'The Narrows.' And here, too, were meadows abounding in forage and water-power; and in sight of these, and near the gem of lakes, the Suncook, he erected his pillar and resolved to build and abide.

"One of the great obstacles to the taking of new lands remote from other settlements is the want of forage for cattle, so essential to success. It requires several years to clear the land and bring it into grass sufficient to sustain any number of cattle both summer and winter. Hence these sensible men resolved to obviate this by making their settlements near where a supply was already provided in meadows, of which they took possession, with none to dispute their right. And, more than this, they were both farmers and mill-wrights, and they knew if they would gather around them other families they must be able to furnish building materials, and so they sought the water-fall, and planned at once the rude mill that should meet this urgent want.

"Godfrey and the Batchelders naturally affiliated, being from the same neighborhood and of the same religious tendencies, and expected many others of like sympathies to follow them; while Bickford saw that it would be better for him to seize a point around which he could gather his friends and those in sympathy with him; while both parties ever afterwards sustained the friendliest relations.

"Bickford and Godfrey returned to the camp, around which the Batchelders had effected a clearing, and all aided in erecting a log house for Godfrey, in a field now owned by Nicholas D. Hill, west of the turnpike, for Godfrey was a married man, while the Batchelders were not. Having made rude beginnings, these four friends returned, Bickford to Lee, Godfrey and the Batchelders to Hampton, now North Hampton, and on the 25th day of the following March (1763), Godfrey, with his family, and John and Increase Batchelder returned to occupy the land they had chosen, the Batchelders boarding with Godfrey until they might build near him, where now stands the house of Francis J. Hanson. Theirs was the first frame house built in Northwood.

"In December following, Bickford, with his family and his brother John, returned to possess the land at the Narrows, building where stood the dwelling-house of the late Deacon Asa Bickford, where was born to him a son, named Solomon, June 25, 1764, the first child born within the present limits of Northwood.

"The next man that came was Samuel Johnson, from Hampton. He spent the first night following the day of his arrival between two rocks that had been rent one from the other, spreading over them a covering of boughs. This was near where now stands the house of Charles O. Brown, and close by the base of these rocks lie the ashes of the good man and of many of his descendants. Johnson's arrival was in November, 1765, when there were only twelve persons within the present limits of the town,—five men, Godfrey, John, and Increase Batchelder, Solomon and John Bickford, and two women, the wives of Godfrey and Solomon Bickford, and five children.

"These Batchelders were the descendants of the Rev. Stephen Batchelder, who arrived at Boston, June 5, 1632, having sailed with his family in the ship 'William and Francis.' He immediately went to Lynn, where on the following Sabbath, June 8th, he preached his first sermon in America. From Lynn, February, 1636, he removed to Ipswich, and soon after to Yarmouth, and in 1638 to Newbury. On the 6th of September, it would appear, the General Court gave him permission to settle a town at Hampton. Hither, with his family and some personal friends, he came, and was installed the first minister of Hampton. In the year 1654 he returned to England, and died at Hackney, near London, in 1669, in his one hundredth year. He left in this country two sons, Henry, who is believed to have settled in Reading, Mass., and Nathaniel, who remained in Hampton, from whom descended the Batchelders who earliest came to Northwood; for he had a son named Samuel, and his sons settled here.

"It appears that these noble pioneers were soon followed by Daniel Hoyt, Jonathan, Thomas, and Ebenezer Knowlton, brothers, from Kensington; Jonathan and Taylor Clark, brothers, from Stratham; Jonathan Jenness, from Rye; John, Simon, and Benjamin Johnson, brothers; Joshua Furber, Abraham and Samuel Batchelder, and others, so that the high places of the town were taken possession of, mills had been erected, and paths with bridges had been constructed leading to the various settlements along the central line through the town from south to north in the direction of Concord, as well as over the swells of land on either side, as early as 1772, and as this portion of Nottingham was so far from what was then the centre of business, the inhabitants began to agitate the propriety of being erected into a separate township. Accordingly, at the session of the General Court in 1773, a petition was presented by the inhabitants for an act of incorporation, and this was granted, Feb. 6, 1773, while John Wentworth was Governor of the province, and George III. was king of England. We do not know the exact number of the inhabitants of Northwood when erected into a separate parish or town, but two years later—that is, in 1775—the town numbered three hundred and thirteen.

"Benjamin Johnson was authorized to call the first meeting of the town for the choice of officers and the transaction of other business. Accordingly a meeting was notified 'at the house of mister Volintine kinson,' March 23, 1773; at which Benjamin Johnson was chosen moderator; Increase Batchelder, clerk; and Benjamin Hill, Joseph Demerit, and Samuel Johnson, selectmen; Moses Godfrey was chosen constable; and the selectmen were instructed to settle with Nottingham matters growing out of the act of incorporation, while Asel Blake and William Blake were tithingmen; William Wallace and John Harvey, fence-viewers; Jonathan Knowlton, Asel Blake, Solomon Bickford, and Daniel Hoit were surveyors of highways; Zebulon Norris and John Harvey were chosen hog-receves; Solomon Bickford, leather-sealer.

"At this same meeting it was voted to raise six pounds lawful money to hire preaching, and seven pounds four shillings for schooling. Accordingly, we find that there was paid that year five pounds and one shilling and ten pence to Mr. Timothy Brown for preaching, and to Mary Walton, for school-keeping, two pounds ten shillings, while there were 'paid to Volintine kenston five shillings for getting a 'Pare of Shoes for Seole Dame.' And the same year it is recorded that the selectmen 'paid to the Seoll Dame twelve shillings;' while the following year there were paid three shillings to Joshua Furber 'for caring the seool Dame home,' and Betsey Sanborn and others are paid various sums 'for scooling,' and Nicholas Dudley is paid for preaching. The money raised for schooling was expended in five different places, since we find it divided into 'Moreel's proportion,' 'Johnson's proportion,' 'Senter proportion,' 'Batchelder's proportion,' and 'Knolton's proportion.'

"The Revolution.—March 21, 1775, Benjamin Hill was appointed a delegate to the congress holden at Exeter, and the question was earnestly discussed respecting their duty in the threatening aspect of affairs. The meeting was adjourned to April 22d, when it was voted 'to be equipt at a moment's warning.' A short time prior to this a convention of deputies had met at Exeter to consult on the state of affairs and appoint delegates for the next General Congress, to be holden on the 19th of May at Philadelphia. Maj. Sullivan and Capt. Langdon, already great favorites of the people, were chosen, and the convention issued an address to the people, warning them of their danger, exhorting them 'to union, peace, and harmony, frugality, industry, manufactures, and learning the military art, that they might be able, if necessary, to defend the country against invasion.' Just at this time Gen. Gage had destroyed the magazine at Concord, Mass., and sought to seize some of the prominent opposers of the objectionable acts of Parliament. Alarmed by this act of hostility, the people of New Hampshire and of the other colonies prepared themselves for war. Hence the action of Northwood, April 22d. At this same meeting it was also further 'voted to list eight minit-men; . . . that these men shall have one shillin and sixpence a week for exercising;' that these men 'shall have five dollars a month, and the town find them there Vitingling.' And to show the spirit of the men of that day it is recorded that 'Volintears listed for this present distress,' and these were 'Samuel Johnson, William Woolis, Eliphalet Taylor, William Blake, Nathaniel Twombly, Benjamin Johnson, Jr., Simon Batchelder, and Abraham Batchelder.' And only seven days later, 'at a meeting notified by peticerly men for to chuse deputies' to attend a convention called by Governor Wentworth, Benjamin Johnson and Sherburn Blake were chosen deputies, and Moses Godfrey was chosen 'as a commity-man for to see if there is any powder for this parish,' and 'Increase Batchelder is chosen to take care of this powder.'"

Association Test.—The following signed the "Association Test":

"We the subscribers, do hereby solemnly engage, and promise, that we will, to the utmost of our Power, at the risk of our lives and fortunes, with arms, oppose the hostile proceedings of the British Fleets, and Armies, against the United American Colonies. Joseph Demott (Capt. of the parish, Eliphalet Taylor, Joshua Furber, Daniel Hoit, John Durgin, Wilham Wallais, Increase Batebeche, Israel Hodgdon, Moses Goozee, Abraham Batchelder, William Blake, James Batchelder, Thomas Crowland, Richard Garland, Benj. For list of Revolutionary soldiers, see chapter lxiii.

Ecclesiastical.—Religious worship was first maintained in the east part of the town. There the first settlements were made. And these first settlers, if not decided Baptists, yet inclined not to sympathize with orthodox Congregationalism. From 1750 to 1790 there existed great uneasiness in the religious mind. Not a few were restive under what seemed staid Orthodoxy. The people generally revelled in unrestrained liberty, and this passion for liberty ran into extravagance. There was a wild prejudice against what had the least claim to antiquity, whether in doctrines or in customs. Hence new lights sprung up, wild and fanatical notions were entertained, and customs or modes of expression and worship came into vogue that strangely jarred and contrasted with the decorous and measured notions and customs of what was reproachfully the staid order. The great ancestor of the Batchelders was an eccentric man, though evidently of much ability. His descendants that came to this town, and those that affiliated with them, were good men, but their religious bias was against Congregationalism.

The first pastor was Rev. Edmund Pillsbury, who was ordained Nov. 17, 1779, and continued about twenty years. His successors have been as follows: Rev. Eliphalet Merrill, Elias Gregory, George W. Ashby, B. Knight, S. G. Gilbert, W. H. Jones, S. H. Smith, P. Favor, G. B. Chase, D. Taylor.

It appears that a church structure was erected for worship in 1772, some nine years after the first settlement was made, and was rebuilt in 1816, and dedicated Aug. 4, 1817. Intervals of some years intervened between several of these pastorates. The congregation has been increased within a few years, and the church strengthened by an increase of business in the eastern part of the town. A tower has been erected upon the meeting-house, furnished with a bell and clock.

Congregational Church.—This church was organized Nov. 29, 1788, with the following members: Solomon Bickford, Jonathan Blake, Simon Batchelder, John Sherburne, and Elizabeth, his wife, Susan Clarke, Deborah Bickford, and Sarah Harvey.

The first pastor was Rev. Ebenezer Allen, who remained but a short time. Abisha Clark then supplied the pulpit for a limited period, and in 1799 Rev. Josiah Prentice was ordained pastor. He was dismissed May 10, 1842, honored and beloved by all. He died Oct. 28, 1855. The next regular pastor was Rev. E. C. Cogswell, who was ordained in November, 1842. Mr. Cogswell was dismissed in 1848, and was succeeded by Rev. Otis Holmes, who was installed Jan. 1, 1850, and dismissed in 1857. He was followed by Rev. Henry C. Fay in 1858. He was dismissed in 1864. Mr. Cogswell is also the author of the "History of Nottingham, Deerfield, and Northwood," an excellent work, and an invaluable addition to the historic literature of New England.

Mr. Cogswell, who was dismissed from this church July 18, 1848, where he commenced his work the first Sabbath in July, 1842, immediately entered upon pastoral duties with the Congregational Church in Newmarket, where he remained until the summer of 1855, when he removed to New Boston, to which place he had been invited the previous year, and was there installed pastor of the First Presbyterian Church. Having suffered much from over-taxed eyes, and with exhausted strength, he was dismissed in the autumn of 1865, and, by invitation, returned to Northwood immediately, to do what he might be able for the destitute church and people for one year, but whom he continued to supply as pastor until May, 1876, and during the last nine of those years was principal of Coe's Northwood Academy, in which many successful teachers have been trained, and numbers fitted for college.

The first effort to erect a church edifice was in 1780, and it was probably completed soon after. In 1827 it was repaired and occupied until 1840, when a second house of worship was erected.

The Free-Will Baptist Church was organized June 4, 1833, in the Mountain school-house, through the influence of Rev. Daniel P. Gilley, consisting of thirteen members, five males and eight females.

Some five years after the organization of the church, their meeting-house was erected on Clark's Hill, and provided with a bell. Pastors: S. P. Fernald, John Kimball, W. D. Johnson, Mark Atwood, W. D. Johnson, F. Moulton, S. P. Fernald, Horace Webber, R. D. Richardson, B. S. Manson, Edwin Manson, E. H. Prescott, James Rand, L. P. Bickford, G. W. Gould, H. P. Lamprey, and C. L. Pinkham.

Coe's Northwood Academy.—This academy was incorporated in February, 1866, and chartered by a special act of the State Legislature, June, 1867, as "Northwood Academy," but in June, 1875, the charter was so amended as that the institution should hereafter be known by the name of "Coe's Northwood Academy," in honor of Ebenezer Coe, Esq., for many years a highly respected merchant and Christian gentleman, whose heart and hand were ready to aid every good cause, and whose son, E. S. Coe, Esq., of Bangor, Me., has shown a lively interest in the town of his nativity, and in various ways has materially aided the academy. At present it has only a small permanent fund, derived from the estate of the late Mrs. Abigail W. Cate, who foresaw the advantages of the institution to the community, and made Northwood Academy the residuary legatee of her small property.

The academy building is a modest structure, fifty feet long by thirty-three wide, having a main hall and two ante-rooms.

The academy has been under the care of the Rev. E. C. Cogswell as principal, a graduate of Dartmouth College, from 1866 to the present time, a period of twelve years, with an average attendance per term of sixty-three pupils.

East Northwood.—Here the first settlement was made, the first school-house erected, the first church built, the first blacksmith shop opened, and the first store presented the attractive merchandise,—tobacco, salt fish, New England rum, and molasses, being in excess.

Here is located the Pillsbury Brothers' shoe manufactory, one of the most complete in the State.

The Northwood Savings-Bank was organized with John J. Pillsbury as treasurer, E. G. Boody, John Bennett, C. F. Cate, H. J. Clark, N. B. Dow, C. A. Hill, Richard Hoyt, Charles Hill, J. K. Hoyt, L. E. Kimball, S. F. Leavitt, A. J. Pillsbury, G. T. Sherburn, and Luther Tasker as directors. Its business is transacted at the office of Pillsbury Brothers, and its deposits have already exceeded the expectations of its most sanguine advocates.

Clark's Hill.—This locality was early chosen for a settlement, though no settlement was made until after families had improved their lands in the eastern and central portions, as well as at the Narrows. This neighborhood was attractive because it overlooked the whole tract of land lying between it and the ocean, while from it an extended northerly view might be had.

The Centre.—This part of the town was early settled. Here was built the Congregational meeting-house. Here Norton long did a thriving business in blacksmithing, and here the Hon. John Harvey acquired a large property in trade and in keeping a tavern. Here Deacon J. Piper also traded, and kept for many years a public-house which became extensively known, and was the favorite resort of travelers, who formerly were numerous on this highway between Concord and the lower towns. Here a post-office was early established.

The Narrows.—Here was the second settlement made in the town, and immediately after that in the east part. Solomon Bickford was the hero of this region. He loved adventure, had a passion for hunting the fox and bear, was strong and tall, a sort of giant, yet mild and gentle, full of mirth, and running over with wonderful stories of things and events, delighting in making others amazed at what he told them.

There are other points known locally as Blake's, Bennett's, and Richardson's Hills, and "The Mountain."

Physicians.—John Starr, Benjamin Kelly, William Smith, Moses Hill, C. B. Webster, Thomas Tuttle, Caleb W. Hanson, and J. W. Pray. He studied medicine at Brunswick, Hanover, and New York, and graduated in 1858. Dr. Pray was educated at Bowdoin. He is a son of Dr. T. J. W. Pray, the veteran practitioner of Dover, N. H.

Early Families.—Among the early families are mentioned those of Bartlett, Batchelder, Bennett, Bickford, Blake, Brown, Buzall, Clark, Coe, Cogswell, Crockett, Demeritt, Dow, Durgin, Furbur, Hanson, Harvey, Hill, Hoyt, James, Jenness, Johnson, Kelley, Kimball, Knowlton, Knowles, Lancaster, Mead, Morrison, Nealley, Norton, Pillsbury, Prentice, Prescott, Sherburne, Smith, Tasker, Tucker, Tuttle, Wiggins, Willey, and Wingate.

MILITARY HISTORY—CIVIL HISTORY.

Revolutionary Soldiers—War of 1812—War of the Rebellion—Town Clerks from 1773-1880—Representatives from 1794-1883.

Revolutionary Soldiers.—This region was pretty well settled, and was called upon at all times during the whole war to furnish men, and the call was responded to promptly. We can give but the majority of men who served at this time.

So far as Cilley's regiment is concerned the list is nearly correct. The enlistment for that regiment while Cilley had the command, being the First New Hampshire Continental Regiment, commenced Jan. 1, 1777, some of the men for three years, and others for a shorter term. Stark had commanded the First New Hampshire up to January, 1777. He resigned in consequence of Col. Poor's promotion over him. Then Cilley took command as colonel of this regiment.

Nottingham furnished Col. Joseph Cilley, afterwards Gen. Cilley, whose biography is well known.

Henry Dearborn, who rose to the rank of lieutenant-colonel.

Col. Thomas Bartlett, who commanded a regiment. Capt. Henry Butler.

In the First New Hampshire Continental Regiment when commanded by Col. Cilley were the following Nottingham soldiers:

James Beverley, enl. Jan. 4, 1777; disch. December, 1781.
 Captain Butler, enl. March 5, 1777; disch. March 29, 1780.
 Josiah Clarke, enl. May 9, 1777; disch. Nov. 29, 1781.
 Thomas Cozage, enl. Jan. 1, 1777; disch. Jan. 23, 1780.
 Thomas Harvey, enl. Jan. 1, 1779; disch. December, 1781.
 John P. Hilton, enl. Jan. 4, 1777; disch. Feb. 1, 1779.
 Benjamin M. Allister, enl. Jan. 4, 1777; disch. March 7, 1778.
 Paul M. Gay, enl. April 20, 1779; disch. December, 1781.
 Branstroff Mason, enl. Jan. 8, 1779; disch. December, 1781.
 John Pike, enl. Jan. 1, 1777; disch. January, 1779.
 James Reedall, enl. Jan. 1, 1777; disch. January, 1779.
 Nathaniel Randall, enl. Jan. 1, 1777; disch. December, 1781.
 William Willey, enl. Jan. 1, 1777; disch. December, 1781.
 Joseph York, enl. March 1, 1777; disch. December, 1781.

In Col. Reid's or Scammell's regiment were enrolled the following Continental soldiers, viz.:

Thomas Hall, William Simpson, Nicholas Leather, Jonathan Morgan, Joseph Avery, Moses Davis, John Welch, Thomas Welch, Matthew Wells, Richard Scobron, Joseph Nealey, John Mills, John Clark, Jesse Clarke, James Harvey.

North Hampton claimed Jonathan Morgan, James Harvey, and York.

Capt. Butler commanded a company in Col. Thomas Bartlett's regiment.

After the battle of Bunker Hill, in which Capt. Henry Dearborn was engaged, he, in the fall of 1775, again commanded a company in Arnold's regiment, which marched to Quebec by the way of Kennebec River. He was there taken prisoner in the attack upon Quebec, when Gen. Montgomery was slain. The following soldiers were enrolled in his company from Nottingham, viz.: James Beverly, John P. Hilton, and Samuel Sias.

In Capt. Henry Dearborn's company, Stark's regiment, at Bunker Hill, we find the following soldiers:

John Bickford, Andrew Nealey, Nath. Batchelder, John Nealey, Samuel Sias, Nicholas Brown, J. Rumrill, Benjamin Berry, Shadrach Dearborn, James Beverly, John Harvey, Robert Moore, Joshua Wells, Andrew Bickford, Thos. Case, James Gatchal, Mark Whitton, Benjamin Johnson, Jonah Moody, Clement Moody, Jonathan Dow, Joseph Jackson, Jacob Morrill, Peter S. Sarason, William Merrill, mortally wounded.

Weymouth Wallace was severely wounded in Bunker Hill battle; Neal McGatley was also slightly wounded. They were of Dearborn's company, but of Epsom; also Andrew McGatley. David Mudgett also, of Gilmanton or Barnstead, who lost his gun.

DEERFIELD SOLDIERS

Finners Ames, enl. March 28, 1778; disch. Feb. 7, 1780.
 Jonathan Griffin, enl. April 5, 1781; disch. Oct. 1, 1781.
 Joseph Grant, enl. April 13, 1781; disch. December, 1781.
 John Hall, enl. March 12, 1778; disch. December, 1781.
 Nathaniel Moulton, enl. Jan. 1, 1777; disch. December, 1781.
 John McCoy, enl. March 12, 1778; disch. March 12, 1781.
 Daniel McCoy, enl. March 17, 1778; disch. December, 1781.
 Thomas McLaughlin, enl. March 12, 1778; disch. March 12, 1781.
 John Norris, enl. March 4, 1778; disch. Feb. 4, 1781.
 Jotha Pettengill, enl. March 6, 1778; disch. December, 1781.
 John Reddie, enl. March 7, 1778; disch. February, 1781.
 Peter Stevens, enl. March 7, 1781; disch. December, 1781.
 Bernard Sargent, enl. March 7, 1781; disch. December, 1781.
 Lieut. Joseph Hilton was wounded at Saratoga, and left the service.

In Col. Scammell's regiment I find the name of Abraham Potter, who died at Saratoga, October, 1777, probably from wounds received at the battle

October 7th. Also the names of Chase Page, James Robinson, John Abbott, Remben Rand, Ezekiel Thurston, Robert Chase, Benjamin Towle, Nathaniel Batchelder, Josiah Batchelder, Jacob Morse, Daniel Mathes, Thomas Matthews, John Jewell. Most of the last-named men were Continental soldiers, enrolled in Scammell's or Reid's regiment.

Capt. Sanborn was wounded at Saratoga. He belonged to Deerfield. He was an officer in Col. Evans' regiment. In his company were enrolled Joseph Holt, Deerfield; John Chandler, Northwood; Jonathan Hawkins, Nottingham; Joseph Langley, Nottingham; Benjamin Langley, Nottingham; John Robertson. We do not present here a perfect list of this company.

Northwood Soldiers.—William Wallace was first lieutenant in Capt. John Drew's company, of Barrington, in the regiment commanded by Col. Hale, afterwards by Col. George Reid, of Derry, 1777. In July, 1776, he was first lieutenant in Capt. Joseph Chandler's company, Col. Isaac Wymann's regiment.

In Col. Joseph Cilley's regiment were enrolled; Benjamin Dowe, enlisted Jan. 1, 1777, discharged December, 1781; Levi Hatchinson, enlisted April 20, 1778, discharged December, 1781.

In other Continental regiments were enrolled Philip Fowler, John Harvey, Benjamin Sanborn, Andrew Willey, John Knight, Samuel Trierkey, John Bickford.

In addition to the above names, which were furnished by the Hon. George W. Nesmith for Mr. Cogswell's history, he adds the following names from Deerfield, the most of whom are known to have done service in the Revolution. Joseph H. Seavey and Isaac Moore enlisted as three years' men.

Among those who served three months' and six months' enlistments are the following, while it should be remembered that not a few of them enlisted several times during the conflict:

Edward Dearborn, Joseph Marston, David Moulton, Daniel Seavey, Robert Simpson, Joseph Toss, Nicholas Bott, John Kelley, James Morse, Joseph Chase, Parker Chase, Aaron Page, Jacob Hunt, Asa Moulton, Andrew Kempton, Samuel Collins, Capt. Daniel Moore, Robert Smart, Jeremiah Sawyer, Parker Chase, Jr., Tim Brown, Robert Cook, Ben or Doc, Caleb Phibbrick, a son of Josiah Sawyer, a son of John Morse, a son of Lieut. Chase, Jonathan York, Ezekiel Knowles.

For the above we are indebted to Joseph J. Dearborn, Esq., for whose aid we are under obligation in other matters. Many of the above names we have been able to identify in sketches given us.

In the census for 1840 it was required that the names and ages of all persons receiving pensions for services rendered in the wars of the Revolution and 1812 should be returned, and the result was as follows:

Nottingham. Betsey Langley, 88; Sally Witham, 89; Abigail Wescott, 75; Sarah Chapman, 78; Lovey Pickering, 88; Abner Davis, 86; Jonathan Davis 81, Joseph Cilly, 49, John Crawford, 55.
Northwood. Algard Knight, 86; Lydia Weeks, 68; John Chesley, 89; Joseph Shaw, 90; Simon Batchelder, 80; John Johnson, 83; John Bickford, 80; Betsey Farber, 95; Sarah Fogg, 82; Ebenezer Bennett, 78.

CAPT. HENRY DEARBORN'S COMPANY.

FRANKLIN, Aug. 31, 1778.

REV. MR. COGSWELL.

My Dear Sir,—I send you a correct list of the men that composed Capt. Henry Dearborn's company in the Bunker Hill battle and subsequent campaign. We leave you to fix the residences of most of the men:

Capt. Henry Dearborn, Nottingham.
 1st Lieut. Amos Merrill, Epsom.
 2d Lieut. Michael McCarty, Epsom.
 1st Sergt. Jonathan Clarke.
 2d Sergt. Abel M. Gaffey, Epsom.
 3d Sergt. Joseph Jackson, Nottingham.
 1st Corp. Jonah Moody.
 2d Corp. Andrew Field.
 3d Corp. Jonathan Gilman.
 4th Corp. Andrew Bickford.
 Simon Dearborn.
 Gideon Glendon.
 James Gaffand.
 John Harvey.
 David Madgett.
 Simon Sathorn.
 Robert Morrison.
 John Rannels.
 John Nealey.
 Joseph Place.
 Abram Pettengale.
 Andrew Nealey.
 Peter Severance.
 John Wallace.
 Theoph. Case, Epsom.
 Israel Clifford.
 Nathaniel Batchelder, died March 28, 1778.
 Jacob Morrill.
 John Simpson.

John Wallace, Jr.
 Neal M. Gaffey.
 Jonah Libbey.
 Moses Locke.
 Francis Locke.
 Zebulon Marsh.
 Solomon Moody.
 Chase Whitcher.
 Marsh Whitten.
 Nath. Sinclair, drummer.
 James Randall, fifer.
 Neph. Brown.
 Benj. Berry, Epsom.
 John Chace.
 Jonathan Crane.
 Jeremiah Conter.
 Elisha Hutchinson.
 Dudley Hutchinson.
 Benj. Jenkins.
 Josiah Wells.
 Jere. Howe.
 Jona. Howe.

 Beniah Libbey.
 Wm. Rowell.
 Weymouth Wallace.
 Thomas Walsh.
 William McPhillis.
 Samuel Wescott, enl. July 10, 1775.
 Francis Locke, Jr., enl. July 8, 1775.

Weymouth Wallace, of Epsom, was wounded, and received from government an invalid pension.

William McCrillis, of Epsom, also was mortally wounded, and died early in July, 1775. His widow received half-pay under subsequent statute law of this State.

Lieut. Joseph Hilton, of Deerfield, who was wounded at Saratoga, recovered so far as to do some duty, finally resigned his commission Oct. 10, 1778.

Lieut. Joseph Thomas, who belonged to Capt. Daniel Livermore's company, and was killed at Saratoga, was paid by Deerfield.

There were two officers of the same name, one of them belonged to Rindge.

John Harvey, of Northwood, was sergeant, was promoted to ensign's commission March 9, 1779, and to lieutenant's commission May 12, 1781. He was also quartermaster for some months in 1780.

In writing the biography of Gen. Henry Dearborn I suppose you will not forget to state the courtesies rendered by Peter Livias, the Tory counselor at Quebec, when Dearborn was made prisoner, and by Livias' influence was paroled and sent home, under the injunction to forward his wife and children to him from Portsmouth to Quebec. All this was done very promptly by Capt. Dearborn in 1776.

Truly yours, etc.,

GEO. W. NESMITH.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH.

DEACON LEVI KNOWLES.

The first ancestor of the Knowles family, in Rockingham County, came to North Hampton from Cambridge, about 1660. His name was John Knowles, and the line of descent from him to Deacon Levi Knowles (whose portrait appears on another page) is as follows: John<sup>1</sup>, John<sup>2</sup>, Ezekiel<sup>3</sup>, David<sup>4</sup>, Simeon<sup>5</sup>, Levi<sup>6</sup>. Levi Knowles was born in the town of Northwood, April 17, 1797. He was the son of one of the early pioneers of the town, and reared among the scenes and under the privations of its early development. He was trained a farmer, and made that his chief avocation through life. He married Mary Colcord, daughter of Samuel Colcord, of Nottingham, April 1, 1822. They had three children, two of whom died in infancy. The only surviving child, named Christiana Colcord, is now the wife of Samuel W. Morse, formerly of Boston, Mass., now a merchant in Lowell. He owns the old Knowles homestead, and is greatly beautifying and improving it. Mr. Knowles was thoroughly devoted to his chosen pursuit, and was one of the leading enterprising agriculturists of his town. He was a man of notable judgment and remarkable common sense, noted for his candor and frankness, and when he expressed an opinion on any subject his listener knew it was his honest opinion. This trait of character made his counsel much sought after. With a broad charity for all, a keen, intuitive judgment that enabled him to discern between the true and the false, his advice, counsel, or opinion was always just, yet always leaned towards the side of mercy and charity. His ancestors for generations were noted for their piety, and many of them were prominent in church affairs. His father was deacon of the Calvin Baptist Church. This tendency to high moral spirit and religious zeal seems to have culminated in Deacon Knowles, and to have been the predominant trait of his character. He was an unassuming, quiet, calm, God-fearing man, whose highest ambition was to deport himself in life, that when the end came he could have no regret for evil deeds done or good deeds left undone. He was never a seeker for popularity, fame, or position, yet the sterling worth of the man forced a recognition of his merits and an appreciation of his exalted character upon all with whom he came in contact, and made him hosts of friends. Many positions of trust and honor were urged upon him, but he persistently and firmly refused them all. While he was always first and foremost in adopting and advocating all reform measures, yet he preferred remaining in the background and letting others don the official robes. He was particularly ardent in support of the temperance cause, and all his life long he sought by precept and example to banish intemperance from the land.

Mr. Knowles died at the age of seventy-nine, and Mrs. Knowles at the age of eighty-one. In their demise Northwood lost two of its most respected citizens.

CHAPTER LXIII.

Geographical—Topographical—Petition for a Grant of the Town—Name of Town—The Royal Grant—Original Proprietors—The Survey—Ecclesiastical—Indians—Revolutionary—Attorneys—Physicians—Early Families.

THE town of Nottingham lies in the northern part of the county, and is bounded as follows: on the north and east by Strafford County, on the south by Epping and Raymond, and on the west by Deerfield and Northwood. The surface is hilly and rugged.

Nottingham originally comprised, in addition to its present territory, that of the present towns of Deerfield and Northwood, and was granted in 1721, chiefly to inhabitants of Boston and Newbury, Mass., and New Hampshire.

The petition for this tract of land was under date of April 21, 1721, and was signed by one hundred and one persons.

After the petition had been granted, but before the royal charter was received, the proprietors at Boston, at a legal meeting, voted that the purchase should be called New Boston, and why the name of Nottingham should appear in the charter instead is not known.

The royal charter was obtained May 10, 1722. It was given by "George, by the grace of God, of Great Britain, France and Ireland King, Defender of the Faith, etc.," and signed by Samuel Shute.

Original Proprietors.—The following is a list of the original proprietors of the town:

First Minister.

June 13, 1722, at a meeting of proprietors held at Exeter, at the house of Maj. John Gilman, it was voted, "That Maj. John Gilman, Capt. John Gilman, and Capt. John Wadleigh be a Committee to agree with men to build a bridge and make good ways to Nottingham."

Selectmen seen for the first time to have been chosen at the annual meeting of the proprietors at Portsmouth, March 26, 1723. This meeting was held at the house of Mrs. Suzanna Small. "Col. Thomas Packer, Esq., was chosen moderator, John Calfie, clerk." And the selectmen were "Mr. Elisha Story at Boston, Capt. Edward Sargent at Newbury, and Mr. Benj. Gambling at Portsmouth."

The town was surveyed in 1732 by John Brown and Stephen Hosmer, Jr.

Ecclesiastical.—The institution of religious worship was contemporary with the settlement of the town. The first preacher was Rev. Mr. Mayhem, in 1729. He was succeeded by Revs. Joshua Moody, Stephen Emery, Mr. McClintock, Mr. Goodhue, Benjamin Butler, Oliver Dodge, James Hohart. A church building was erected early in the history of the town, and a second one in about 1804 or 1805, which was taken down in 1840.

"When the Congregational Church was organized we cannot tell. A remnant still remains worshipping in connection with the Free-Will Baptist Church at the Centre, about a mile from the square.

The Free-Will Baptist Church was long since organized, and ministered unto by Elders Dyer, Tuttle, and others, while a Christian Baptist congregation centres at Tuttle's Corner, at present worshipping in a hall. The Universalists claim one-third of the meeting-house at the Centre, and sustain worship one-third of the time. Adventists hold meetings in various parts of the town at their convenience and as interest may demand."—Cogswell.

Indians.—During the French war, the Indians greatly troubled the settlements in New Hampshire. Nottingham did not escape. Small parties of the enemy concealed themselves on or near her borders, and made great havoc among the cattle, horses, sheep, and other domestic animals. There lived a small tribe of Indians near the north part of what is now called North River Pond, near the line which now divides Nottingham from Northwood, and within the present limits of the latter. At the head of this tribe was a chief by the name of Swansen. He was generally disposed to be friendly to the settlers, yet sometimes did not restrain his own tribe, nor roving parties from other tribes, from doing mischief.—Cogswell.

Revolutionary.—The following signed the "Association Test:"

"Association Test.—We, The Subscribers, Do Hereby Solemnly Engage, And Promise, That we Will, To The Utmost Of Our Power, At The Risk Of Our Lives And Fortunes, With Arms, Oppose The Hostile Proceedings Of The British Fleets And Armies Against The United American Colonies.

PLAISTOW.

Geographical—Topographical—Petition for Town or Parish—Petition against being set off as a New Parish—Petition not to join with Mr. Hazen—Report of Haverhill District—Petition of Haverhill District for New Parish—Petition for Special Act—Memorial of Col. James White and others—Other Petitions—Early Settlers—Congregational Church—Baptist Church—List of Representatives—Military Record.

THE town of Plaistow lies in the southern part of the county, and is bounded as follows: On the north by Hampstead and Kingston, on the east by Kingston, Newton, and the State of Massachusetts, on the south by Massachusetts, and on the west by Massachusetts, Atkinson, and Hampstead. The surface of the town is rolling and the soil fertile, consisting of black loam, clay, and gravel.

Plaistow was originally a part of Haverhill, Mass., and was included in the Indian purchase of 1642. It subsequently became annexed to New Hampshire, and was chartered as a separate parish Feb. 28, 1749. The following is a copy of the petition for incorporation as a town or parish:

Petition for a town or parish.

To His Excellency Benning Wentworth Esqr. Governour and Commander in Chief in and over his Majesty's Province of New Hamp<sup>sh</sup> and the hon<sup>ble</sup> his Majesty's Council for said Province.

Humbly Shew Your Petitioners Inhabitants in the westerly part of Haverhill District,

That your Petitioners live at a Great Distance from any place where the Publick worship is maintained. That Our Situation is such as is Convenient for a Township or Parish But cannot conveniently be joynted with any other.

That there are already Sixty or Seventy families here settled and more daily Settling who must be under very great Disadvantages with Regard to the Publick worship of God unless we can obtain to have it Settled among Ourselves.

We therefore pray your Excellency & Honours that we may be Incorporated into a town or Parrish as you shall Judge most proper by the following Bounds Beginning at the westerly corner of Jonathan Stevens' land by the Islandy Pond and from thence to the Northwesterly Corner of Thomas Hales farm and from thence Southerly to the Province line so as to make this line half way between Mr. Cushing's Meeting house and John Watt's at Providence Brook or as near to half way as may be tho't Reasonable, from thence westerly by y<sup>e</sup> Province line to the head of the District then Northerly so far as that an East line passing from the end of this Northerly line to the first mentioned Bounds shall Include all the Land to the Southward of Islandy Pond.

And your Petitioners as in Duty Bound shall ever pray &c.

Hazzen and others Petition for a Special Act, &c.

Province of ( To His Excellency Benning Wentworth Esqr. Governor and Commander in chief in & over s<sup>d</sup> Province of New Hampshire, The Hon<sup>ble</sup> His Majesties Council & House of Representatives in General Court assembled at Portsmouth August 1744

Humbly Shew the Subscribers That sometime in the months of September October or November last many persons living in Haverhill District in s<sup>d</sup> Province or near to the same in the Town of Haverhill had severall of their Cattle taken out of their fields, or pastures and kill'd also Severall Swarms of Bees were stolen & the Honey carry'd off by some thievish and ill minded persons, as also axes Poultry of all sorts & other things.

That severall of the hides were found in that part of s<sup>d</sup> District which is Commonly called Rumford Parish either hid in barns under y<sup>e</sup> hay, or in other dark holes with the head and horns cut off for which reason with many other evidences we are well satisfied, the actors of these thefts & Robberies live most of them in s<sup>d</sup> District or Parish.

That forasmuch as these actions are for the most part committed in the dark where positive evidences can scarcely ever be had, it is very hard & difficult to detect & convict the criminals in the Ordinary course and Method of the Law, by which means the Guilty are become very bold & daring in their evil practices and the sufferers not like to have any recompense unless Some further provision in the law can be made.

We therefore Earnestly request your Excellency & Honours to Compassionate our distressed circumstances and afford us relief either by making Some act to bring suspected persons & their aiders & assistants on their oaths which we humbly conceive has been of Great Service in Trespass or Otherwise as your Excellency & Honours in your known wisdom goodness and piety shall think best & for your Excellency & Honours your Humble petitioners as in duty bound shall ever pray &c.

Memorial of Col. James White and others.

Province of ( To his Excellency John Wentworth New Hamp<sup>sr</sup> ) Esq<sup>r</sup> Governor the Honourable his Majesties Council and Representatives of said Province in General Court assembled.

The Memorial of James White and others humbly sheweth

Whereas by a late act of Law of this Province the Town of Plaistow is Divided and part of it become a New and Separate Parish, which Includes our Houses and Lands, we apprehend that our Situation and other Circumstances will render it very Difficult for us to become members of the said New Parish. And it being Just and reasonable to allow all men freedom and Liberty with respect to the choice of a society wherein to join in Public worship—

We therefore Pray that your Excellency and Honours will according to your wonted favours Enact and order that we with our Estates may be set off from said new Parish, be annex'd and belong to said Plaistow (old Parish) in the Same manner as heretofore. And we as in Duty bound Shall ever Pray.

Petition for release from support of Hugh Potter.

Province of } To His Excellency the Governor to
the House of Representatives of said Province in General Court assembled May y<sup>e</sup>
18th A Domini 1774

In behalf of the Town of Plaistow in the County Rockingham in said Province—the Petition of the Selectmen and Overseers of the Poor of said Town of Plaistow Humbly Sheweth,

That about Twenty years Since one Hugh Potter, a very aged man, without leave or liberty orderly had, or obtained, from Said Town, or the Selectmen thereof, Did come into and Obtrude himself upon the said Town of Plaistow by taking residence therein, & dwelling there to this day—That according to the best accounts from the said Potter he was a native of Great Britain & had never gained a legal settlement elsewhere.

That from Early life till near the time of his Coming into said Plaistow he the said Potter had been in his Majestys Service both by sea & land, and that he had been in several Fights as long ago as in y<sup>e</sup> Reign of Queen Ann &c, and that by reason of y<sup>e</sup> s<sup>d</sup> Hughs account of & about himself he was not legally warned to depart out of the Said Town of Plaistow. That the said Hugh Potter has been unable to support & maintain himself ever since his residence in said Town. That for Seventeen years last past the said Hugh Potter hath been maintained & supported at the Public Cost & charge of y<sup>e</sup> s<sup>d</sup> Town of Plaistow, that the Cost & charge thereof has not been less than Eleven pounds lawful money p<sup>r</sup> an<sup>m</sup> for several years past, and is now increasing So as greatly to Distress, & burthen the s<sup>d</sup> Town &c.

Wherefore the petitioners in behalf of said Town of Plaistow Humbly pray yr. Excel<sup>ty</sup> & Hon<sup>ty</sup> to take y<sup>e</sup> premises under consideration and in your great goodness Grant and make an order that the s<sup>d</sup> Hugh Potter may for the future be maintained, & supported at the Cost & charge of this, his Majestys Province of New Hampshire & that the said Town of Plaistow be no longer Chargeable with his support, and likewi<sup>se</sup> favor us on account of y<sup>e</sup> charges we have been at in time past or such other way & manner as your Excel<sup>ty</sup> & Hon<sup>ty</sup> shall think best to relieve y<sup>e</sup> s<sup>d</sup> Town & the Pet<sup>r</sup> as in duty bound shall ever pray &c.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH.

NATHANIEL K. KELLY.

Among the representative physicians of the generation just passing from our mid-t, Dr. Nathaniel Knight Kelly has been one of whom some words should be said in this connection. Plain, unassuming, attentive to all duties, with love to God shown in his painstaking care of any whom he could relieve, he may well be called, par excellence, "the beloved physician." None have enjoyed stronger friendships or won the lasting love and esteem of a better class of people. Better than any words of ours, we subjoin, as typical of the man, a short autobiographical sketch furnished for this purpose:

"I was born Sept. 14, 1800, and consequently I am now about eighty-two years old. My parents were poor, and although quite willing, yet they were unable to help me to get an education. I had some two months in a year in which I could go to our district school for about ten or twelve years. In the year 1821 I entered the academy at Atkinson, then under the care of Francis Vose, but after a few weeks I left to take charge of the winter school in my own district. This was my first effort at school-teaching, and my main qualification was that I thought I knew a very little more than my few little ones. My compensation was ten dollars per month, and my father boarded me free. In the spring, with about twenty dollars in my pocket, I went back to Atkinson and paid up for my board and tuition the last fall, and entered the academy again, then under the care of Jacob Cummings, a most excellent teacher. I commenced Latin, with the intention of fitting for college; and thus, studying in summer and teaching in winter, I nearly made ends meet, and with such helps as my parents could give as to clothing I got along some two or three years, until I was nearly fitted for college. But in June, before entering, I was taken down with fever, and did not resume my studies until late in the summer; and although fitted for college, I made no attempt to enter, fearing that my health would break down. By the advice of friends, but sorely against my will, and with poverty staring me in the face, I entered my name, with some four or five others, as a student of medicine, under the care of Dr. L. B. Hovey. With him, and under the care of some of the teachers of the Medical School of Maine, I spent nearly four years, and graduated honorably at Bowdoin College in the year 1828. I went immediately into a hard country practice in my native town, and soon into the surrounding towns, and I was never in want of business. I had the care of nearly every family in town for more than fifty years, and for a great part of this time I had nearly as much more business in adjoining towns. This was no doubt owing, in part at least, to the fact that I never cared much about money. Medical fees forty years ago were very moderate, yet I was nearly up with my neighbors as to price; but I always determined that my patients should get well, cost me what it would. I never left a patient because he was poor.

"It was a custom in early days to attend professional men and their families free. During the war of the Rebellion I never charged returned sick soldiers anything.

"There is only one remarkable thing in my case, and that is, I am out of debt.

"When I was a pupil I read Prof. R. Murrey's address to his class, in which he says, 'If you practice medicine, make it your whole business.' This has always seemed to me good common sense; and with the exception of two short terms of absence in the New Hampshire Legislature, 1859 and 1860, and some years' service on school committee in my native town, I have followed Dr. Murrey's advice to the letter. I united with the Congregational Church of Plaistow in 1827, and have, without neglecting my patients, attended nearly all the regular church appointments for more than fifty years, although I have lived two miles from my place of worship. I have no sympathy with those who have so much business that they cannot attend church. 'Where there is a will there is generally a way.' I have been wonderfully blessed in my domestic affairs. I was married the first time, Sept. 19, 1836, to Miss Anna Dow, daughter of the late John Dow, Esq., of Atkinson, N. H. She died Aug. 25, 1863. My second marriage was to Mary S. Peaslee, June 8, 1868, who still lives. She was the daughter of the late Dr. Peaslee, of Kingston, N. H. (see biography of L. D. Peaslee, Kingston), and was a teacher in Brooklyn, N. Y., for twenty-eight years. I know not the object or need of this sketch of my life, and must say 'Cui bono.' until these lines are made to show some 'footprints on these sands' below.

"I am old, my sight is poor, and my hand so unsteady that I have written this imperfect sketch with much pain."

CHAPTER LXXV.

Geographical—Topographical—Purchase of the Town—The Survey—First Settlements—Names of Promoters—Incorporation of Town—First Town-Meeting—Officers elected—Documentary History—Early Families—Physicians.

THE town of Raymond lies in the western part of the county, and is bounded as follows: on the north by Nottingham and Deerfield, on the east by Epping and Fremont, on the south by Chester, and on the west by Chester and Candia. It contains sixteen thousand three hundred and seventeen acres. The surface is generally level and the soil fertile.

Dudley's Purchase.—The territory embraced within the present bounds of this town was purchased of the Indians by Col. Dudley in 1817. The grantors were Penniwit and Abigail, his squaw.

In March of the following year, Col. Dudley sold one-eighth of his purchase to James Dudley, Jr., father of Judge Dudley, and his brothers, Samuel and Joseph. The price paid was three pounds. In 1722, Dudley disposed of four hundred acres more of his purchase.

The First Settlements were made between the years 1720 and 1730. As is seen, Col. Dudley was the active spirit in the settlement, but it is doubtful if he was ever a permanent settler. He was a shoemaker by trade, and died in Exeter in 1734, aged forty-six.

The town was surveyed in 1728, and divided into one hundred and forty lots of one hundred acres each.

1744. There is a record, which we think reliable, that Samuel Dudley was here at this date, his oldest son having been born about that year. He lived where the judge afterwards lived.

In 1745, Samuel Healey settled in the west part. His house was east of what is now the Jersey road, in Candia.

1750. About this date David Bean came from Kingston. He was brother of Lieut. Benjamin Bean, who came soon after.

1751. Elisha Towle was from Hawke, now Danville.

In 1752, Lieutenant Benjamin Bean came from Kingston.

Jedediah and Jonathan Brown, from Seabrook, came to the Page road.

Maj. Josiah Fogg, from Hampton.

Daniel Robie, from Hampton Falls, settled where the late J. Fullerton resided.

1753. Daniel Todd was originally from Ireland.

1754. Daniel Holman was from West Epping. He had lived below, but was disposed to move westward with civilization. His small house in Epping was not far from Thomas Folsom's, and was the first built west of the river. In Raymond he lived on Oak Hill, just above the Abbotts.

1755. Robert Page was from Pagetown, in North Hampton, and about the same date, John and James Fullerton came from Epping. John built a log house, which had no glass or doors, properly such. James built back from the highway.

The first operations were at Freetown mills, and some were early in the Branch District. The veritable, shrewd, humorous "Maj. Jack Downing" said, "It is well to begin at the beginning of things, and we shall get through better." We go to the south part of the Branch road, and then progress north. On the Raymond side of Chester line Benjamin True, from Salisbury, built a house. He was the father of the late Capt. Benjamin True, who lived in the edge of Chester. Barton Pollard lived near the Todd place, and the Moores were early on the farm still called by the name. On the Currier farm the Merrills flourished, and in 1795, Gideon Currier, from Chester, came into possession. He became, in his day, perhaps the largest landholder in town.

About the time of the Revolutionary war, Samuel Poor and his sons Samuel and Ebenezer came from West Newbury. They began on what are now two farms still in the name of Poor.

John Prescott Lovering came from Exeter to Fremont, then to what is here known as the Lovering place, about the commencement of the Revolutionary war. His son Daniel, a grandson, the late Capt. Daniel, and finally a son of the captain, the present Moses L. Lovering, also dwelt here.

Jacob York came from Lee to what is now called York's Corners in 1795. It is said that near this corner Clement Moody early settled. No one lived nearer than "the Rocks," in Poplin, now Fremont, and when fire was lost it was necessary to go to "the Rocks" to get it.

At the old Bean house, opposite Widow John Bean's, not only the town-meetings were held till a meeting-house was built, but the meetings for preaching.

Near George S. Robbie's, Stephen Prescott, from Hampton, built a house in the woods about 1775. Some years later he raised a barrel of potatoes, which was then thought a great crop. Stephen Osgood, a grandson, flourished there, and for years he put much in motion in this part of the town. Ebenezer Cram, afterwards deacon, came from Hampton Falls in 1868, and located near here. His brother Benjamin located where Josiah B. Cram lives; another brother, John, on Mr. Moulton's place, near the Gore schoolhouse. Afterwards John and Ebenezer changed farms. John, in time, moved to Pitt-field.

Easterly of the school-house, where the old road was, lived Joseph White. A man up north, Capt. John Fullonton, lost his wife, who charged him, before her death, not to marry Molly, who lived at Deacon Craun's. The man thus charged had a mind to do so, however, and at dusk the captain would be seen wending his way to where Molly lived. Mr. White, knowing the case, thought to frighten him out of it. So one night, as the captain was already in the door-yard, anticipating an interview with his intended bride, White appeared, wrapped in a sheet, as if the ghost of the departed wife from the graveyard below. The captain did not believe in witches, hobgoblins, or ghosts. He was aware that "true love does not run smooth," but will run regardless of difficulties. Molly he meant to have in spite of the devil and all his works, so he gave chase. White fled, carrying the sheet on his arm, and ran home for fear of a beating.

Lieut. Jonathan Dearborn, from Stratham, came here about 1763.

Just north of Capt. Tilton's road lived Benjamin Fox,—afterwards north of Oak Hill. Down the back road, near Epping line, lived Joseph and Moses Cass. Some confidently believe the late Gen. Lewis Cass was son of one of these. The general was born, however, in Exeter, and his father was Jonathan Cass. Eliphilet Folsom came from Exeter in 1770. His brother John dwelt at the foot of Oak Hill. On the Hill, besides Holman, already named, lived Jacob Smith, who moved from Epping to Nottingham, then here. The Abbotts have a large dwelling on the place. Half a mile above John Bachelder had a house, of which the fireplace formed a considerable part. It would take in a back-log five feet long and two feet in diameter, a forestick six feet long, and other wood to match, in all nearly a cord. Mr. Bachelder was from Hampton Falls.

Going south, near the foot of the hill, Daniel Pevere, from Hampton Falls, early settled. On the place where J. Corson once lived Moses Sanborn resided. John Brown, father of Joseph, came later with his father John, from Hampton. A few rods north of Harriman's lived John Montgomery, from Ireland. Asa Harriman, a native of Rowley, Mass., came from Epping about 1782. Opposite the Harriman house Nathaniel Dudley, son of the judge, built. After he left, James Dudley occupied the place for a time, then moved to the Branch. East, in the Blake field, lived Benjamin Prescott.

Reuben Tilton, from Hampton Falls, came to where Dudley Harriman lived for years about 1770. John Stevens came here not far from the same time. Stevens' first house was back towards the river, afterwards the old Stevens house on the road.

Where Griffin's mill is a saw-mill was built, we think, by some of the Dudleys. Joseph Dudley, brother of the judge, lived there; also a Mr. Wells.

Where David Griffin owns, Alexander McClure settled. His son Alexander lived on the late Martha McClure's place, beyond the "Long Hill."

Nicholas Gilman, from Kingston, was an early settler. His first dwelling was in the woods.

Isaac Tucker, grandfather of the late Barnard and Gen. H. Tucker, went first from Philadelphia to Portsmouth; thence to this place about the time of the Revolution. Daniel Richardson, the ancestor of several of that name here, was from Newbury Old Town about 1765.

Caleb Smith lived in the Dudley district. He was chosen one of the selectmen.

Near the Gile school-house lived Jesse Gile, from Haverhill, Mass., and at the right David Brown, from Chester. John Leavitt early settled nearly opposite the Hodgkins place.

Manoah Scribner, from Fremont, came to the Scribner place about 1787. A Mr. Palmer lived at the northwest of the pond, and Jonathan Smith, father of Dean Smith, had a log house near Healy's Mountain. Asa Heath lived northerly of the Green, and Samuel Healey in the vicinity.

Jonathan Woodman came from Candia early in the present century. He was a descendant of Peter Woodman, who lived at Kingston nearly one hundred and fifty years ago.

John Lane, from Rye, came to Chester, a mile south of here, in 1749. He owned land here, and on it his sons Nathan, Ezekiel, Daniel, David, and Jonathan settled. Deacon Wason was from Chester about 1800. Matthias Haines lived in the Wason district. The Abbotts in town descended from Ephraim, from Fremont, who lived on the Rye road to the Green.

On the road east of the Gile school-house settled the Bachelders, from Hampton Falls,—Josiah, Jonathan, and David. South of Hazen Bachelder's lived Samuel Peavey. The Kimballs were from Exeter.

Josiah Moulton, the first who settled here, was from Hampton Falls. Farther down, where the road divides, lived Henry Thresher, who came from Hampton about 1775. His son David followed, but afterwards moved to Candia.

Early Roads.—The first road laid out in Raymond was March 10, 1748. It began near where Mr. Knowles now lives in Chester, and followed a path through the Branch district to what is now Fremont line, below J. Elliott's.

Sept. 22, 1749. From a road on the north of what is now Chester to Wason district to Candia line. This passed a saw-mill called Chatanga, a corruption of an Indian word signifying foggy place.

May 5, 1750. From below Marden's, in Chester, into Raymond, east of the Dean Smith place, called the Todd road.

May 5, 1750. Near Osgood True's, by what is called the Dudley place.

Aug. 21, 1752. Fremont line to Freetown Mills.

Oct. 18, 1757. North of Capt. Tilton's road by the gate that hung near Gilman Folsom's, by Timothy Osgood's to Epping line.

June 12, 1759. From Freetown Mills, by the Center, to Dudley's Mill in the west part.

June 12, 1759. From Gilman Folsom's, over Oak Hill, to Nottingham line.

June 13, 1759. Freetown Mill to school-house near Timothy Osgood's.

June 14, 1760. Outlet of Jones pond to Center.

Sept. 3, 1760. Dudley's Mill to Candia line near Mr. Critchet's.

Dec. 9, 1761. Page road.

March 24, 1763. North side of Chester to where Henry D. Lane lately lived.

Incorporation of Town.—The first recorded action of which we have any record concerning the organization of this town was a vote of the town of Chester, Jan. 26, 1763, "that a part of said township, commonly called Free Town, might be incorporated into a new parish."

March 1, 1764, a petition for the incorporation of the town was presented to the Governor and Provincial Assembly, signed by the following persons:

Daniel Gordon, Jr.	Daniel Jordan (Gordon).
Daniel Holman.	John Cram.
Elisha Towle.	Alexander Mel (McClure).
Jonathan Brown.	Stephen Fogg.
Simon Berry.	Benjamin Smith.
Noah Moulton.	James Fullonton.
Wadleigh Cram.	Samuel Cram.
Joseph Egiles (Giles).	John Stevens.
Daniel Lane.	Jonathan Dearborn.
Ezekiel Lane.	Benia Bean (Benjamin)
David Lane.	Curtis Bean.
Nathan Moulton.	Isaac Clifford.
Josiah Fogg.	Paul Smith Marston.
Daniel Clay.	Benjamin Prescott.
Stephen marden.	John Fullonton.
Obediah Griffin.	John Wells.
Moses Sandorn.	John Prescott Downs.
Caleb Rowe.	William Todd.
Robert Page.	Timothy Clough.
John Sweet.	Ezekiel Smith.
Daniel Robie.	David Bean.
James Clay.	Alexander Smith.
Stephen Wilson.	Barton Pollard.
Jethro Batchelder.	David Bean, Jr.
Benj. Whittier.	Nathaniel Ethridge.
Clement Dolloff.	Knoch Fogg.

The First Town-Meeting.—The first town-meeting was held at Benjamin Bean's in May 29, 1764, when the following officers were elected: Moderator, Samuel Dudley; Town Clerk, Ezekiel Smith; Selectmen, Caleb Rowe, Samuel Dudley, and Robert Page; Constable, Benjamin Whittier; Auditors and Assessors, Stephen Fogg, Joseph Dudley, and Ezekiel Lane; Surveyors of Highways, Josiah Fogg, Jonathan Dearborn, Joseph Dudley, Simon Bayard, and Clement Dolloff; Haywards, Stephen Thurston, Jonathan Dearborn, Joseph Smith, Curtis Bean, Samuel Philbrick, and Daniel Scribner; Tithingmen, James Fullonton, N. Ethridge, Moses Whittier, and Joseph Dudley; Deer Inspectors, John Sweet, John Stevens; Surveyors of Lumber, Benjamin Bean and Alexander Smith; Pound-keeper, John Smith.

Early Families.—The Dudley family. This family has been identified with the history of this town from the earliest date to the present. It has a noble history in the town, in the State, in some other States, and in England, before any of them came across the waters. We have seen what offices the town conferred here. One also was judge. In colonial times two were Provincial Governors, and in the old country it was an English historical name. There were barons, bishops, and knights of Dudleys, from 1376 to 1460. And later, one wore a crown for a few days.

The ancestor of the Dudley family here was Thomas Dudley, who came to Massachusetts in 1630, and was Governor of the province. Joseph Dudley, son of Governor Thomas, was also provincial Governor. Governor Thomas Dudley was son of Capt. Roger Dudley, slain in a war in England. Governor Joseph Dudley was popular in New Hampshire. His portrait is in the Council chamber in Concord.

We are concerned only with Stephen, son of Rev. Samuel by his last wife. He married twice, and had eleven children. Of them we need name Stephen, who was a cordwainer, and married Sarah Davidson, of Newbury, Mass. He purchased Raymond of an Indian sagamore, as has been named in its proper place. He died in Exeter in 1734, aged forty-six. His brother James was born at Exeter, in 1690, and was the father of Judge Dudley, of Raymond. John, a younger brother, was killed by the Indians in what is now Fremont, in 1710, at the age of eighteen. This was the same year that Col. Winthrop Hilton, of Newmarket, was killed, with others, near the "mast way," in Epping.

It may be interesting to put down here the names of the Dudleys and the time they filled the office of representative.

In 1766, John Dudley came to Raymond, having bought the farm now owned by his great-grandson, James T. Dudley, Esq. Gaining the confidence of the citizens, he soon became the leading man of the town. Two years after coming here he was appointed justice of the peace. He was an active patriot during the Revolution, and prominent in the councils of the State.

Maj. Josiah Fogg was a native of Bride Hill, in Hampton. He came to this town in 1752, and settled on what was afterwards known as the Fogg farm, which was kept in the name more than one hundred years.

Robert Page. The name Page is found in the early records of Hampton, and David Page, the father of Robert, was born there, but moved to North Hampton, where Robert was born. He married Sarah Dearborn, sister of Gen. Henry Dearborn, and came to this place in 1755.

Lieut. Benjamin Bean was born in Kingston, and came to this town in 1752.

Jonathan Swain, Esq., was a native of Hampton Falls. He was married three times, and some of his children were born before he came to town. He took up his residence here in 1765.

Levi Swain was son of the above, and was a native of Hampton Falls. He came here when about twelve years of age. He proved a worthy son of a faithful father in the service of the town.

James Moore was a native of Ireland, and brought to this country when about three years of age. Not long after he came to Chester. At the age of forty he moved to this town.

Robert Moore, son of the above, was born in Chester, came to this town with his parents when quite young, and after arriving at a suitable age, attending Exeter Academy one year, then engaged in teaching in Maine, also in this town. He was moderator of the town-meeting two years, and one of the selectmen six. He died, Jan. 5, 1804, aged thirty-nine. The late Capt. John Moore was his son.

Capt. Samuel Nay. The Nays of this town descended from John Nay, called a Jerseyman because he lived on the Isle of Jersey, east of England. John came to Hampton, and died in 1750, aged ninety. Capt. Samuel was born in Hampton. His father was John, son of the above. He was in the war with the French and Indians between 1755-60. He was deputy sheriff in Hampton, and a captain in the war of the Revolution. He moved to Epping about 1780, and long after to this town.

Deacon Ebenezer Prescott's birthplace was Hampton Falls. He came here about 1776. His wife was Phoebe Eastman. He served as selectman two years, and was appointed a deacon in the Congregational Church in 1791.

Deacon Ebenezer Cram was born in Hampton Falls; came to town in 1768; was selectman two years; and chosen deacon of the Congregational Church in 1791. He died Feb. 7, 1819, aged seventy-three years.

Benjamin Cram, brother to the above, a native of Hampton Falls, came here in 1768, and was selectman one year.

Ebenezer Osgood, Esq., brother of the above, was born in Epping in 1757; served in the army of the Revolution; married Mary Fogg; settled in this town about 1782; was a justice of the peace, selectman two years, and representative one.

John Osgood, also a brother of the above, was born in Epping in 1762; came to town and lived here till after 1795.

Gen. Henry Tucker was one of the most active and enterprising men of the town.

The first of the largest family of Browns in Raymond was Jedediah. He came from Seabrook and settled towards the south end of the Page road.

The Blakes of Raymond descended from Jasper Blake. We have the authority of the late John Farmer, of Concord, for saying he was the first of the name to come over from England. He came to Hampton in 1650. He was married four times, his last wife being Deborah Dalton, sister of Rev. T. Dalton, minister, of Hampton. He had ten children, viz., Deborah (who married Eleazer Elkins), Timothy, Israel, Jasper, John, Sarah, Joshua, Samuel, Dorothy, and Philemon. He lived in Hampton twenty-three years, and died June 5, 1673.

The Bean House.—The oldest dwelling now standing in town is the Bean house. In this lived Lieut. Benjamin Bean, followed by his son Thomas, whose son, Capt. Benjamin Bean, was next; and then the late John Bean, son of the captain. It was in early years a tavern. The first town-meetings were held there, and also meetings for preaching before a house of worship was erected.

This house was standing in 1752, and was built by David Bean, a brother of Lieut. Bean. Probably it was built about 1750, and is therefore one hundred and twenty-five years old. It has been kept in good repair, and looks as if it would do service one hundred years longer. It is now owned by G. R. West, who is of the fourth generation from Lieut. Bean, the first proprietor.

Bean family. The earliest and largest family of this name in town was the one south of Freetown Mills. It has been about one hundred and twenty-three years since the first member came here.

The first was David, who was born in 1725, in Kingston, where at the age of twenty-three he married Mary Judkins. He settled in Epping, then came to this town, near Freetown Mills, 1752. He was not here many years, but went to the island in Candia. His descendants are there now. Rev. Moses Bean, of Candia village, was also a descendant.

Currier family. We have no record of any of this name before 1668. Thomas Currier, of Amesbury, Mass., died Sept. 27, 1712. In the line of one of his children, Benjamin, descended the progenitor of the family that came to Raymond. He was born March 27, 1668, probably in Amesbury.

Jonathan Cram, son of John, lived in Hampton Falls. He was born April 22, 1706, and died May 3, 1760. His wife was Elizabeth Heath. She died in 1773. Children:

1. John. He came to Raymond and lived here a while, then moved to Pittsfield.
2. Nehemiah.
3. Jonathan.

4. Ebenezer, born Dec. 5, 1745, married Mary Philbrick, of Seabrook, who was born May 15, 1745. He settled in Raymond and lived at the place just north of the school-house in district No. 3. He was a deacon of the Congregational Church, and died Feb. 7, 1819.

5. Benjamin came to Raymond, married Mary Bean, and lived where Josiah B. Cram now does.

6. Joel.

7. Joseph.

8. Molly.

Deacon Ebenezer and Mary Cram had children, probably, as follows, but we do not vouch for the accuracy as to dates in every case.

Jonathan Dearborn lived in Chester. His ancestors came from Hampton. His children were Richard, Mehitable, Peter, Benjamin, and Thomas. This last had a son Thomas, who was killed by a cannon-ball in the war of the Revolution, in 1778. His wife was Mary Morrison. They were the parents of Maj. Thomas Dearborn, of this town. There were four children, all sons. They were born in Candia.

In the northeast part of this town, in the line of another branch of the same great family, was the late Deacon John Dearborn and the present Benjamin Dearborn. Members of this branch lived in Stratham. We begin back only at the year 1715, at which date one Jonathan Dearborn married Hannah Tuck. They might have lived in Stratham; at any rate their immediate descendants did. This Jonathan was a son of John. Children of Jonathan and Hannah Dearborn:

1. John, born April 2, 1718.

2. Bethia, born Nov. 2, 1719.

3. Benjamin, born Oct. 2, 1721, died young.

4. Hannah, born March 14, 1725.

Other pioneer families were the Emersons, Tuckers, Poors, Prescotts, Robies, Fullontons, Foggis, Folsoms, Giles, Gilmans, Healeys, Harrimans, Lanes, Lovings, Moodys, Moores, McClures, Moultons, Nays, Norrises, Osgoods, Pages, Scribners, Stevens, Swains, Tiltons, Wallaces, Wasons, Woodmans, Abbotts, Andersons, Bishops, Bagleys, Burbanks, Bacheliers, Bennets, Dollofs, Davises, Dodges, Dows, Elliots, Foxes, Floods, Gordons, Goves, Griffins, Heaths, Holmans, Kimballs, Leavitts, Lockes, Mandens, Magsons, Nortons, Peckers, Pollards, Runnells, Richardsons, Roberts, Samborns, Shannons, Smiths, Smarts, Sweatts, Stickneys, Shaws, Spinneys, Thrashers, Towles, Titcombs, Varnums, Whittiers, Wendells, and Yorks.

Physicians.—Dr. Francis Hodgkins was a native of Ipswich, Mass., and came about 1770. He died Oct. 8, 1812, aged sixty-one.

Dr. Benjamin Page was here a few years previous to 1800. His native place was Kensington.

Dr. John Pillsbury was born in Rowley, Mass., was in practice here from 1798 to 1804. He was full of hilarity and mirth. After leaving here he was in Candia, then in Pembroke, where he died some years ago at an advanced age.

Dr. Phineas Trull, a native of Tuxbury, Mass., was here from 1805 to 1819.

Dr. Thomas H. Merrill, a native of Brownfield, Me., practiced in Gilmantown; was here from 1820 to 1823. He moved to Boothbay, Me.

Dr. Edmund R. Rowell, a native of Salem, N. H., came in 1822, left in 1825.

Dr. Stephen Gale, a native of East Kingston, was here from 1824 to 1846, excepting an interval of one year at East Kingston, and about the same length at Gloucester, Mass.

Dr. John Gale, a native of East Kingston, studied with his brother, Dr. S. Gale, of this place; practiced at Epsom, and died at his brother's, in this town, Aug. 1, 1833, aged twenty-seven.

Dr. Stephen Brown, a native of Andover, N. H., was here in 1829, filling Dr. Gale's place, then in another town.

Dr. Theodore Wells, a native of Deerfield, practiced in the town in 1836, Dr. Gale being absent again. Afterwards he became a minister, was settled over the Congregational Church in Barrington, and died in Sanford, Me., in 1864, aged fifty-six.

Dr. Thomas J. Dudley was born in this town, son of Thomas Dudley, who lived where John Scribner now does. He was a successful school-teacher, studied medicine with Dr. Gale, attended one course of lectures at Brunswick, Me. Failing health did not allow of his going farther. He died here of consumption, Jan. 19, 1831, aged thirty-one.

Dr. Peter Y. Frye. His native place was Deerfield. He succeeded Dr. Gale in 1846; left in 1855; went to Oyster Bay, Long Island, N. Y., where he still resides. His second wife was Miss Carrie Currier, of this town.

Dr. Harrison J. Copp, a native of Georgetown, Mass., was here a few months in 1852. His practice was eclectic. Afterwards he resided in Suncook and Manchester. In the late war he was with the Third New Hampshire Regiment as hospital nurse, and died at Port Royal, S. C., April, 1862, aged forty-two.

Dr. John O. Haimes, a native of Deerfield, eclectic physician, was here, living up towards Langfords, from 1848 to 1857, when he went to Deerfield.

Dr. George A. Blake, a native of the town, son of the late Hon. Joseph Blake, is a physician. His wife was Miss Margaret Harrington, of Cambridge, Mass.

Dr. True Morrill Gould, a native of Newton, and son of Mr. Samuel and Mrs. Molly Gould. The family name has been in that town about one hundred years.

He passed his early years on the farm with the privileges of the district school, then at the high school, and later at the academy in Kingston. Choosing the medical profession, two years were spent under the instruction of Thomas Bassett, M.D., of Kingston, then one year under Prof. Edmund R. Peaslee, M.D., of Hanover. He attended a full course of lectures in the Medical Department of Dartmouth College, and graduated with the degree of M.D. in 1854; commenced practice here in 1855. His business has been extensive and embraced surgery, not only in this but in other towns. He is a member of the New Hampshire Medical Society and the American Medical Association. He has held various offices. His wife was Miss Mary A. True, of this town, daughter of Mr. Elias and Mrs. Mercy True.

Dr. David Brown, born here, was a botanic physician in Hingham, Mass., and died there suddenly, Feb. 6, 1865, aged seventy-one.

Dr. John D. Lovering, born here, son of Gilman Lovering, studied the medical profession with J. R. Akers, M.D., of Bethel, Ill., graduated at the Medical Department of Union University, at Albany, N. Y., commenced practice in Essex, Mass., in 1861.

Dr. John P. Brown, born here, finished his medical studies in March, 1865, and at once became assistant physician in the asylum for the insane in Concord, N. H.

Dr. Moses L. Magoon, born here, dentist, in Maine.

Dr. Phineas H. Wheeler, a native of Barnstead, came here in 1867, practiced a few months, and then went to Alton.

CHAPTER LXVI.

RAYMOND.—(Continued.)

ECCLESIASTICAL AND EDUCATIONAL.

The Congregational Church—Free-Will Baptist Church—Methodist Episcopal Church—Universalists—Schools.

Congregational Church.—It was customary in the early history of the towns in New England, as soon as convenient, to establish meetings for the worship of God. The first account here is in 1764, the year of the incorporation. At a town-meeting held June 11th, voted to raise three hundred pounds, old tenor, for the support of the gospel. This was but a small sum in dollars. In 1765 voted to raise the same sum. A few who had come into town from Chester (the part now Auburn) belonged to the Presbyterian Church. They objected to paying a ministerial tax here, and it was voted that they "be eased of their rates." That year the first minister of whom mention is made came. His name was Gilman. Many did not like him, and at a town-meeting held March 3, 1766, voted that if Mr. Gilman preached he should not be paid by the town.

In 1767, Samuel Webster was paid six pounds for preaching, Solomon Moore six, Tristram Gilman seven pounds four shillings. In 1768, Mr. Gilman and Jonathan Searle preached.

The meetings in these years were held at Lieut. Benjamin Bean's tavern, the old house now standing opposite the late John Bean house. The town voted to pay him three pounds for the use of his house up to March, 1769, and seventeen shillings for dinners for the ministers.

In 1770 voted to raise twenty pounds for preaching. Of this Mr. Searle received ten pounds sixteen shillings, and ten shillings were paid to Lieut. Bean for the use of his house.

In 1771 the meetings were held a part of the time at David Bachelord's, west of York's Corner. The divided state of the people as to the location of a meeting-house for some half a dozen years, and then the war of the Revolution for eight years, tended to prevent the raising of much money for preaching.

In 1785, two years after the war, a meeting-house was built, and was so far completed that meetings could be held in it. The house stood in an immense woodland, with but few openings or cleared places for considerable distance around.

At the dedication of the meeting-house Rev. Josiah Stearns, of Epping, preached from a text singularly appropriate. It was from Psalm cxxii. 6, "Lo, we heard of it at Ephrata; we found it in the fields of the wood."

The location of the house was not liked by some, and not far from the time some waggish person posted up an advertisement headed "Fond," and then went on to describe "a stray meeting-house found in the woods."

In 1787 voted fifteen pounds for preaching; also that if any who did not wish to pay the minister tax enter their names with the town clerk within ten days they be not taxed. Also that the minister tax may be paid in pine boards, corn, or grain. October 15th, voted to give Mr. Stephen Williams a call to settle in the ministry. He did not accept. In 1790, voted to give Mr. Thomas Moore a call on terms similar to the above. He did not accept.

No church had as yet been formed. The organization took place in 1791. The original members were twenty-one, as follows:

John Bachelord, Robert Page, Stephen Prescott, Matthias Haines, Daniel Lane, David Lane, Benjamin Cram, Ebenezer Prescott, Ebenezer Cram, Samuel Nay, Samuel Nay, Jr., Sarah Page, Phebe Prescott, Mary Nay, Mary Cram, Sarah Haines, Abigail Lane, Hannah Lane, Mary Tilton, Abigail Bachelord. Very soon after Jonathan Swain and Mary Swain united by letter.

Some three or four years passed with occasional supplies of preaching, and then Rev. Nehemiah Ordway moved into town, and was a stated supply till 1797, when the matter of moving the meeting-house was agitated. A strong party wished it moved to what is now the village. Mr. Ordway, in one sermon, opposed the removal. But some thought that was not preaching the gospel. Not long after he closed his supply here.

Those for the removal were in a small majority in 1797, at three different town-meetings, and in the autumn of that year it was removed.

The house was soon put in order for worship, but there was much division of feeling in the church that had grown out of the contention concerning the removal. Not long after Rev. James Thurston, of Exeter, was obtained for a supply in the years 1798 and 1799.

"The Lord rideth upon the whirlwind and directeth the storm," and at the proper time brings all to calmness and repose. The discordant elements finally became harmonized, and in 1800, Mr. Jonathan Stickney, of Newburyport, was ordained pastor.

Mr. Stickney continued seven years, and in June, 1807, was dismissed.

Ten years passed before another pastor was settled. In 1808 the town voted that the Free Baptists occupy the meeting house half of the time.

The church had some preaching by neighboring ministers till 1813, after which a missionary society in Massachusetts furnished supplies about half of the time till 1817. Revs. Homer, Cressy, and Wright were here most. About ninety united with the church. Rev. S. Bailey was installed pastor Oct. 1, 1817. He was dismissed in 1822.

Revs. James Thurston, M. Dutton, and others supplied till the next pastorate.

Rev. Seth Farnsworth, a native of Charleston, N. H., was ordained Nov. 3, 1824. Mr. Farnsworth was dismissed in 1834.

A new meeting-house was erected in 1834, and dedicated November 12th, and the next day Rev. Andrew H. Reed was installed pastor. Mr. Reed was dismissed Oct. 26, 1836.

Rev. Anson Sheldon succeeded. He was a native of Sumners, Conn. He was installed June 28, 1837, and dismissed Oct. 15, 1839.

Rev. John C. Page, a native of Sandwich, was ordained Oct. 6, 1841, and dismissed May 7, 1851.

Rev. David Burt, a native of Monson, Mass., was ordained Nov. 5, 1851, and dismissed Feb. 22, 1855.

Rev. Dana B. Bradford, a native of Hillsborough, was installed Dec. 5, 1855. Mr. Bradford was dismissed in the summer of 1858.

Rev. George W. Sargent, a native of Dover, was ordained Dec. 21, 1859, and was dismissed early in 1865. Then nearly two years passed without a pastor, but there was a supply by different ministers.

Dec. 6, 1866, Edward D. Chapman, a native of East Haddam, Conn., was installed.

The ministry of Mr. Chapman here commenced some months before his installation, and at the end of three years was terminated by his death, Sept. 17, 1869.

The next pastor was Rev. Samuel Bowker, installed Nov. 30, 1870. This pastorate continued two and a half years, and terminated May, 1873.

In August following, Rev. D. B. Dodge began, and supplied six months. In June, 1874, Rev. W. A.

Patten became acting pastor. The present pastor is Rev. E. O. Dyer.

The deacons have been Ebenezer Prescott, Ebenezer Cram, Samuel Nay, Daniel Norris, Thomas Wason, Daniel Tilton, John Dearborn, Daniel N. Lane, Horace Gordon, Jonathan F. Page, Hayden Higley, and W. S. Abbott.

Fanny McClure, who died in 1814, left a legacy of two hundred dollars to the church; Joseph Richardson, who died in 1852, left five hundred dollars, the income to help sustain singing; Mary Patten, who died in 1853, left one hundred dollars; Hon. Joseph Blake died in 1864, and left five hundred dollars; Martha McClure died in 1870, and left one thousand dollars; Ezekiel Lane died in 1873, and left a bequest, but it is not known as yet what the amount will be.

Free-Will Baptist Church.—The origin of this church was a religious interest near the mountains in Nottingham, under the preaching of Rev. Jeremiah Ballard, of Unity, in 1799. The interest extended into Candia, Deerfield, and Raymond, and in 1802 a church was formed, the members living in the four towns. Mr. Ballard preached in this town a few times, once at a tavern and once in a grove. In 1805, Rev. H. D. Buzzell, of Gilmanton, preached here some, and Joseph Dudley was appointed ruling elder. His duty was to lead in meetings when there was no minister, and to preside in meetings of business. In 1810, Rev. H. D. Buzzell was here part of the time; also Rev. Moses Bean, of Candia.

In 1818 the members in Candia and Raymond were constituted a church by themselves. In 1823 there was a revival. The ministers who officiated here were Revs. M. Bean and David Harriman, both of Candia.

In 1824, Candia and Raymond divided, and the members in this town became a separate church. The same year Rev. J. B. Prescott, of Monmouth, Me., preached here several months.

In 1826, Rev. Arthur Caverno, of Epsom, preached a portion of the time. The same year a house of worship was erected and dedicated. In the autumn of 1831, T. Robie was ordained. In 1832 there was a revival, in which Rev. John Knowles labored. In 1834, Rev. C. Small lived in town six months, and preached.

In the autumn of 1837, Rev. Hiram Holmes took charge of the church, and remained until 1839.

Not far from this an unhappy division on church polity took place. The result was the forming of a second church of the same name on the ground where there were not members enough for one efficient church. The second church occupied the meeting-house half of the Sabbaths, having, in 1842, a licensed preacher, H. B. Broek, a native of Barington. In 1843 it had J. O. D. Bartlett, a native of Centre Harbor, who was ordained here that year.

This church numbered forty, but it fell into division, waned, and lost its visibility. The members who desired it were received back into the other church.

Rev. Asa Merrill, of Stratham, supplied some for years, till 1844. In the spring of 1845, Rev. B. H. McMurphey, a native of Alexandria, came and took charge. He continued two years, leaving in 1847.

Rev. Tobias Foss, a native of Stratford, succeeded in 1848, and continued five and a half years. Mr. Foss left in September, 1853. Rev. Joseph Fullonton succeeded as stated supply, and continued nineteen years. In 1858 a good revival brought an addition of twelve. Rev. John Fullonton, T. Robie, and Rev. Mr. Fullenten became ministers while members of this church, and, later, J. Woodbury Scribner.

The deacons have been Jeremiah Fullonton, Amos Bachelord, Jeremiah Fullonton, Jr., Jefferson Healey, Clerks, Jeremiah Fullonton, Rev. H. Holmes, Jeremiah Fullonton, Jr., M. V. B. Gile.

Rev. Joseph Fullonton attended an academy part of three terms. Engaged in teaching; poorly qualified; studied and taught, taught and studied, carrying books on the road, into fields, and to bed to study. Talked with the learned for improvement, studied the trees, plants, flowers, winds, clouds, and stars. Continued thus, teaching and studying much, for twenty-five years. Engaged in the ministry; no chance for theological training in the denomination of our choice then, so studied as best he could. Ordained at Danville, Feb. 16, 1837; continued there six years, then held a pastorate in Acton, Me., four years. Lost all voice for public speaking, and came here in January, 1847; now deceased.

Methodist Episcopal Church.—Persons of Methodist sentiments have lived in town for more than fifty years. The greater part of these lived in the Branch District, and attended meetings in Poplin and Chester. Mr. J. F. Lane attended at Epping.

In 1840, Rev. A. Plumer, of Poplin, held meetings here, with some good results. Rev. L. H. Gordon moved into town in 1841, and supplied for several months. The interest declined, and Mr. Gordon moved to Epping. Rev. William French, of Sandown, supplied some, but after a while the meetings were given up.

The present church began in 1848. At the town meeting in March it was voted to give all the right and title the town had to the meeting-house as a house of worship to the Methodist Society the ensuing year. Meetings commenced early in the summer. The Conference appointed a Mr. Hoyt, but after a short time he left, and the presiding elder obtained, for the remainder of the year, Rev. J. S. Loveland, a native of Stoddard. Near the close of the year it was decided to erect a house of worship. November 7th, the town voted to sell the society land for the purpose where the pound then stood. Soon there was much contention as to that vote, and on the 22d of January the action was reconsidered.

In 1849 the minister was Rev. James Adams, a native of Williamstown, Vt. The house of worship was built this year and dedicated in the autumn.

In 1850 and 1851 the preacher was Rev. J. C. Emerson, a native of Canterbury; in 1852, Rev. G. W. T. Rogers, a native of Holderness; in 1853 and 1854, Rev. Elijah Mason, a native of Cavendish, Vt.; in 1855 and 1856, Rev. Simon P. Heath; in 1857, Rev. Charles Young; in 1858 and 1859, Rev. L. L. Eastman, a native of Canaan, had charge; in 1860, Rev. N. L. Chase; in 1861 and 1862, Rev. N. M. Bailey; in 1863 and 1864, Rev. James Adams, the second time; in 1865, Rev. R. J. Donaldson; in 1866, 1867, and 1868, Rev. G. W. Ruland; in 1869 and 1870, Rev. Eleazer Smith; in 1871, Rev. Josiah Higgins; in 1872, Rev. William Hewes; in 1873, meetings suspended; and in 1874, Rev. William H. H. Collins. A. B. Carter, present pastor.

Rev. Rufus Tilton, for more than thirty years a Methodist preacher, was a native of this town.

Rev. J. S. Loveland, an early pastor of this church, withdrew from the denomination, and has since been actively connected with the Spiritualists in Boston and vicinity.

Rev. Elijah Mason, a former pastor, died in Rockport, Mass., Feb. 15, 1863, aged fifty-four.

Rev. G. W. T. Rogers, also pastor, died in Salem, N. H., in 1868.

Rev. Abraham Folsom, a native of Tunbridge, Vt., moved here in 1863. He has since preached in Epping, Auburn, Rye, Chester, Fremont, and Salem. He died March, 1872.

Rev. Mathew Newhall, a native of Claremont, took up his residence here in 1863. For some years he has been superannuated. In 1873 he went to Greenland.

John D. Folsom, a native of the town, prepared for college, is a Methodist; has preached considerably, a portion of 1868 in Exeter, and then went to the Drew Theological Seminary, in New Jersey, where he graduated.

Universalist Society.—From an early period there have been some Universalists in town. In 1827, Rev. T. G. Farnsworth, of Haverhill, Mass., preached a Sabbath in the Baptist Church. In 1854 the Rockingham County Association of Universalists was held here. The services were in the Methodist Church, and continued two days. There have been occasional supplies of preaching besides, but at long intervals.

In 1857 a society was formed with corporate powers. Thirty in a few days became members, but not quite all now reside in town. The clerks have been William Titcomb and George S. Robie.

Early Schools.—In 1757, seven years before this town was incorporated, it was voted by the town-meeting of Chester that Freetown (now Raymond) and Charmingfare (now Candia) have school money according to their tax, provided it be expended for schools. The result of this cannot be known.

The next record on the subject was in 1765, the year after the incorporation. On a proposition to see if the town would build some school-houses, it was negatively.

RESIDENCE OF BENJAMIN FORD, Esq.,
HAYWARD, ROCKINGHAM CO., N. H.

In 1767, voted to raise sixty pounds for schooling and other charges. The schools were established, one of which seems to have been in the Branch neighborhood, and was taught by Daniel True; another was in the section of the Dudleys, taught, or "kept," as then called, by Daniel Stillman ten weeks; and the third was probably in the east or northeast, in charge of Abel Morse. Mr. M. was from Chester, an experienced teacher, and was employed here much of the time in following years.

In 1768, Jona. Palmer is mentioned as a teacher here besides Abel Morse. In 1769, Widow Judkins was paid twelve shillings lawful money for teaching, and fifteen shillings were paid to Ithiel Gordon for going after her, boarding her, and carrying her home again. The term was four weeks in length. All worked cheap then. Francis Hodgkins about the same time taught four months, probably not all in the same neighborhood. His wages were about six dollars per month. This year five shillings were paid to Clement Moody, who lived near where John Brown, Esq., now does, for use of a room in his house for a school.

1770, voted to build four school-houses, one in each quarter of the town, with John Dudley, James Moore, Ezekiel Lane, and Robert Page, building committee.

After the houses were built the principal teachers for years were A. Morse, Dr. Hodgkins, Joseph Flagg, William Dawling, James Farahan, Peter Coffin, Mr. Melville, Amelia Towle, and Abigail Welch. In those years there were accounts paid of which the following may serve as a specimen: "1771, Paid Benj. Cram, for dinner in Master Hodgkins 10 weeks, 16 shillings." This would be eight cents of present currency for each dinner.

CIVIL AND MILITARY.

Town Clerks—Representatives—Senators—Deputy Sheriffs, etc.—Postmasters—Military Record—College Graduates—Population.

Town Clerks.—The following is a list of town clerks from 1764 to 1883:

Ezekiel Smith, 1764-65.	J. S. Barnes, 1848-51.
Benjamin Whittier, 1766.	W. B. Worthley, 1852-53.
Jonathan Swain, 1767-81, 1783-90, 1801-8.	P. Y. Frye, 1854.
F. Hodgkins, 1782.	H. D. Page, 1855.
Levi Swain, 1799-1803, 1805-9.	L. S. Brown, 1856-59.
John Pillsbury, 1804.	T. M. Gould, 1860-64, 1869-70.
Phineas Trull, 1810-12.	S. Poor, Jr., 1865.
Thomas Dearborn, 1813-31.	Thos. M. Healey, 1867-68.
John Brown, Jr., 1832-42.	Olney T. Brown, 1871-72.
J. R. Brown, 1843-46.	Charles Poor, 1873-80.
David Pecker, 1847.	D. C. Healey, 1881.

Representatives from 1776 to 1883.—Representatives were chosen to the Provincial Assembly. The first chosen here was in 1776. John Dudley was elected and re-elected every year after, when there was an election, till 1784. The war had then closed.

After the State Constitution went into effect the town was classed with Poplin, now Fremont. While thus classed the representative in each alternate year was from this town. But we judge from the records that in several years none were chosen. The following is the list as we find them recorded:

1786, Samuel Nay	1800-4, Moses Dudley
1796, Ebenezer Osgood.	1806-10, Sherman Blake

Being classed as then dissolved and the town allowed to send by itself

1811-12, Phineas Gilman.	1799-51, William P. Trafts.
1813-15, Moses Dudley.	1852, Edmund Whittier.
1816-17, Phineas Gilman.	1853-54, Josiah S. James.
1818-19, Joseph Fogg.	1855, Joseph Blake.
1820-24, Thomas Dearborn.	1856, Edmund Whittier.
1824, Joseph Fogg.	1857-58, William P. Worthley.
1825-26, John Folsom.	1859, J. Folsom Lane.
1827-29, Moses Dudley.	1860, Total not to send.
1830-31, Joseph Dudley.	1861-62, J. Tucker Dudley.
1832-33, Gilman Dudley.	1864, J. Folsom Lane.
1834-35, John Scribner.	1864-65, Lyman Prescott.
1836, Levi Brown, Jr.	1866-67, Abraham B. Smith.
1837-38, Benjamin Poor.	1868-69, David Griffin.
1839-40, Samuel Poor.	1870-71, Granville A. Gilmore.
1841, Jonathan S. Brown, died this year.	1872-73, John Healey.
1842-43, Benjamin B. Gilman.	1874-76, J. Wilson Fisk.
1844-45, David Pecker.	1876-78, F. G. Bean.
1846-47, Levi Moulton.	1878-80, G. M. Moulton.
1848-49, John Brown.	1880-82, A. G. Whittier.

SENATORS, DISTRICT No. 2.

1785, John Dudley, elected, but declined.
1859-60, Joseph Blake.

ROAD COMMISSIONER, ROCKINGHAM COUNTY.

1843-44, Benjamin Poor.

SCHOOL COMMISSIONER, ROCKINGHAM COUNTY.

1860-61, Wilson S. Abbott.

CORONERS.

Stephen Osgood, 1821; Dr. T. M. Gould, 1863.

DEPUTY SHERIFFS.

S. D. Tilton, appointed 1869. Warren True, 1872.
J. S. James, 1871. A. B. Smith, 1874.

DELEGATES TO CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION.

1776, John Dudley. 1782, Jonathan Swain.
1781, John Dudley. 1791, Jonathan Swain.
1850, Daniel Scribner.

POSTMASTERS.

Joseph Blake, appointed 1815. T. M. Gould, 1867.
William P. Trafts, 1853. John Decker, 1869; died Sept. 1872
William B. Blake, 1861. T. M. Gould, 1872.

NORTH POST-OFFICE.

John R. Brown, 1833; office discontinued, 1837.

SOUTH POST-OFFICE.

Jacob Elliott, 1850; office discontinued, 1856.

NATIVES OF RAYMOND REPRESENTATIVES OF OTHER TOWNS.

John Dudley, son of Moses Dudley, Esq. He has been representative in the Maine Legislature eight years.
David Pillsbury, Chester, 1842 and 1844.
Ira Osgood, London, 1835 and 1836.
Gilman Richardson, Candia, 1838 and 1839.
Samuel Dudley, Candia, 1851 and 1852.
Rufus Tilton, Sandwich, 1855.
John Prescott, Jr., Candia, 1865 and 1866.

Henry Moore, Chester, 1822.
Owen Raines, Pittsfield, 1864 and 1865.
Alvin D. Dudley, Candia, 1865 and 1866.
John Fullerton, New Hampton, 1868.
Timothy O. Norris, Troy, Iowa, 1870.
J. Rowland Bachelder, Candia, 1874 and 1874.

Besides the above, Nathaniel Dudley, son of Judge Dudley, may be named. He was born in Exeter, but lived here some years. He went to Maine and was Representative of his town several years.

Joseph Richardson has lived here much. He was born in Candia, and was Representative of that town in 1840.

KILLED OR DIED IN WAR OF THE REVOLUTION.

1776—John Wells, Jr., Nathan Lane, James Clay, John Prescott.
1777—Josiah Richardson, Jona. Fullerton (killed), Ezekiel Lane (killed).

1778.—Schemiah Leavitt, Moses Sanborn.
1782—Joseph Tucker, Thomas Dolloff.
1783.—William P. Prescott, John Leavitt, John Todd.

Some of this list of soldiers in the war of the Revolution were out but a short time. Moses Dudley, Esq., about the year 1822, recorded that twenty-four from this town were enrolled in the army of that struggle, but others of the militia served for a time; some, too, are names not known here. Probably they lived in other places, but went for this town.

We have not learned that there was much disloyalty in this place during the Revolutionary struggle. The following shows, however, one case:

"State of New Hampshire in Committee of Safety, Exeter, June 9, 1781. To the Sheriff of the County of Rockingham, his under Sheriff or Deputy, or the Constable of Raymond in said County. GREETING.

"You are hereby required forthwith to apprehend John Wilbren Smith, of said Raymond, Yeoman, who, by information, has appeared inimical to the United States, having uttered seditious expressions tending to discourage the people and otherwise to injure the common cause, and bring him before the General Court, if sitting, or in their recess before the Committee of Safety, that he may be examined touching the premises.

"M. WEAVER, President."

We have not found any record of the results of the case.

SECOND WAR WITH ENGLAND, 1812-15.

Josiah Davis,	David Dolloff,
Amos Davis,	Amos Davis, killed,
Theophilus Stevens,	Theophilus Stevens, died.

During the same war the following were for a time at the fort near Portsmouth. The most part were there in the autumn of 1814. There was a draft for soldiers. It was called "taching." The true word was the military one detach. Some went as volunteers, some detached, and some as substitutes. A British fleet lay off the harbor, and it was designed to give the vessels and soldiers a warm reception if they came in.

and if one had a brother in the service, a mother, or motherless children to provide for there was an exemption. The examining surgeon also would excuse for slight disability. And the result was scarcely one, if indeed one, went into the service.

The draft was at Portsmouth by Capt. J. S. Godfrey, provost-marshal. One hundred and three names, thirty-one drawn:

Melvin B. Moore, Francis L. Heath, Josiah Locke, George M. Moulton, John F. Healey, Thomas E. Bachelder, Moses E. Moore, Joseph W. Fisk, Gilman Gile, William L. Carlton, Joseph A. Nay, James M. Dearborn, George S. Poon, Woodbury D. Titcomb, Daniel B. Hill, Hiram E. Richardson, John F. Lane, Daniel B. Bagley, Fred McClure, Daniel W. Osgood, Eljah Morrison, Rufus A. Tilton, John J. Littlefield, James H. Miller, David A. Bean, Moses B. Currier, Edward H. Roberts, Joseph V. B. Dearborn, Henry H. Blake, Joseph R. Bachelder, and George B. Dudley.

Some later, there was another draft to fill quota, and the following were drawn: John Wallace, Otis H. Whittier.

The following were put in substitutes, many of them at least to avoid a draft:

J. Tucker Dudley, J. Frank Healey, George S. Robie, Hiram G. McClure, Gilman H. Tucker, Albert D. Hardy, Green C. Fowler, Anton W. Brown, True M. Gould, George I. Hardy, Charles W. Lane, Samuel S. Locke, Lyman Prescott, William B. Blake, James F. Hackett, Irvyn Folsom, John W. Robie, Olney T. Brown, Moses B. Currier, John C. Whitcomb, Elihu G. Brown, George E. Bean, J. Plumer Brown.

Bounties, Etc.—The following votes were passed at the dates given:

1861, September 9th, voted to pay families of volunteers.
1862, August 2d, voted two hundred dollars bounty to all who have enlisted since August 1st, and to those who may enlist to fill the quota for six hundred thousand men.

1863, August 29th, voted a bounty of two hundred and ninety-nine dollars to drafted soldiers and substitutes.

1863, September 4th, voted three hundred dollars to drafted men and substitutes.

1864, May 31st, voted two hundred dollars to all who enlist. Voted that the selectmen hire men to enlist, paying not over three hundred dollars per man.

1864, June 25th, voted that the selectmen pay three hundred dollars to hire substitutes for drafted men.

1864, December 29th, voted that one hundred dollars be added to the State bounty for volunteers for one year, and two hundred dollars for two years.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH.

BENJAMIN POOR.

The Poor family originated in Normandy, a province in the southwest part of France. Its people are agriculturists, industrious, energetic, frugal, truthful, and honest. They fear God, obey the laws, educate their children. Here, previous to the invasion of England by William the Norman, in 1066, resided those from whom those bearing the name of Poor or Poore are descended. Roger, a parish priest, a gaunt, thin man, assumed the name of Poor, entered the service of Prince Henry, third and youngest son of William the Conqueror, went to England, became private secretary to the prince, and when, in 1100, Henry was seated on the throne of England, he became his chaplain, and was appointed Bishop of Sarum, and for years held high religious position, and had great influence at court. A nephew of Bishop Roger Poor, Richard Poor, located in Gloucester, and brought up three sons,—Herbert, Richard, Philip. The two first of these were educated for the church, both became bishops, and were as prominent in political as in church history. From the youngest son, Philip, all American Poores are descended (according to Ben Perley Poore). Philip Poor's descendants were landholders and agriculturists.

Daniel Poor, born in England, 1628, came to Andover, Mass., dying there in 1713. His son Daniel had a son Thomas. Thomas was the father of the celebrated Gen. Enoch Poor, of Revolutionary fame.

John Poore immigrated to Newbury, Mass., in 1635, from Wiltshire, England, and his descendants are numerous. He had fourteen children, and died in 1684. Samuel<sup>1</sup> Poore, his brother, died in 1683, leaving nine children. His son Samuel<sup>2</sup>, married Rachel Bailey, had children,—Rebecca<sup>1</sup>, Samuel<sup>3</sup>, Judith, Sarah, Eleanor, and Rebecca<sup>2</sup>. Ebenezer, son of Samuel<sup>2</sup>, was born in Newbury, Mass., March 2, 1752, married Sarah Brown, daughter of Capt. Nathan Brown, of Poplin, who was captain in the Revolutionary war (born Nov. 29, 1757, died Jan. 8, 1852). This Ebenezer was the first of the name in the town of Raymond, where he settled as a farmer, and died Feb. 16, 1819. His children were Mary (Mrs. John Prescott), Nathan, Sally (Mrs. E. Thatcher), Ebenezer, Rebecca (Mrs. Moses Stuart), Ruth (Mrs. Reuben Whittier), Benjamin, and Dennis.

Benjamin Poor, born Sept. 24, 1795, was seventh of the children of Ebenezer. He was early taught to work, and from the very limited financial circumstances of his father had very slight advantages for an education. While yet a youth, in June, 1812, he volunteered to go to Portsmouth as a United States soldier, became a fifer, and was in service there till the November following, when he was mustered out of service. For this he received his bounty lands and also a pension, and is one of the rapidly decreasing few who are "pensioners of the war of 1812." He became a farmer, and at his father's death assumed the responsibility and care. The industry, prudence, and energy of the young man were needed, for he was at the very foot of fortune's ladder, but step by step, slowly and surely, he laid the foundation of success broad and permanent. He has always been thorough in his labors, and has never failed to carry to successful completion whatever he undertook. He has never been aught but a farmer, but his success entitles him to be called one of the most substantial farmers of his town.

He married, Dec. 17, 1816, Alice, daughter of Lieut. William Moore, of Chester. Their children were Sarah J. (Mrs. Stephen Moar), Rufus (a promising young man called from earth in his twenty-sixth year), Melinda K., George S. Mrs. Poor died June 13, 1878, in her eightieth year. From a sketch written by one who knew her well we quote: "The accomplishments, graces, and many excellences she possessed made her a person of great worth, and a shining example in the world. As a wife she was all her husband could desire. He safely confided in her, and says whatever success he has had in life was largely owing to her help, wise counsel, and good direction. As a mother she was faithful, tender, and affectionate. She taught her children industry, honesty, and goodness. They now 'rise up and call her blessed.' For many years she was a member of the Congregational Church and earnest for its prosperity."

Of positive character, Mr. Poor has been a man of strong convictions, and ever earnest in advocacy of all measures he deemed right and just. He has always been an unwavering Democrat, and it is an evidence of the sterling character of the man and the place he occupies in the esteem of his townsmen when we state that in all cases when he has been a candidate for office a large number of his political opponents have given him their support and votes, and he never was defeated. For more than eighty years he has walked the streets of his native town, and during all those long years he has maintained a high and enviable position in the community. Never caring for office, he has been placed in various honorable positions of trust, and has served several years each as road commissioner, selectman, and member of New Hampshire Legislature from Raymond, where he was called to sit on nearly every prominent committee.

He has been justice of the peace and quorum since 1837, and has filled creditably and successfully every position intrusted to his care. He has always been a leading man in all matters tending to elevate, improve, or benefit his town, and is to-day, with mind unimpaired, and in possession of vigorous health, a representative of the best class of intelligent New England farmers, and by his business skill and care has now more than a competency of this world's goods, and all this in spite of the lack of education which he has often deplored. He has traveled in various States of the West, invested and dealt in Western real estate, locating many land warrants. He now owns about four hundred broad acres in his native town, on which he has designed and erected one of the finest residences in Raymond; has lived to see all the companions of his youth pass away, and himself the oldest person in town. He has administered on many estates to the satisfaction of all; has been a general business adviser to the community, and his judgment has universally been considered superior to others.

CHAPTER LXVIII.

RYE.

Geographical—Topographical—First Settlements—The First Grant—Names of Pioneers—The First Dead Indian Depredations—Witchcraft—"Breakfast Hill"—Incidents—Ecclesiastical History—Potions, etc.—Congregational Church—Methodist Episcopal Church—Christian Church.

THE town of Rye lies in the eastern part of the county, and is bounded as follows: on the north by Portsmouth; on the east by the Atlantic; on the south by North Hampton; and on the west by North Hampton, Greenland, and Portsmouth. The surface of the town is generally level and the soil fertile.

Early Settlements.—It is believed the first settlement of New Hampshire was made within the present limits of Rye, at a place now called Odiorn's Point, about 1625, and prior to the Mason settlement. Sandy Beach was the name to a certain part of Rye, now called Wallis' Sands and Foss' Beach. A bridge was very early built (probably a foot-bridge only) connecting Rye with Great Island, and which was washed away or went to decay about 1690. We have no account of another bridge being built, though it is probable there was, until about 1760. The money in part, if not all, being raised by a lottery, and a toll-rate established. But as it did not pay the proprietors it went into public use, and was probably the bridge there in the war of 1812. It has been said the first landing was made at Little Harbor, and that the great harbor of Piscataqua was discovered by the settlers by chasing a wild goose around Great Island.

In 1652 a grant was made to William Seavey of fifty acres of land, commencing by the south side of Mill Creek and running west to White Rock. The same land is now mostly owned by the Seaveys.

The name of the first settler was William Berry. Among those who came soon after were Seavey, Rand, Brackett, Wallis, Locke, and Jenness. For nearly one hundred years after the settlement of the town the inhabitants were but thinly scattered and most of them in low circumstances.

The first deed ever given of land included within the limits of the town of Rye was given by Jane Drake, widow of William Berry, in 1669, to William Seavy, Sr., of house, land, and marsh on south side of brook that runs between land then owned by William Seavy and Thomas Seavy. It appears that William Seavy paid for this land before the death of William Berry, but failed to get a deed of it. From this we infer that William Berry died suddenly, perhaps, like others of the early settlers, was killed by the Indians, and that he died about the year 1669, in which the deed was given. Of the first settlers of Sandy Beach who came over in 1631, Thomas Seavy appears to have lived until 1708. The manner of his death is uncertain. Francis Rand was killed Sept. 29, 1691, while his son was out fishing. Twenty-one were killed at the same time, among them another of the first settlers. Capt. Anthony Brackett and others were captured, including two young children of the Bracketts,—a boy, whom they recovered, and a girl, who was carried to Canada, and there married a Frenchman, and afterwards came back to claim her share in her father's property. One or more of the children killed at the time were dashed against a rock which stood in the road near Samuel M. Rand's. The tradition is that the stain of blood was to be seen for many years. The rock has since been removed to make a highway. Capt. Brackett's house was set on fire. Some of his sons were at work in the salt marsh, and having the guns, went over to the garrison-house at Saunders' Point, now Foss' Beach. Thomas Rand, the son of Francis, who was killed, when he came from fishing, being a courageous man, followed them over to Brackett's and fired at them, which frightened them away. Old Mrs. Rand, nearly blind, supposed to be the wife of Francis, was killed by the Indians while her husband had gone to mill. She was apprehensive of danger and begged him not to go, saying the Indians would kill her, but he made light of her fears, telling her there were no Indians this side of Lake Winnepesaukee. Great must have been his consternation to find on his return that her fears had been realized. This must have been very near the time that he was massacred. A little girl named Judkins, five years old, was captured in 1691, with her brother. Her brother was frozen to death when crossing Lake Winnepesaukee near Moultonborough. She was with them several years, and came near perishing with hunger. She lived to return, and afterwards married a Randall.

She died in Moultonborough. A child named Estler, surname not given, was taken from the cradle about this time by the Indians while its mother was away; her father bought her back with a keg of rum. She afterwards married a Waters, lived to a great age, became poor and deaf, and was supported by the town. Thomas Walford, another of the early settlers of Sandy Beach, who came over in 1631, was killed by Indians on the hill by John S. Remick's. Tradition says that after he was shot he crawled on his hands and knees to where Robinson Foss now lives. His wife was accused of witchcraft. There is still on record an account of the trial of "Goodwife Walford" at Portsmouth in 1658. The complainant, Susannah Trimmings, testified as follows: "As I was going home on Sunday night, I heard a rustling in the woods, which I supposed to be occasioned by swine, and presently there appeared a woman, whom I apprehended to be Goodwife Walford. She asked me to lend her a pound of cotton. I told her I had but two pounds in the house, and I would not spare any to my mother. She said I had better have done it, for I was going a great journey, but should never come there. She then left me and I was struck as with a clap of fire on the back; and she vanished towards the water-side, in my apprehension, in the shape of a cat. She had on her head a white linnen hood tied under her chin, and her waistcoat and petticoat were red, with an old gown, apron, and a black hat upon her head." Several other witnesses were examined, but the case was not then decided, and was probably dropped at the next term of the court. Mrs. Walford afterwards brought an action for slander against Robert Cutch for saying that she was a witch and he could prove her one. The verdict was in her favor,—five pounds and costs.

Another prominent person among the early settlers of the town of Rye was Capt. John Locke. He was a carpenter, the son of John Locke, of London, who married Christian French, July 26, 1624. He was born Sept. 16, 1627, and came from York-shire, England, in 1644. Tradition says that he first settled in Dover, where he had a tract of land, but this is probably incorrect, as the earliest records of Dover contain no evidence that he ever resided or had a right of land there. From thence in 1652 he is said to have removed to what is known as Fort Point in Newcastle. From Newcastle he removed to Sagamore Creek, where he resided until 1655, when he removed to Josselyn's Neck, afterwards called from him Locke's Neck, now known as Straw's Point, which was then a part of Hampton. Here, as it appears from the records of town of Hampton, "he sat down on common lands." It appears that the town of Hampton was indignant at his taking such liberties without so much as saying "by your leave," and May 24, 1666, a committee was chosen to pull up his fence, and March 12, 1667, to warn him to desist from improving the town's land, and to notify him that the town is displeased with his building there. Complaint was made against him as a trespasser, and he was warned to appear at the next meeting and give an account of himself. On the 8th of March, 1667, the town voted as follows: "Upon the motion of John Locke, who desireth to yield himself to ye town of Hampton as an inhabitant amongst us, being already settled upon Josselyn's Neck in Hampton bounds, the town hath accepted of ye said John Locke for an inhabitant accordingly." From all which we see that he was a man of firmness and not easily driven from his purpose. At the present time, when men are allowed to become citizens at will, the opposition of the town of Hampton to his settlement among them may not be easily comprehended. But the times were different. A settlement in its infancy would have been very much exposed to injury if no precautions had been taken in regard to receiving inhabitants. Mischievous and disorderly persons might have come in and harassed the settlers. This was foreseen and measures taken to prevent it. The power of admitting inhabitants and of granting them the privileges of freemen was strictly guarded. After the town was once organized, none were admitted from abroad without the permission of the freemen, so that their treatment of Locke was by no means exceptional, as will be seen from the following vote: "That no manner of person should come into the town as an inhabitant without the penalty of 20s. per week, unless he give satisfactory security to the town."

Capt. John Locke was an energetic, courageous man, very active against the Indians, and instrumental in defeating them in several of their attempts to destroy the inhabitants on the sea-coast, which excited their personal hostility; and they came from Canada, eight in number, with an expressed design, as appeared afterwards, to avenge themselves in his death. He was killed while reaping in his field, Aug. 26, 1696, at the age of seventy, though one account says seventy-eight. The first is probably more correct.

The Indian is often spoken of as cherishing a determined spirit of revenge, and we have come to look on him in this respect as differing materially from the white men. But human nature is essentially the same. The difference is owing to circumstances. We have an illustration of this thirsting for revenge in the conduct of Capt. Locke's grandson. Though not born until 1702, six years after the death of his grandfather, such was the hostile feeling excited within him by the knowledge of the circumstance that he killed an Indian in peaceful times, alleging that the Indians killed his grandfather, thus visiting the punishment on an innocent representative of the race. This murder was committed on the spot where Deacon Jonathan Locke now lives.

The first Jenness, according to tradition, appears to have been Francis, a baker, who came with two brothers from Rye, England, he alone settling here, and from him probably the town of Rye received its name. The Rev. Mr. Porter, in his Half-Century Sermon, says that the town from its first settlement received the name it now bears, which was given, it is supposed, by reason of some of its first inhabitants coming from the town of the same name in England. Francis Jenness, so far as it appears, was the only one that came from that town, and hence we conclude that the town received its name from him; it is believed that he came previous to 1660. One account states that he came with Anthony Bracket and Capt. John Locke, but this is a mistake, as the coming of the one is known to have preceded by several years the coming of the other. In 1675 he received a grant of the common lands by the sea from the town of Hampton. He lived near the present residence of Mr. Sheridan Jenness, and is said to have died in 1716, aged eighty-two. The name originally was Jennings. The first Philbrick who came to Rye was Joseph, about the year 1700, and settled near the house of Francis Jenness, in the south part of the town. He was the grandson of Thomas Philbrick, who came from Lincolnshire, England, with Sir Richard Salsenstall, and settled in Watertown in 1630, and removed to Hampton in 1645, and died in 1667, very aged. Joseph died Nov. 7, 1755, in his ninety-third year.

Joseph Brown also is said to have been one of the first settlers of the town of Rye, of which he was selectman in 1728. His grandfather, John Brown, was a baker, came from London, in England, in 1635, was one of the proprietors of Hampton in 1638, afterwards one of the largest landholders in the place.

The Indian massacre at Portsmouth Plains and Sagamore Creek was on the 26th of June, 1696. Fourteen were killed and six were wounded. Among the wounded was Mrs. Mary Brewster, wife of John Brewster, Jr., great-grandson of Elder William Brewster, who came over in the "Mayflower." She was scalped and deeply wounded by a tomahawk, and was taken up for dead. She afterwards recovered, and became the mother of four sons, and lived forty-eight years, dying Sept. 22, 1744, aged seventy-eight. Five dwelling-houses were burned and nine barns. The attack was made at early dawn, and as the people awoke from their slumbers they were greeted by the light of their burning barns. Capt. Shackford, of Portsmouth, rallied his military company and pursued them; their direction was through Long Swamp. In a course for Rye about four miles distant from the Plains, Capt. Shackford and his men discovered them with their plunder and captives; they were at breakfast, and had placed the four prisoners they had taken in a position to receive the first effect of a discharge of guns should they be suddenly surprised; they were on the declivity of a hill, near the boundary line between Greenland and Rye, which has been called Breakfast Hill from this circumstance. The company rushed upon the ground, rescued the prisoners and retook the plunder, but the enemy escaped and concealed themselves in the swamp till night; then in their canoes, which they had previously concealed in the bushes at Sandy Beach, they took their departure, and made their escape by going outside of the Isles of Shoals.

Another statement is as follows: At the time the Indians destroyed Portsmouth Plains by fire they landed on Josselyn's Neck, now Straw's Point, by night, and as Capt. John Locke was reading his Bible on Sabbath morning, looking up he observed their canoes concealed in the bushes and scuttled them, which compelled the Indians to retreat by land.

The town of Newcastle was incorporated in 1693. It embraced, in addition to its present limits, Great Island, and also that part of Rye extending from Little Harbor, now called Odiorne's Point, to Foss Beach.

The present town of Rye was originally taken from Portsmouth, Greenland, Hampton, and Newcastle, and was incorporated April 30, 1726.

Another account says 1718, but this is probably a mistake. At the time of its incorporation Jotham Odiorne and Samuel Bracket were appointed a committee to settle with the selectmen of the town of Newcastle. It was for many years after its formation into a society styled the Parish of Rye in Newcastle. Only since the commencement of the American Revolution has it exercised town privileges. Before that time it acted in conjunction with Newcastle in the choice of representatives and in other usual town business, but a separation from the town of Newcastle was agitated at an earlier period. March 1, 1758, as appears from the records, a town-meeting was warned, among other things, "to see whether the Parish will for to get off from going to the Great Island to choose Assembly men!" but no action appears to have been taken. The first meeting-house was erected in 1725, and the next year, July 10, 1726, a church was organized. Other matters pertaining to the history of the town in its religious and educational aspects are of course omitted.

The town has contributed more largely to the settlement of the interior of the State than any other according to its size. Epsom, Rochester, Barrington, Chester, and many others recognize many of their inhabitants as having been originally from this place, and the churches in a number of these towns were first formed in part by members removed from the Church of Christ here.

In 1753 scarlet fever extensively prevailed. Many children died, three or four in a family. 1761 the smallpox prevailed extensively.

Rye Harbor was dug out in 1792; voted May 7th. One hundred and thirty-three days' labor appear to have been given. In the Canada or French war fourteen persons lost their lives in the service of their country, and thirty-eight in the war of the Revolution by sea and land, most of them young men. Mr. Porter says twenty-eight; but this is a mistake, as thirty-eight names are recorded. Capt. Joseph Parsons raised his own company in the war of the Revolution.

Nearly all of them were from Rye. Ninety-five from this town served under him at different times, and at least four other commanders. How many privateersmen there were is not known. July 18, 1774, two deputies, Samuel Knowles and Samuel Jenness, were chosen to go to the convention at Exeter to choose delegates to a General Congress, and at the same time it was voted that the selectmen shall raise three pounds towards paying the delegates, and that the parish will defray the charges of the deputies.

The town was visited with great sickness and mortality in 1803. More than two hundred and twenty persons were seized with diseases of various kinds. Thirty-five died. In 1816 the spotted fever prevailed. The disease was so infectious and the mortality so great as seriously to alarm the inhabitants. The burials were made by night. In the last war with Great Britain, March 18, 1813, an alarm list company of fifty-five officers and privates was formed in this town, of which Jonathan Wedgwood was chosen captain. Ninety-two from the town of Rye were engaged in this war, besides the alarm company. Eleven cavalry served under Capt. James Colman, and the others in two companies of infantry, under Cpts. Ephraim Philbrick and Samuel P. Berry. Sixteen served as privateersmen; four were captured, two lost. Three—Robert Robinson, Richard R. Locke, and Nathaniel G. Lear—were put in Dartmouth prison. Dr. Joseph Parsons served as surgeon's mate on the ship "Orlando." Forty-eight applied for bounty land, under the act of March 3, 1855.

As early as 1834, as appears from the records, the town committed itself by the following vote in favor of temperance: "Voted, that the selectmen shall not grant license to any person to retail ardent spirit in this town the present year." And March 8, 1836, it was further voted, "that no cigars or pipes shall be smoked in or about the meeting-house or school-houses on the Sabbath, under the penalty of one dollar fine for each and every offence, to be collected by a complaint before a Justice of the Peace by the sexton, Selectmen, or tithingmen."

Educational.<sup>1</sup>—It is not probable that there was any organized school system until some time after the incorporation of the town in 1726, although what is known as the "moving school" is referred to soon after the parish was severed from Newcastle. The "moving school" was an institution peculiar to the early settlements, and was kept at private houses in different neighborhoods, so as to accommodate the children of as many families as circumstances would permit. The family that "entertained" the moving school of course boarded the schoolmaster, who was in those days considered quite a dignitary, second in importance only to the minister and the justice of the peace.

Previous to any organized effort to establish public schools, the smaller children were taught by village dames, which sounds large at first, but which, being interpreted, is generally acknowledged, I believe, to have been used as a genteel expression for "old maids."

Those who desired to fit for college were generally taken in hand by the minister and prepared as well as their time and talents would allow. A few scattered academies afforded opportunities for those who possessed the means to acquire a fair education, but the mass of the people had to be contented with the facilities offered by the "moving schools."

Everything relating to our early school history is left in a very fragmentary and disjointed condition. The searcher after facts finds but few to gather, and those only recorded at irregular intervals.

While the town records are very complete upon the important subject of ringing the bell, and while the town clerks have been commendably faithful in recording the names of all the great men who have filled the positions of "hog-reeve" and "fence-viewer," both leave us in blissful ignorance upon the vital subject of education. The earliest date that I have been able to find upon the regular town records concerning school matters is March 23, 1729, when it was "Voted at said meeting that the Selectmen should be empowered to hire a schoolmaster and move him several times, as they see cause for the conveniency of the children's going to school."

In 1731 it was "Voted that the selectmen be empowered to hire a schoolmaster one-half of the year."

In June, 1737, there was an article in the warrant "to see what you will do concerning a school," but as there is no action recorded, it is not probable that there was any school that year.

In 1739, "Voted that there should be a moving school, and that every party that hath the benefit of the school shall provide a house to keep school in, and that the moving school shall be at the discretion of the Selectmen of the Parish."

From 1739 to 1751 regular school appropriations were made, and in the latter year the question of a new school-house was agitated, and was a "lively" issue at many subsequent town-meetings. In 1751 the people were invited "to see if they will do anything concerning building a school-house in the Parish," and in 1752, to see if they will vote to build two school-houses. It will be observed that the town is spoken of as the parish for many years after its incorporation, and were there nothing but the records of the town clerks to guide us, we should infer that Rye continued to be a parish of Newcastle long after it is known to have been separate.

In 1756 there were local dissensions and jealousies, and a first-class school row all over town. It finally culminated in a proposition "to see if the parish will vote the school money shall be divided, and let each party hire a schoolmaster according to their liking," and in 1757, "To see if the parish will settle the school in two places or settle the school at the Centre." The voting at the meeting was slightly contradictory, as will be seen by the following record:

1st. Voted that the school should be kept in the centre of the parish.

2d. Voted that the school be kept one-half of the year to the eastward of the meeting-house.

3d. Voted that the school be kept in two places above the meeting-house.

Such voting as that sets at defiance the fundamental law of physics,—that two bodies cannot occupy the same space at the same time. How the difficulty was finally adjusted does not appear, but in March 23, 1761, it was "voted that the school should be one-half above and the other half below the meeting-house."

In 1764 some unexpected fit of liberality seized upon somebody, for there was an article in the warrant "to see if they will buy a school-house and lot with a house on it, or build a house for a schoolmaster." The disease didn't spread, however, and, of course, the schoolmaster's house wasn't built. It is certain, however, that there were two school-houses built in town some time between 1764 and 1784, for in the latter year there was an article in the warrant "to see if the Parish will build a school-house or repair the old ones," and at a subsequent meeting the same year it was "voted that the selectmen repair the school-houses and put them in order." This proves that there were then at least two houses, and that they had built and knocked into a condition to need repairs since 1764. The school boys of those days were, in common parlance, a pretty tough set, for in two years from that time it was found necessary to build anew again, the repairs of 1784 being rather short-lived.

In 1786 it was "voted there shall be a new school-house built where the old one now stands between Mr. Johnson's and Mr. Nathan Knowles." The cost was £14 9s. 6d.

It was but partially finished, however, for in January, 1789, we find an article in the warrant "to see what the town will do to finish the school-house by N. Knowles;" but as the school-house fever had somewhat subsided, no action was taken upon the matter.

In April of the year it was voted "that there be winder sheters at the south school-house by N. Knowles." The recording of the vote indicates that a schoolmaster was quite as much needed as "winder sheters."

In 1791, "Voted to build a school-house at the east end of the Parish." Cost, £34 18s. 7d.

In 1796, "Voted the town shall be divided into 2 equal parts for to hire schools for each District."

In 1797, "Voted the Selectmen shall keep 18 months school, the school to begin the 1st of May at both school-houses, and keep on five months, and shall begin the middle of November, and keep on four months." After this there are no recorded votes worthy of special mention until 1816, when it was "voted that no scholar below the meeting-house shall go to the upper school, and none above the meeting-house shall go to the lower school."

In 1826 two brick school-houses were built in what are now the South and West Districts, and in 1827 two more were built in the Centre and East Districts, at an average cost of some $400 or $500 each. In 1827 the town was divided into two districts, each containing two school-houses. In 1833 the selectmen divided the town into four districts. In 1845 the town was redistricted, and the boundary lines defined. In 1854 it was "voted that the town convey by deed or otherwise to each school district the school-houses located in the same for their specific use," since which time every district has been entirely independent of the town in regard to the management of its local affairs. Within three years a new school-house has been built in the West District at a cost of nearly $2000, and the South and East have been repaired at an aggregate cost of $1100; they are all in good order now, and are a credit to the intelligence and liberality of our citizens.

The amount of money appropriated for school purposes in 1741 was £20; in 1744, £25; 1749, £60; 1792, £92; 1795, $177; 1797, $378; and in 1805, $467, which is the largest amount previous to 1825. From that year the amount gradually increased to $600, $700, $800, $900, and finally in 1870 to $1200, the present appropriation. Unlike most other towns in the State, the money is equally divided between the four districts, and thus every scholar in town is placed upon exactly the same footing in regard to the privileges of our schools.

Up to the time of redistricting the town the selectmen retained supreme control of all school matters, and hired the teachers when the people did not choose them in open town-meeting, which it appears they did in our early history. Among the incidental expenses of the schools, the bills for wood were notably large, the old-fashioned fireplaces requiring a large amount in cold weather. The annual expense was from $25 to $43, and that for only two school-houses, and when wood was very cheap. Among other "incidentals" was the regular charge for "going after teachers," from which it is inferred that the "applications" for a situation as teacher were not as numerous as at present. The usual expense for "going after teachers" was about $2, but in 1800 the selectmen had a bill of $6.25 for hiring a school-mistress. Inasmuch as this item was about three times the usual amount, it must have been that the year 1800 was not a good year for "school-marms," or else the extra $4.25 was for constructive damages inflicted upon the selectmen's modesty.

Of the teachers the records furnish but little information. The only person mentioned is Christopher Gold (probably meaning Gould), who was in 1762 elected to keep school for six months. We hear no more of him until March, 1773, when it was "voted not to hire Master Gold any longer," from which I infer that he taught most of the school time during the intervening eleven years. Through the courtesy of Thomas J. Parsons, Esq., I am able to furnish from his private records the names of several of the teachers of previous generations. Among them may be mentioned Joseph Parsons and Richard Webster, who taught in 1786 and 1787; in 1789, '90, and '91, Peter Mitchell and John Carroll; in 1783, James Dame; in 1794, John L. Piper. After them came at various periods Samuel Willey, John French, a Mr. Sherburne, Noah Buraham, John W. Parsons, Richard Webster, Jr., Joseph Dalton, Joseph Dame, Levi Merrill, Noah Wiggin, Thomas J. Parsons, John A. Trefethen, and scores of others whose names are more or less familiar to you. The wages paid ranged from ten to twenty dollars per month exclusive of board, the earlier teachers being paid in the English currency.

Dr. John W. Parsons taught school and practiced medicine at the same time. Whenever he was called upon to attend the sick the children were dismissed and sent home. Sometimes after teaching school all day he would walk over to North Hampton to attend his patients there, returning home on foot in the evening.

One of the old teachers, Levi Merrill, who taught at the East school-house, boarded at the house of a prominent resident of the district, and, as sometimes happens in such instances, formed an intimate acquaintance with one of the daughters, which speedily ripened into something decidedly like courting. The old man was opposed to the match, and in order to break up the arrangement refused to board the teacher at the next term of school. He went to one of the neighbors to board, and a little boy who attended school was employed by the teacher to carry letters to the fair damsel whenever the coast was clear, and the window was raised a little for a signal. The boy was handsomely rewarded for carrying the mail by being let off from all the whippings he was supposed to deserve, and still lives at threescore and ten to relate the story. He has held many positions of honor and trust in his town and State, and is familiarly known as "Squire Parsons." Contrary to all the cases laid down in the novels for our guidance, the teacher didn't marry the girl after all, but only fanned the latent love into a little flame, and then completely extinguished it by marrying another woman.

In later years Hall Locke is widely remembered for his scholarly attainments and eccentric manners. In addition to his other accomplishments, he could do some first-class swearing whenever he thought the occasion demanded it, or whenever the school grew a little too noisy. At one time he had reasons for punishing a boy who is yet living, whose hair in his youthful days was about the color of my whiskers

(red). Seizing his ruler he "went for" that youngster for the purpose of "reasoning" with him by the only process then known among teachers. The boy, however, did not desire to be whipped just then, so he snatched his hat, darted out of the school-house and started off, with Locke following after in hot pursuit. The master was a little lame, and the boy soon put a safe distance between himself and his dreaded enemy. As Locke saw him slowly but surely slipping out of his reach he flung his ruler after him with all the energy of a passionate man, and yelled out, "Oh! you little yaller-headed —, if I could get hold of yer, I'd fix yer!"

Of the supervision of the schools the machinery was much more cumbersome than at present. The committeemen's visit was regarded as an event of great importance, and a vast amount of dignity was embodied in their long faces and stand-up collars. I had hoped to obtain a complete list of my predecessors, but the inexcusable negligence of the town clerks has rendered it impossible.

The first committee on record is that of 1798, when it was "voted that Rev. Huntington Porter, John Carroll, and Col. Joseph Parsons be a committee to inspect the schools."

The next year (1799) the same committee were re-elected, and the whole board of selectmen in the bargain. Now, ladies and gentlemen, it is bad enough to have one committee, it is worse to have three, but to send all the selectmen besides is pushing matters to that point "where forbearance ceases to be a virtue."

In 1812 the committee consisted of Rev. H. Porter and Dr. Joseph Parsons; in 1813, Col. Thomas Goss, John W. Parsons, and Peter Jenness.

In 1827 the State passed a special act in regard to the supervision of schools, since which time most of the small towns in New Hampshire have elected a committee consisting of only one person. From 1827 to 1856, by the most shameful remissness, there is no record whatever of school officers. How many blighted hopes and cherished ambitions slumber in that twenty-nine years of unrecorded greatness can never be fully known. Men who put on a bran-new shirt-collar, and submitted to every indignity of the toilet, who faced frowning schoolmasters and giggling school-girls, endured it all in vain, and have not even the poor boon of their names upon the town's parchment! After this, what is fame? In 1857, Charles J. Brown was elected superintendent committee, and was elected again in 1859-60, 1863, '64, '65, and '66. Levi T. Walker was elected in 1858, and again in 1861-62. Thomas J. Parsons was elected in 1867, and re-elected in 1868; G. H. Jenness was elected in 1869.

In all systems of school discipline, until a comparatively recent date, force was the controlling power. Every pupil was looked upon as a subject over which the master was the supreme ruler, and no king on his throne ever wielded a more despotic power. The idea of self-government in school never entered the heads of those old champions of the birch and cowhide. Brute force and that alone was relied upon to conquer and keep in subjection the natural hilarity of youth. Under such management every school-room became a place to be shunned, and its occupants only went there because they felt obliged to. Every boy hoped and prayed for the day when he should feel able to "lick the master." That one word "master" tells the whole story between the past and present school civilization. No one then thought of being a teacher simply.

The punishments were frequently severe, and sometimes absolutely brutal. The stick, the ruler, and the rawhide were used for the most trifling offenses, and were always viewed as the necessary means of preserving even the semblance of good order. Every boy who had life and "snap" enough in him to elevate him above the level of a fool expected a daily whipping as much as he expected his supper, and felt really disappointed if he didn't get it. In my school-days it was considered sufficient punishment for any ordinary misdemeanor to be set back among the large girls,—a kind of punishment that has been aptly styled capital punishment, and a kind that the most of us felt able to endure.

Upon one point all the records are conspicuously silent,—the absence of all intimation that woman had anything to do in the management of public schools under the old system. Our forefathers had not outgrown the idea that in all the practical avocations of life woman should be regarded as a subordinate and not as an equal. Hence if a man had a large family of children to educate, he did the best he could for the boys, and encouraged the girls not to meddle with "book larnin'."

Ecclesiastical History.—The town of Rye<sup>1</sup> originally formed a portion of Portsmouth, Greenland, Hampton, and Newcastle. It was formerly called Sandy Beach, and after Newcastle was formed became a parish of that place. It was incorporated April 30, 1726. Prior to this time the town was destitute of a settled ministry of the gospel, the people attending public worship in the neighboring towns as was most convenient. The first petition for the formation of a new district, whereby they might enjoy the benefits of the gospel ministry, was under date of 1721, as follows:

"The humble Petition of sundry the Inhabitants living about Sandy Beach, partly in New Castle, Hampton & Portsmouth, humbly sheweth:

benefit of the gospel, most of us living at great Distances from our Respective meeting-houses, especially those belonging to New Castle;—for that besides the great Distance we live from thence, there is the great Inconvenience of a Ferry, by the Reasons of which for near half the year, We the Masters of families that are best able cannot but now and then attend upon the publick worship of God (as in Duty we are bound) and when we Doe, It is many times late within Night &c we can reach our habitations: And besides this great inconvenience to ourselves, there is much greater happens to the greatest part of our families (viz.) our women and children, who can rarely attend at all or not above two or three times in the year, and then but those that are grown to years; for our younger children that should imbrace in the precepts of the gospel with their milk, cannot attend untill grown to some years: Wee having four, five & some more than six miles, besides the Ferry; And we can now come amongst us above two hundred and forty of fifty souls, and not one third capable to attend as we are now circumstanced: And we think ourselves capable to maintain a minister of the Gospel, and to give a competent Living, as our neighbouring Parishes & precincts doe:

* Therefore wee, your humble Petitioners prays that we may be set off a particular precinct (from Mr. William Seavey and westward by the sea side as far towards Hampton as the little Boars head or Little River, and back into the Country about three miles & a half, or so far as in your wisdom shall see meet) and that we may be empowered to make and raise all our own Taxes and gather them: So prays your humble Petitioners.

The humble Petition of the Inhabitants living in that part of New Castle called Little Harbour and Sandy Beach, and the Inhabitants living at the Eastward of the Little River commonly so called, at the Easterly end of Hampton, next Sandy Beach, and sundry others of Portsmth Living near the s<sup>d</sup> Sandy Beach humbly Sheweth:

That there being sixty families or upward within the Precincts above named who having for a long time lived at a great Distance from any meeting house where the publick worship of God has been carried on, and most of us having great families which very Rare above one or Two of a family can go to the House of God for the greatest part of the time by Reason of the Distance we live from any meeting house, and thereby the greatest part of our families have been Deprived of the Dispensation of the Gospel and there has been almost a famine of the word and worship of God amongst us, there being near four hundred souls who of not above the sixth or seventh part can attend s<sup>d</sup> worship which is very Prejudicial to the glory of God, and Destructive to our Eternal welfare, for the greatest part of us thus to be brought up in Ignorance which is a Greater Griefe to us than we can herein Express, and the only cause of addressing y<sup>r</sup> Hon<sup>ty</sup> and the Hon<sup>ble</sup> the Council herein.

And for preventing the Difficulties and Hardships which wee have for a long time labour'd under, and for the advancement of the glory of God and good of souls, we the subscribers hereof humbly prays your Hon<sup>ty</sup> and the Honourable the Council that wee may be set off a Particular District or Precinct for the maintaining a minister with the Priviledges of carrying on the affairs of a Town or Parish according to the Bounds hereafter Express or as your Hon<sup>ty</sup> in wisdom shall see meet, viz. Vote and Remonstrance of Portsmouth against the Petition from Sandy Beach, 1724

1 So called from the circumstance that a party of Indians, after an attack upon the people on the "Plains" at Portsmouth, 26 June, 1696, encamped and took breakfast on the declivity of a hill near the bounds of Greenland and Rye. The hill retains the name to this day.—Brester's Rem. Ports. Vol. I. p. 73.—Ed.

The first meeting-house was erected in the year 1725, the church organized July 10, 1726, and the first minister, Rev. Nathaniel Morrill, was ordained Sept. 14, 1726. The following is a list of the pastors from the organization of the church to the present time: Nathaniel Morrill, ordained Sept. 14, 1726-33; Samuel Parsons (aged eighty-two years, great-grandfather of Thomas J. Parsons), Nov. 3, 1736, died Jan. 4, 1789; Huntington Porter, Dec. 29, 1784, colleague, died March 7, 1844, aged eighty-nine years; Bezaleel Smith, May 13, 1829, colleague pastor, dismissed July 12, 1841, died May 15, 1879; James F. McEwen, Dec. 1, 1841, to April 8, 1846; Israel F. Otis, July 4, 1847, to April 24, 1866; Silas Leach, Oct. 4, 1867, to Dec. 11, 1870; Jeremiah K. Aldrich, May 14, 1873, to Nov. 16, 1876; Willis A. Hadley, Aug. 21, 1878, to Jan. 1, 1879; J. W. Kingsbury, present supply. Since Mr. Otis there has been no settled pastor.

The third and present church edifice was erected in 1835. The present deacons are Jonathan Locke and John S. Remick.

Methodist Episcopal Church.—The Methodist Episcopal Church in this town was organized March 11, 1839, and October 9th following this house of worship was dedicated. The following is a list of the ministers: Moore McCurdy, Cushing, and Osgood, 1839; James T. Adams, 1840-42; Henry Deans, 1843; Abraham Palmer, 1844; — Blodgett, 1845; D. W. Barber, 1846; J. C. Allan, 1847; Mr. Wallingford, 1848; Mr. Blodgett, 1849; A. Heath, 1850-51; I. F. Adams, 1852; D. Macdonald, 1853; John F. Adams, 1854; E. Lagro, 1855-56; J. W. Adams, 1857-58; N. F. Bailey, 1859-60; Mr. Chase, 1861-62; W. H. Stewart, 1863; G. W. T. Rogers, 1864-66; Abraham Folsom, 1867-68. Mr. Folsom was the last pastor of this church. The society became too weak for the support of a minister, and the church building was consequently sold to the town, and is now used as a town-house.

Christian Church.—This church was originally organized as a Baptist Church, May 1, 1820, as follows:

"We, the subscribers, hereby form ourselves into a Religious Society, to be known by the name of the first Baptist Society in Rye, agreeably to a law of the State of New Hampshire, passed July 1st, 1819, and have appointed Nathan Knowls clerk of the same."

The persons thus forming themselves into a Baptist Society were largely those who could not accept the positions held by the Congregational Church, which up to this time was the only church in the town. The Baptist Society being composed of such persons as were inclined to grow in knowledge, soon found that the limits of the Baptist faith were too narrow for them, and Aug. 20, 1833, they reorganized themselves into a Christian Church. They at this time adopted the following covenant:

"We, the undersigned persons, agree to unite ourselves together as a religious body, to be called a Christian Church, and to receive the sacred scriptures as our rule of Faith and practice, renouncing all allegiance to creeds and platforms of human invention. We do solemnly covenant to watch over each other for good, to build up ourselves in the most holy faith, to admonish each other in love and union, asking of our heavenly Father, the Holy Spirit, to aid us in this important work, that we be led into all truth, which makes free."

The church and society increased in membership till they at the present time, having numerical, moral, and financial strength, command an influence second to none in the town. Indeed, they have a larger membership than any other church in town.

They own a good church property, valued at six thousand dollars. The audience-room of the church is one of the finest to be found in a country church. Much credit is due to its enterprising members for its very attractive appearance. Services are held regularly every Sabbath, and a large and attentive congregation greets the pastor in a very encouraging manner.

CHAPTER LXIX.

RYE.—(Continued.)

Miscellaneous—Military, Etc.—Pioneer Incidents—Justices of the Peace—Physicians—Summer Resort—The Town Hall—Educational—Military—Indian Wars—War of the Revolution—The Rebellion of 1861-65—Names of Soldiers.

Merchants.—The first merchant in Rye was John Carroll, an Irishman and school-teacher, who began in a little room keeping needles, pins, etc., and afterwards kept a store at Jedediah Rand's. He subsequently associated with him his brother-in-law, Simon Goss, under the firm-name of Carroll & Goss. Other traders have been A. Seavey, J. Drake, D. Wedgewood, Hamilton Locke, J. L. Locke, and Hon. T. J. Parsons. Mr. Parsons commenced business in 1828 in the store he now occupies, having conducted the business continuously at this place for more than half a century. Mr. Parsons is one of the prominent citizens of the town, and has held various positions of trust within the gift of his fellow-townsmen. He was appointed justice of the peace Dec. 30, 1828, and has held that office continuously to the present time. He has also represented the town in the Legislature and his district in the Senate. Mr. Parsons also manifested much interest in the old militia, and rose successively from the rank of captain to colonel; was also an aide-de-camp to Governor Isaac Hill. He was born in Rye, Jan. 4, 1804.

Justices of the Peace.—Among the justices of the peace appointed for the town are mentioned the following: Jonathan Fifield, 1794; Richard Jenness, 1744; Simon Jenness, 1793; J. Simpson, 1732; Simon Jenness, 1788; Joseph Parsons, 1788; John Wilkes Parsons, 1808; Thomas J. Parsons, 1828; Langdon B. Parsons, 1872; Billy Rand, William Locke, Jonathan Philbrick, Amos Seavey, Charles J. Brown, Hon. Emmons B. Philbrick, and Charles A. Drake.

Simon Jenness was appointed coroner in 1785.

Physicians.—The first regular settled physician was Dr. Joseph Parsons. He was followed by Dr. John W. Parsons, father of Dr. Warren Parsons, the present resident physician in Rye, who has been in active practice in this town forty years. Dr. Parsons is a graduate of Columbian College, Washington, D. C., and commenced practice here in 1842.

Summer Resort.—Rye Beach is one of the most delightful and famous summer resorts on the New England coast. It has long been noted for its fine beach and beautiful scenery.

The hotels at the beach are the Farragut House (destroyed by fire in 1882), Atlantic House, Sea View, Washington, and Ocean Wave. The latter is at Sandy Beach, or Foss' Beach, as it is sometimes called.

The Town Hall.—The present town hall was originally the Methodist Episcopal meeting, erected in 1829. It was purchased by the town in 1873, at a cost of $1000. It was remodeled and furnished at a cost of $2255. The committee for remodeling consisted of Hon. E. B. Philbrick, E. L. Seavey, and Simon L. Chesley.

Military.—Rye lost a very considerable number of its inhabitants in times of war, both by sea and land. The inhabitants suffered severely by the depredation of the Indians. In the year 1696 twenty-one persons were either killed or carried away captive by the vindictive savages. In the French war the town lost fourteen, who were either killed or died in the service. In the Revolutionary war the town responded promptly to the call of liberty, and twenty-eight of its inhabitants died in the service, most of them young men. In the war of 1812 there were twenty in the service, two of whom lost their lives.

The twelve minute-men enlisted in May, 1775, of the town of Rye, a list of whose names, it is much regretted, cannot be found, went to Cambridge, Mass.

It being soon after necessary to have more troops at Newcastle to protect Portsmouth harbor, Capt. Joseph Parsons raised the following volunteer company in Rye, and was stationed at Great Island (Newcastle) that summer and fall. It was, I believe, the first company in service from Rye. Papers show that others served under Capt. Parsons at Newcastle.

COLONY OF NEW HAMPSHIRE.
Rye, July 5, 1776.

SERGEANT SAMUEL ELKISS.—YOU ARE hereby required to warn all persons belonging to your district, to meet at Mr. Benjamin Garland's Innholder in said Parish on Monday next at eight o'clock before noon armed and equipped according to law in order to start out soldiers to join the Northern Army—and it is hoped every person who values his life, liberty or property will punctually attend.

JUSTICE PARSONS, Capt.

Rye, July 9, 1776.

I have received orders from Col. Josh. Worthwith for a moderate raid for the Committee to be together—you are desired to be at Mr. Abr<sup>m</sup> Libbey's this day at six of the clock afternoon—

MR SIMON GARLAND.

RICHARD JENNESS, JEN.

In the Canada, or old French war, so called, of 1745, the town of Rye lost fourteen persons killed or died in the service of their country, viz.: Thomas Rand, Stephen Rand, Richard Parsons, Stephen Palmer, Job Libbey, John Jenness, Simcon Wells, Joseph Chase, John Berry, Caleb Berry, John Locke, Joseph Towle, William Shannon, and one other.

Military Record.—The following list of soldiers from this town in the war of 1861-65 is taken from records in the possession of Hon. Thomas J. Parsons:

I find from examination of old papers in Rye that Rye men shipped and served on privateers during the Revolution, a few of the vessels of which I give, viz.:

1777, Feb. 26th, the privateer "Portsmouth," Capt. Robert Parker, sailed on a cruise March 25th; took a brig from New York of ten guns, and had a fight with two ships, one man killed and one wounded; March 29th, took a brig from Cork, which arrived into Portsmouth April 20th.

1778, January, schooner (brig) "True Blue," Capt. Lawrence Furlong.

1778, February, ship "Portsmouth," Thomas Roche, commander.

1778, April, ship "Portsmouth," Thomas Roach, commander.

1778, May 15, schooner "Hornet" (or "Friends' Adventure"), Kinsman Peaverly, commander.

1778, July, schooner "Rambler," Thomas Manning, commander.

1778, October, brigantine "Platio," John Hill, commander.

1778, October, schooner numbered "Six," Samuel Rice, commander.

1778, November, ship "General Sullivan," Thomas Manning, commander.

1779, May, ship "General Sullivan," Thomas Manning, commander.

1780, November, ship "Alexander," Thomas Simpson, commander.

1781, January, ship "Alexander," Thomas Simpson, commander.

1781, May, ship "Sconrge," Timothy Parker, commander.

1781, April, ship "America," of Newbury, for a four months' cruise; John Blunt, of Newcastle, mate.

1779, December, Continental ship "Ranger," Thomas Simpson, commander.

1776, May 21, the "New Hampshire" frigate launched at Portsmouth.

Lieut. Robert P. Shapleigh, died June 2, 1865.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

HON. EMMONS B. PHILBRICK.

Hon. Emmons B. Philbrick was born in Rye, Nov. 14, 1823. His ancestor was Thomas Philbrick, who came with his family from Lincolnshire, England, about 1630, in company with Sir Richard Saltin-stall, in the ship "Arabella," and with him settled in Salem, Mass., but soon moved to Watertown, and in a short time went with his family to Hampton, N. H.

Thomas had seven children. One daughter, Martha, married John Cass, and became the ancestor of Lewis Cass. His grandson, Joseph married Triphena Marston, of Hampton, and built a house about 1700, a few rods from the present residence of Emmons B. Philbrick. Ephraim, the third generation in direct line from Joseph, married Sally Webster. He was an active man, giving employment to many men in fishing and on his large farm. He was a Christian minister, and widely known as Elder Philbrick. He was one of the founders of the Christian Church in Rye. His eldest son, Josiah Webster, continued on the homestead farm. He was a man of intelligence and a zealous Christian. He married Sarah A. Brown, a descendant of the old Brown family in Rye. They were the parents of Emmons B., Horace F., and Ella F. Philbrick.

The subject of this sketch received an academical education at Hampton, N. H., his course of study being scientific preparatory to civil engineering. At the age of nineteen his studies were cut short by the death of his only brother, and at the earnest desire of his parents he relinquished the idea of following his chosen occupation, and came home to care for them. The winters of the next ten years were spent in teaching, in which he was particularly successful, his services being in constant demand, especially in schools that were considered difficult to manage, for he was a man above six feet in height, finely proportioned, and of commanding presence, and invariably succeeded in controlling his schools without corporeal punishment.

He continues the management of the farm, and by the acquisition of an adjoining farm has become one of the largest and most successful farmers in town. He is also largely interested in the summer boarding business that has made Rye Beach so noted.

In 1856 he was appointed justice of the peace, and ever since has performed the duties of a country justice. His early studies fitted him for land surveying, and in this branch he has become quite an expert.

He is a man of marked force and integrity of character, very tenacious in his purposes (a characteristic of the Philbrick family), successful in his undertakings, foremost in public improvements and educational interests, and although the town is strongly opposed to him politically, yet he has been called to fill the most important town offices. In 1878 he was a member of the State Senate, when under the old Constitution that honorable body consisted of twelve members, and again in 1879 and 1880, under the amended Constitution, when the Senate consisted of twenty-four members. His district in both cases was nominally Democratic, while he has always been a strong, though consistent, Republican.

He has been a trustee in the Piscataqua Savings-Bank, in Portsmouth, from its formation, and at the organization of the Rye Beach Railroad Corporation was chosen president; is also a director in a manufacturing company; for years has been an earnest and worthy member of the I. O. O. F., and has attained a high standing in the order.

He was married in 1859 to Vianna M. Dalton, of North Hampton, who died in 1869. By this marriage he had two sons, one of whom is deceased. He was married again in 1875, to Mary C. Seavey, of Rye, by whom he has one son and one daughter.

JOSEPH DISCO JENNESS.

Joseph Disco Jenness, son of Joseph and Anna Knox Jenness, was born on the old Jenness homestead, which he and his brother Sheridan own, in the town of Rye, N. H., Sept. 30, 1818. His father was born on the same place, and was two years of age when the old house was built in which all his children were born, and where he continued to live until his death, at the advanced age of seventy-four years and six months.

Joseph was four times married, his fourth wife being Anna Knox. Of this union the following children were born, viz.,—Joseph Disco, Elizabeth (Mrs. William Rand), and Sheridan, all of whom still reside in Rye.

He was a Democrat in politics, and at one time was a lieutenant in the State militia. He was a man respected at home and abroad. He was kind and obliging, charitable toward all benevolent institutions, and hospitable to the poor.

Joseph Disco Jenness remained at home working on the farm and receiving the advantages of a common-school education. On the 9th of December, 1841, he married Mary E., daughter of Nathaniel G. Foye and Martha E. Dow, of Rye, N. H. By this union two children were born, viz., Susan L. and Emma J., both of whom died young. Mrs. Jenness died Aug. 30, 1881.

Mr. Jenness is a Democrat in politics. He never has sought political honors, preferring the society of his family and the comforts of domestic life. He is an earnest advocate of good schools and churches, and though not a member of any denomination, yet a liberal supporter of the ministry and a well-wisher toward all organizations which have for their object the elevation of society.

CHAPTER LXX.

IN giving an account of the settlement and progress of the town of Salem it will be necessary to touch upon the history of a portion of the town of Methuen, Mass., whose limits formerly extended northward to and beyond what is now known as Salem village. New Hampshire being annexed, in 1641, to the province of Massachusetts, made a royal province in 1679, again joined to Massachusetts in 1689, becoming a separate province in 1741, and the boundary between the two provinces severing the town of Methuen in twain, that portion called the North Parish (now comprising a large part of the present town of Salem) came under the jurisdiction of New Hampshire. The organization of the North Parish took place on the 25th of January, 1736. The meeting was called by Henry Sanders, acting under authority of the General Court of Massachusetts. It was held at Daniel Peaslee's house. This house was also a stockade, a place of refuge for the settlers in times of danger, and afforded accommodations for the parish-meetings as well until the meeting-house was built. The site of this primitive fort is at the present time marked by an old and shallow excavation at the base of Spicket Hill, on the farm of Silas Carey, a dozen rods from the road. At this first meeting David Clark was chosen moderator, and the following parish officers chosen: Peter Merrill, parish clerk; Joseph Peaslee, collector; Thomas Eaton, treasurer; Henry Sanders, Edward Clark, and Peter Merrill, assessors and to warn parish-meetings. Joseph Peaslee, John Bayley, and Abiel Kelly were chosen a committee to lay out a burying-place, and forty-five pounds voted to the support of the ministry and other parish charges.

Thus began the career of a community destined to help in the work of developing the latent resources of the newly-opened settlement. The pioneers had come from the country about, but chiefly from Londonderry. Possessed of those fine traits of character that so distinguished the Scotch refugees of the north of Ireland, honesty, industry, and an indomitable perseverance, they were eminently qualified for the work before them. How well they succeeded in their task let the after-history of the town attest. With all their marked thriftiness of habit and life, they also manifested a strong religious fervor and zeal. This spirit entered into and held a controlling influence over the general affairs of the parish. The heroic fidelity to the simple and severe faith of the Covenanters of old Scotland relaxed not a whit in the hearts of these stern old pioneers amid the novel and distracting scenes around them. The new settlement centred at a point on the west bank of "Spicket River" (as it was spelled by the old-time chroniclers), near the bridge. This bridge was built a few years previously, probably about 1730, as mention of it is made in the records of that time. It still remains, and crosses the stream near Joseph Webster's house. At that time it was the only one in the neighborhood. There were, however, several fording-places where men and animals waded from bank to bank, but this bridge was, par excellence, the grand objective point sought by travelers. The road now passing from this bridge, the Haverhill road, was then a mere bridle-path, accessible only on horse-back or afoot.

Settling a Minister.—The important matter of securing a suitable person to enter upon the work of the ministry among them agitated the parish from the very first. Moving cautiously, they treated with several ministers in view of settlement, and until the autumn of 1739, when it is recorded that "y<sup>e</sup> committee shall treat with mr. abner bayley to come and preach with us on trial, in order for settlement in y<sup>e</sup> work of y<sup>e</sup> ministry among us." They had the temporary services of Rev. Daniel Greenleaf in 1735, Rev. Mr. Hale in 1736, and Rev. Samuel Chandler in 1737-38. At a parish meeting held Nov. 13, 1739, "Mr. Abner Bayley was made charge of by a vote of ye<sup>e</sup> parish to settle in ye work of ye<sup>e</sup> ministry," and a salary of one hundred and forty pounds in bills of credit was voted to him, and soon thereafter a free gift of one hundred and fifty pounds was bestowed upon him by vote of the parish, with a further proviso that "as ye parish increas in welth and mr. bayleys needs Requie more, that there shall be an addition made to his salary." On Dec. 24, 1739, the parish voted that "John Bayley, Henry Sanders, and Thomas Eatton should be a committee to seek to ye ministers in order for a fast in ye<sup>e</sup> parish." This was thought necessary in view of the forthcoming ordination of Abner Bayley. The solemn fast was appointed to be held "ye next wensday come three weeks."

The Meeting-House.—Going back a year we find recorded that on the 15th day of November, 1738, the frame of the first house of worship was raised on the west side of Spicet River, near the bridge before mentioned. The frame was not covered until the year following, and no pews put in prior to 1749.

The Burying Ground.—Mention has been made of providing a burying-place for the parish; for this and the meeting-house an acre of land was procured on the parish charge. The location corresponds with the inclosed park known as the common, which then included the old burying-place, and reached to the river. In this burying-ground the "rude fathers of the hamlet sleep" side by side with the generations that have since lived and died. Quaint headstones, inscribed with names and memories now held in reverence, thickly rise all over the consecrated ground. Scores have partially sunk beneath the yielding soil, until it is difficult to read the inscriptions. Conspicuous among humbler stones may be found several slabs and monuments of slate or granite bearing names dear to the memory of their descendants. The most unique and ancient stone now above the surface bears the following inscription sculptured rudely upon its rough face: "In memory of Elizabeth ye<sup>e</sup> dau of Mr. Joseph Cresy. Died July 30, 1725." Next in age is a quaint old headstone rudely chiselled, "Benjamin Webster, who died Dec. ye<sup>e</sup> 12, 1732." But one of the older stones bears any sentiment; this one we give in full:

 "Death, thou hast conquered me
 And by thy dart I am slain,
 But Christ hath conquered thee
 And I shall rise again."

A curiously-wrought stone bearing a coffin on one corner and a heart upon the other is inscribed: "Here lies ye body of Isaiah Ayer. He Died September 25, 1772, aged 23 years." The mortal remains of Rev. Abner Bayley, the first pastor of the old North Parish, lie in this hallowed spot. The grave is on the outskirts of the grounds near the public road north of the hearse-house. It is marked by a plain large slab of slatestone six feet in height and two wide, and bears the following tribute to his reverend memory: "To perpetuate the memory of the Rev. Abner Bayley, who, like a sheaf of corn fully ripe, departed this life March 10, 1798, in ye<sup>e</sup> 83d year of his age, and 58th of his ministry. Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord, for they rest from their labors and their works do follow them."

Most of the remaining stones put up in "ye olden times" are illegible by reason of age and neglect. Many have long since been buried beneath the surface. The spade and pick may yet unseal their buried testimonies, and the heart and will of some future "Old Mortality" reproduce the forgotten records of the slumbering dead.

With regard to the civil history of the North Parish of Methuen, little else is known beyond what the meagre records show. The proceedings of the parish meetings embraced almost every interest of the people, from the weighty cares of church and State down to the most ordinary and trivial matters of daily life. We cannot do better than to follow the record and present such details as affected the body politic of the prospective township.

Resuming the account of the building of the meeting-house, and following along until the structure is fitted for use for public worship and parish meetings, viewing the work as of such importance to the demands of the infant township, we shall include it in the general mass of purely civil interests and acts. The frame being up, and roof put on, the task of finishing the exterior progressed slowly. The parish treasurer, Thomas Eaton, was instructed to receive "492 feet of bords, which ye committee have provided as money for three pounds seven shillings pr thousand;" "voted to Henry Sanders for framing ye meeting-house and hewing timber that was wanting of ye frame, 33-5-0;" "to Richard dow, 1-2-6;" voted to daniel peaslee, 5-7-0;" "to Ebenezer ayer, 3-4-0;" "to John Ober, 2-9-0;" "to David Clark, 4-4-0;" "to thomas Eatton, 1-4-0;" "to peter merrill, 1-11-6;" "to Richard Kimball, 3-9-0;" "to Ephraim Clark, 2-0-0."

April 3, 1739, "Voted henry Sanders for one thousand and one hundred of bord at ye mill, 3-1-0;" "to henry sanders for haling bords from ye mill to ye meeting-house 10 shillings pr thousand;" "to oliver sanders for one thousand and one hundred of bords at ye mill, 3-17-0;" "to benony Rowell for one thousand bords, 3-10-0;" "to samuel Rowell for 283 feet of bord, 0-19-8;" "to John Rowell for a hundred and half of bords, 0-10-6."

Nov. 13, 1739, "Voted to Richard dow for going to Chaster and for bords three pounds."

December 17th, "Voted to abiel kelly for bords, 1-3-0;" "to thomas Eatton for underpinning, 1-10-0;"

"to John bayley for underpinning, 1-10-0;" "to John moulton for underpinning, 1-7-0;" "to Edw'd clark, Junr., for a day's work, 0-6-0."

Dec. 23, 1739, "Voted to Peter merrill for speck (spike) and hinges, 2-18-0;" "voted to Peter merrill for hords 2-0-0;" "to henry sanders for hords 2-6-3."

May 6, 1740, "Voted henry sanders for making a pulpit 0-16-0;" "to henry sanders for 7 thousand of nails 10-16-0."

Aug. 10, 1741, "Voted to Richard dow for gutters for ye meeting-house two Pounds and Eight shillings."

Oct. 29, 1748, "Paid to jeromier Eatton out of ye treasury for joynerly work 9-0-0;" "payd out of ye treasury for bord nails four pounds ten shillings."

March 10, 1749, "Reckning mad (reckoning made) up with ye committe march ye 10 on ye a count of ye meeting-house in sashes and glas and work and Divers other things 248-2-6."

May 6, 1749, "Paid out of ye treasure to mathe reed for glas Eighteen pounds fourteen shillings."

At this date the meeting-house was still unfinished inside, having no "puse" built, and at a meeting the subject came up, when "it was pot to vot to see wheather thay Lay out ye body of ye house, and it was voted down." Up to this time there had been an outlay of £419 13s. 6d. Great difficulties had laid in their way in assuming and carrying forward the work. The parish was burdened by other important demands, but the spirit of zeal and liberality evinced commends itself to all who justly estimate their endeavors. The collectors of rates and taxes labored under great disadvantages in securing them. The county was cut up into districts and grants vaguely bounded, and frequently intermixed by the clashing claims and surveys of neighboring parishes and towns. No years passed but that the parish was defrauded of its just dues, with no means of redress. The province line settled between New Hampshire and Massachusetts cut the parish from the rest of the town to which it belonged, plunging it into a turmoil of excitement and apprehension, affecting seriously and menacing its peace and prosperity. Numbers of disaffected inhabitants located along the boundary refused to pay taxes to the parish, and a troublesome class of settlers living by the shores of Policy Pond (called in the records "oirish") defied the constables in their efforts to collect the rates, insomuch that the parish subsequently voted to instruct the officers to let them alone. The collectors themselves were sometimes remiss in their duties, and more than one paid the penalty of his neglect in the remorseless and bitter indignation of the outraged parish. An instance is cited.

On Jan. 3, 1744, a vote was taken "that there be two hundred and eighty Pounds of money, old tenor, raised to pay Mr. Bayley ye menester;" but the selectmen took upon themselves the risk of evading the execution of levying the rates. The collectors were inquired of respecting their part in the neglect, and they stated that the selectmen had not placed the collection of the minister's rates in their hands. An outburst of popular indignation followed, and on the 26th of December, at a parish meeting, a committee was chosen "to Descourse with ye old Select man concerning their Difict in not making ye rats and giving them forth to ye constable as ye law direcks;" "it was also voted that Ebenezer ayer, and Daniel Cressy Should be ye comite to Descore with ye mane on that a fayer." By the following year the public feeling had somewhat subsided, and the parish grew more lenient after threats of prosecution.

Oct. 10, 1745, a parish meeting was "warned to meet and determine what course to pursue in the case, the second and third articles being: "to see whether ye parish or District will prosced to prosicnt ye former select man for their neglect in not making ye rats for mr bayley in season, too witt: Leutenant Isie Clow and insin John Ober and mr Josiah gag" (Gage); "to see what course ye parish will prosced in to make things easy a mongst them So mr bayley may have his money and live in pees a mongst us so that ye God of pees may Dlight to Dwell a mongst us and bless us in all laful under takings." At the meeting it was put to vote whether these men should be prosecuted, and it was voted they should not. In this decision the kindly forbearance and good will of the pastor, influencing and directing the public mind in peaceful counsel and forgiving spirit, evidently shines forth,—a tribute to the power of his calling and the hold he kept on the hearts and confidence of his parish.

The last entry of the acts and transactions of the old North Parish of Methuen stands recorded April 24, 1749, when the venerable Daniel Peaslee, Esp., was moderator. The subsequent pages of the old book contain miscellaneous records,—births, marriages, deaths, criers' notices, poundkeepers' records, etc. The family records entered include the names of Sanders (Oliver, William, and Henry), Lowell, Gage, Thordike, Clough (or Clow), Hastings, Bayley, Rowell, Kimball, Woodbury, Giles, Bedel, Young, Hall, Silver, Morgau, Wheeler, Kelly, Duston, Webster, Pattee, Merrill, Austin, Peaslee, Ames, Ellingwood, and Davis. Here we reluctantly close the record of the old North Parish, for the little settlement is now on the eve of a new era in its history, and is about to be honored by incorporation as a town, giving increased importance and dignity to the aspiring community. It was entered in compliance to a petition of the inhabitants presented to the royal Governor and Council of the province, praying that a township be granted it. The charter of the town bears date of May 11, 1750, the following being a copy, verbatim et literatim:

"Province of } George the Second by ye grace of god of great Brit-

From this auspicious time the growth of the town advanced slowly. The wheels of government worked more evenly and effectually for the public good. The Captain Richard Kelly upon whom rested the honor of calling the first town-meeting of Salem was a leading and influential citizen, and one of the first to settle here. He was of good English stock, and his father and grandfather came from Newbury, Mass., and their ancestors from Newbury, Berkshire County, England, in 1635. His descendants are still with us, and among the most respected and influential of our citizens. Though the town was now in the enjoyment of its newly-acquired privileges and grew apace, yet the great portion of the lands were still unsettled and unbroken, and deep forests and wastes stretched out from the borders of the villages, infested with prowling and ravenous wild animals which were a constant menace and injury to domestic stock, and not unfrequently to the inhabitants. Wolves were numerous and audacious, and in 1751 the town "voted that any person belonging to the town of Salem who shall kill a wolf in said town shall have £10 old tenor, and for a young wolf £3 old tenor." Exciting and perilous adventures with these beasts are still recounted, though perhaps with some exaggeration as the stories gain age. It was unsafe for persons to roam about unarmed, especially at nightfall, and women and children required an escort in case of being out late. Coming back to other matters, we find that among them the town experienced its share of the general impoverishment and financial distress of the province and colonies. The depreciation of the currency embarrassed and confused the operation of law, the progress of industry, and the honest payment of the public and private debts. Appropriations, seemingly recklessly lavish, dwindled down to mere pittance, with a possibility of still more insignificance before they could be applied. So great was the evil that public as well as private liabilities were met and discharged by substituting the necessaries of life in lieu of money. It is recorded that the parish voted four hundred bushels of corn to Mr. Bayley as his salary for one year, but probably on remonstrances by the reverend creditor, the vote was reconsidered, and four hundred pounds voted instead. About this time the minister desired a cushion upon the hard oaken bench in his pulpit, but the request was denied by vote of the town. In 1762 Rev. Mr. Bayley received arrearages of his salary, the receipt for which, written by him, is preserved with the records, and is as follows:

"SALEM, March 31, 1762.

"Received of the town of Salem in the Province of New Hampshire the whole of my Salary in cash and wood from the beginning of the world to March 1, 1762. One Thousand Seven Hundred sixty and two. I say received in full by me

ABNER BAYLEY.

In 1766 a bitter and hostile spirit pervaded the community, the occasion of it being the attitude and demeanor of a sect residing or recently come among them, known as "Anabaptists," who, by their arrogance and fanatical claims, with an open avowal of their exemption from the burdens of citizenship, while they yet enjoyed its privileges, despising the magistrates, claiming to be actuated and moved by divine impulse, incurred the hatred and abhorrence of the zealots of the established religion. Their teachers, Munger, Stubner, Storeck, etc., taught that among Christians who had the precepts of the gospel to direct, and the spirit of God to guide them, the office of magistracy was not only unnecessary but an unlawful encroachment upon their spiritual liberty; that the distinctions occasioned by birth, rank, or wealth should be abolished, and that as neither the laws of nature nor the precepts of the New Testament had prohibited polygamy, they should use the same liberty as the patriarchs did in this respect. This sect must not be confounded with the Baptists of the present day. The more fiery of their enemies demanded their ejection from the place, or legal measures to bring them to terms, but gentler methods prevailed. The lasting honor of the town in refraining from open acts of persecution was assured through the counter-action of the more tolerant and liberal of the inhabitants, who, impressed with the importance of the subject and foreseeing the results of bigoted and harsh measures, drew up a formal dissent to the impending suit against them. The following is a copy:

"SALEM, March 25, 1766.

"We the subscribers enter this our Dissent against the town of Salem Entering into a lawsuit with those people that are professed Aurbaptists, Because we think it not reasonable to engage in a case where the Law is so plain to the contrary: We enter this our Dissent against y<sup>e</sup> Proceedings as witness our hands: Steven Wheeler, Evan Jones, Richard Dow, Jr., Nathaniel Dow, Benjamin Wheeler, Benjamin Rawlings, Richard Dow, William Wheeler, Amos Dow, Benoni Rowell, Benjamin Wheeler, Jr., Nathaniel Woodman, Israel Young, John Allen, John Clement, Jonathan Corlis, Jr., Richard Cresey, Oliver Dow, Jonathan Corlis (3), Samuel Orilway, James Webster, Jeremiah Dow, Isaiah Rowell, Jr., Richard Kimball, John Johnson, Jonathan Wheeler, Jr., Moody Morss."

The reference in this document to "the Law, etc.," doubtless referred to a stipulation made years before on the subjection of New Hampshire that the religious views of persons settling within the province should be countenanced.

During the year 1766 wolves were again so troublesome that a reward of ten dollars was voted to any one in the town killing a wolf. The next matter momentous to the interests of the town, province, and the American colonies was the impending war of independence. Salem, in common with other towns, was aroused to the urgent needs of the struggle. Town-meetings were held, and the demands for men and means responded to with alacrity. The following are records of some of the events of the times:

"At the Desire of Some Inhabitants of this town, we have hereby Notified the Inhabitants of this town to meet at the Publick Meeting-House in Salem on tuesday the 25th day of April Instant at three of the Clock in the after noon in order to Raise a Proper Number of men for the Defence of the Cntry, and also to make some provision for their Pay if Called for.

Pursuant to a request from the chairman of the committee of the Province of New Hampshire, the selectmen of Salem "notified the freholders and other Inhabitants of the town to meet at the public meeting-house on Monday, the 15th day of May Instant to choose a man to join the Congress at Exeter to consult the affairs of the Province," and at this meeting Caleb Duston was chosen.

At this meeting Mr. Thomas Douglass was chosen moderator. A committee was chosen to advise with the neighboring towns on proper measures for "settling the militia." Cornet Jonathan Tenny was chosen first committeeman, then Robert Young and Thomas Roberson, all for the "South Company," and Mr. Timothy Duston, Amos Dow, and Philip Clement for the "North Company." They also voted to choose officers for both companies. For the North Company they chose Mr. John Allen, captain; Mr. Richard Dow, first lieutenant; Mr. Samuel Johnson, second lieutenant; and Daniel Gordon, ensign. For the South Company, Mr. Joshua Swan, captain; Mr. Thomas Roberson, first lieutenant; Mr. Abbott Petingill, second lieutenant; and Oliver Kimball, ensign. "Robert Young, Jonathan Tenny, Thomas Douglass, and John Hall were chosen a committee for the alarm list of the South Company," and "Richard Dow, Benja Bixby, Henry Little, and William Hall for the North Company." The following are copies of orders, etc., by the "Committee of Safety of New Hampshire":

In 1777 the town voted one hundred dollars to each man of the town of Salem "that shall Enlist in the Continental Army." There were mustered to join the Continental regiments for six months seven men from Salem. Here ends the meagre records of the Revolution in possession of the town. We reluctantly leave it thus. At the close of the Revolution Salem was one of the larger towns of the county, and had slowly and steadily gained in population despite the drain and untoward experiences of the war. The following gives the population of the town as returned in the census of 1786:

"State of New Hampshire

In the journal of proceedings of the convention of New Hampshire which adopted the Federal Constitution in 1788, Lieut. Thomas Dow, representative from Salem, voted no. In the convention of 1791, which met at Concord on the 17th of September to revise the Constitution of the State, Lieut. Thomas Dow represented Salem, and voted yes. The doings of the convention held in Concord in May, 1792, were submitted to the several towns of the State to vote on the subjects Aug. 27, 1792, and the vote of Salem was: yea, 9; nay, 1. From this time down to the war of the Rebellion the records are rather monotonous and show little else than commonplace civil affairs. What matters of general interest can be culled from the remainder will follow under their respective heads.

CHAPTER LXXI.

SALEM.—(Continued.)

Ecclesiastical History, Etc.

Congregational Church.—Frequent allusion has been made to this church in giving the history of the old North Parish, as it was intimately connected with the affairs of the parish for several years. Its organization bears the date of Jan. 16, 1740, and took place in the dwelling-house of Rev. Abner Bayley. (This old house has since been owned by the late Isaiah Kelly, and is now owned and occupied by Nathan R. Bodwell, who has recently put it in thorough repair.) The frame of the first house of worship of this church was raised in 1738 and roofed over and enclosed the following year, and was first used for public worship in 1740. Rev. Abner Bayley was its first pastor, who was ordained Jan. 30, 1740, and continued as such for more than half a century. He died March 10, 1798, aged eighty-two years. His labors with the church were eminently successful, and he lived and died beloved and revered by all. In 1796, Rev. John Smith was invited by vote of the town to settle here in the work of the ministry. His answer is given below:

"SALEM, November 26, 1796.

"To the church and Inhabitants of the Town of Salem—Having received an invitation by your committee to settle with you in the Gospel ministry I have since made it a subject of serious and candid inquiry I hope I have consulted your best interest and the glory of God in forming my Judgment upon so important a subject—the unanimity of your choice I view as a weighty consideration in favor of my acceptance of your proposals for my temporal Support as I understand them I am willing to accept of, and viewing all circumstances as far as I am capable it appears to me that the call of Divine Providence concurs with the invitation of the church and Town—I do therefore in compliance with your request, freely consent to settle with you in the gospel ministry Trusting the Event with god who is able to overrule it for our mutual happiness and for his own glory—if it should be the will of the great Head of the church that the relation proposed should take place between us may it be for the honour of His name, for the Spiritual Edification of our Souls—from the past testimonies of your candour towards me I have great reason to expect that you will still continue to exercise that candour, forgiveness and charity for which you will frequently find occasion and I earnestly request your constant petitions at the Throne of Divine grace that I may faithfully discharge my duty as a minister of Christ that I may be furnished with every ministerial gift and qualification that god would bless his preached word and crown the ordinances of his gospel with success—That you may ever enjoy the smiles of our heavenly Father and be built up in holiness through faith in his Son shall Ever be the prayer of your humble Servant

"JOHN SMITH.

"P.S. Your proposals as I understand them are as follows—"Three hundred dollars settlement voted by the town—three hundred dollars subscribed by private gentlemen—three hundred dollars salary annually so long as I continue to preach in Salem common sickness excepted—and fifteen cords of wood annually brought to my door from the Parsonage (lot) or elsewhere and the use of the parsonage in said town while I continue in the ministry.—These are the Proposals upon which I accept of your invitation

"JOHN SMITH."

Mr. Smith was ordained and settled Jan. 4, 1797. He was dismissed Nov. 20, 1816, and died at Bangor, Me., April 7, 1831. Rev. William Baleh succeeded him, and was installed Dec. 1, 1819, and dismissed Aug. 6, 1835. He was followed by Rev. Jonas Fiske, who was ordained Sept. 9, 1840, and dismissed March 8, 1843. Rev. William Hayward was next employed for a time, closing his labors June 6, 1847. Rev. Daniel H. Babcock commenced preaching here Aug. 22, 1847, and continued till Sept. 15, 1849. Rev. John Lawrence began preaching here Nov. 1, 1849, and remained for a time. Rev. William Page preached his first sermon before the church Dec. 5, 1852, and was installed pastor Dec. 1, 1853, but on account of failing health he was dismissed Nov. 30, 1858. Rev. John Lawrence was again called to minister to the church in May, 1859, and remained till May 11, 1862. Rev. Joseph Tarleton supplied the pulpit from May 8 to Dec. 7, 1862. Rev. George W. Rogers began to supply the pulpit Jan. 11, 1863, as acting pastor, remaining till the beginning of 1869. Rev. Matthew A. Gates commenced his labors as acting pastor December, 1869, and remained till the close of 1872. Rev. Samuel Bowker began his labors as acting pastor July 1, 1873, and closed Dec. 31, 1879. Rev. George A. Perkins began his labors here as acting pastor May 30, 1880, and still remains. Mr. Perkins was formerly a missionary at Constantinople.

The present house of worship was built in 1840, and the old "meeting-house," which had done good service for a century, reverted to the town and was altered, and has ever since been used as the town-house. It had previously (1833) been removed from its original site a few rods easterly, and placed upon the school-house common. There are a few reminiscences preserved of the ancient church. The principal door was towards the river, two other doors, one at each end, also affording passage to the interior. The dimensions of the building are thirty-eight by forty feet. Rough temporary seats of plank sufficed until individuals built pews for their families, gradually completing "ye body of ye house." The exterior was plain and simple, no steeple adorned it, the windows were small and placed high up from the floor, the largest and most ornate one being back of the pulpit. The pulpit was lofty, and in looking at the preacher it required a painful inclination of the head and neck if prolonged for some time. The pews were roomy and deep, and the seats in them all turned up against the back of the pew, while the congregation were standing in devout prayer. The instant the pastor uttered the "Amen,"—click, click, click, was heard all over the house as the seats fell down in place for the weary worshippers.

No provision was made for warming the meeting-house; men, women, and children went to church in severe winter weather enduring the cold. Stoves and furnaces were unknown, and fireplaces were impracticable for large buildings. It was not till 1824 that a stove was put into the church. The hallowed and old-time features of the house are gone, but its massive oaken timbers are still strong and firm, and in shape and form it preserves a semblance of its former self. The present church is pleasantly located in Salem village, on the main street. It has been remodeled and improved, the building raised, and good vestries added. The audience room will seat two hundred and sixty persons. Church membership, fifty-two; Sunday-school scholars, fifty; volumes in library, three hundred and eighty-one. Officers of church: Moses A. Kelly and William P. Brooks, deacons; Edson Emerson, clerk and treasurer.

Methodist Episcopal Churches.—From the best sources of information on record it appears that Rev. George Pickering, presiding elder on Boston District of the New England Conference, visited Salem in May, 1805, and preached in the house of Nathaniel Woodman. In the fall of the same year Rev. Daniel Webb assisted Mr. Pickering for several Sabbaths, and then Rev. Alfred Medcalf regularly supplied one-half of the time till the following Conference.

In 1806 Salem was united with "Salisbury Circuit," which reached from Salisbury, Mass., to Salem, and included the intermediate towns. From this time till 1831 Salem was embraced in a circuit, and regularly supplied with preachers, as follows:

1806, Alfred Medcalf; 1807, Joseph A. Merrill; 1808, Wm. Stevens, A. Medcalf, Thos. Asbury; 1809, Asa Kent, Edw. Hyde, David Wentworth; 1810, Asa Kent, Benj. Sabin, John Jewett; 1811, John Williams, Orlando Hinds; 1812, Benj. F. Larrabee, O. Hinds; 1813, Leonard Frost, J. W. Hardy; 1814, L. Frost, Aaron Lummis; 1815, Ebenezer Blake, E. Marble; 1816, Philip Munger, John Briggs; 1817, Philip Munger; 1818, Bartholomew Otheman; 1819, O. Hinds; 1820, O. Hinds, J. P. Harvey; 1821, J. P. Harvey, D. Culver; 1822, D. Dorchester, Jas. Templeton; 1823, J. Randall, A. Buck; 1824, O. Hinds, A. Buck; 1825, J. Allen; 1826, H. Foster, Soreno Fiske; 1827, Lewis Bates; 1828, Lewis and Lemuel Harlow; 1829, L. Bennett; 1830, L. Bennett.

In 1831 the church in Salem had grown so that it was made a separate station, and the following ministers were sent and labored here:

1831–32, Samuel Norris; 1833, A. Brigham; 1834–35, Warren Wilbur.

In the year 1836 the parent church divided, the offshoot locating itself at North Salem, while the old society removed from the old meeting-house on Bluff Street to Salem village. They had just erected a new meeting-house in the village. The building vacated had served them twenty-one years. It was a plain wooden house, thirty-six feet square, and covered with a "hip roof." It stood at the foot of "Zion's Hill," near the house of Orlando Woodbury. The interior was neatly but cheaply finished. The pulpit was high; and in place of pews plank seats with a straight back were used, the men sitting on one side of the house and the women on the other. It accommodated about two hundred and fifty persons comfortably, yet many more used to crowd in on Quarterly Conference days, when the concourse was always so great that none but women could be seated, and the men stood outside at doors and windows, eager to hear the word of life. People from Sandown, Hampstead, Plaistow, and other towns attended these meetings. The old house was sold in 1840 to Col. John R. Wheeler, and a portion of it now stands in Salem village as a dwelling-house.

Resuming the account of the original society we give a list of its pastors: 1836–37, Jacob Stevens;

1838, S. Cushing; 1839, O. G. Smith; 1840-41, Matthew Newhall; 1842-43, A. M. Osgood; 1844-45, J. L. Slason; 1846-47, A. C. Manson; 1848-49, C. C. Burr; 1850-51, William D. Cass; 1852, William Hewes; 1853-54, G. W. T. Rogers; 1855, Justin Spalding; 1856-57, J. L. Trefren; 1858-59, Elihu Scott; 1860, G. W. H. Clark; 1861, Lewis Howard; 1862, W. H. Jones; 1863-64, Israel Taggart; 1865-66, O. H. Call; 1867-69, Theodore L. Flood; 1870-71, David W. Downs; 1872, Abram R. Lunt; 1873-74, Henry Dorr; 1875-77, A. C. Coult; 1878, N. P. Phillbrook; 1879-81, Eben C. Berry; 1882, W. C. Bartlett.

This society rebuilt and enlarged its church in 1872. Spacious vestries were added, a new tower and spire erected, the pews remodeled, and organ loft and choir improved. The organ is one of the largest pipe-organs in use in country churches, and is an instrument of great power and capacity. The church property with parsonage in good repair is valued at eight thousand dollars. The Sunday-school is in a flourishing condition and has one hundred and six scholars, and has four hundred and twenty-five volumes in the library. Church membership, eighty-one.

The officers of the church are as follows: Stewards, John C. Ewins, Nathan G. Abbott, Abraham H. Merrill, Charles O. Kelly, Frank T. Kelly, Charles W. Chase, George Wilson, Francis B. Kelly, Silas Carey, Joseph Webster; Trustees, John W. Wheeler, William B. Ayer, Nathan G. Abbott, Francis B. Kelly, William W. Smith, Charles O. Kelly, Charles H. Ayer, George C. Howard, M.D., Andrew Lewis; Sunday-school Superintendent, Charles H. Ayer.

THE NORTH SALEM METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH was built in 1836 in that village. It was repaired during the pastorate of Rev. J. B. Holman. Valuation, twenty-two hundred dollars; seating capacity, two hundred and fifty; number of Sunday-school scholars, thirty; volumes in library, two hundred and twenty; church membership, twenty-eight.

Following is a list of pastors: 1836, Warren Willour; 1837-38, R. H. Spalding; 1839-40, Samuel Prescott; 1841-42, Warren Willour; 1843, J. S. J. Gridley; 1844-45, C. E. M. Woodward; 1846-47, Benjamin D. Brewster; 1848, James Adams; 1849-50, R. Tilton; 1851-52, Benjamin R. Hoyt; 1853-54, — Stewart; 1855-56, L. H. Gordon; 1857-59, Abraham Folsom; 1860, Samuel Beedle; 1861-62, William H. Thomas; 1863, J. W. Adams; 1864-65, J. B. Holman; 1866-68, Eleazer Smith; 1869-70, Joel A. Steele; 1871, A. Folsom; 1872-73, S. J. Robinson; 1874-75, William Stuart; 1876-77, George C. Powell; 1878, supplied; 1879, George H. Hastings; 1880-81, George W. Bazell; 1882, supplied.

PLEASANT STREET METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH is situated in the thriving and beautiful village of Salem Depot. It is centrally located, and its congregations are full and the society prosperous. The church edifice was erected in 1861, at a cost of three thousand five hundred dollars. It has a fine parsonage, valued at two thousand dollars. The church will seat three hundred persons. Sunday-school scholars, one hundred and twenty-eight; volumes in library, four hundred; church membership, one hundred.

The following are the church officers: Stewards, Walter Woodbury, George W. Thom, Isaac Woodbury, W. W. Haseltine, George Woodbury, Charles Kimball, Isaac Thom, Frank Kimball; Trustees, George Woodbury, Charles Kimball, Rev. R. Dearborn, Eben B. Wells, Isaac Thom, Isaac Woodbury, George W. Thom, D. D. Fisk, Silas Hall.

Following is a list of the pastors: Luther T. Townsend, D.D., D. C. Babcock, John Carrier, J. W. Guernsey, Nelson M. Bailey, Reuben Dearborn, J. H. Haynes, A. W. Bunker, C. M. Dinsmore, O. P. Wright.

First Baptist Church.—This church is at Salem Depot, situated east of the railroad, and is a neat and commodious structure, and was built in 1869, and remodeled in 1875 at a total cost of four thousand dollars, seating two hundred and fifty persons. Rev. P. Richardson, Rev. John McKinley, and Rev. Edward Mills served the interests of the society while it was a mission station of the First Baptist Church in Lawrence, Mass., from the year 1858 to 1865. Rev. C. H. Cole was recognized as pastor April 25, 1866, and served till July, 1867. Rev. E. A. Whittemore became pastor in May, 1873. He was succeeded by Rev. A. S. Stowell Aug. 1, 1875, who remained until the fall of 1880. The present pastor, Rev. M. N. Reed, began his labors with the church July 30, 1881. The Sunday-school has fifty scholars and two hundred and twenty volumes in its library; church membership, sixty-four. Officers of the church: Pastor, Rev. M. N. Reed; Deacons, T. C. Adams, A. E. Goodwin; Clerk, A. E. Goodwin; Treasurer, E. A. Goodwin.

In the year 1818, Moses Dow left by will for the support of Methodism in Salem the sum of two thousand dollars. On the division of the society, in 1836, the North Salem Society retained and made use of it, claiming that they were the Methodist Church as constituted at the time of the bequest. The society at Salem village, through Rev. J. L. Slason, preacher in charge, brought suit against the other society for an equal division of the money, after trying in vain to induce the agent of the fund to accede to this plan. It was tried at the Court of Common Pleas in February, 1847, and a verdict given for plaintiff. The defendant moved a new trial, also an arrest of judgment, and carried the case to the Superior Court, which affirmed the previous decision, and on May 31, 1848, appears the record of a receipt from Mr. Alexander Gordon, agent of the Dow fund, in favor of Ebenezer Saunders and others, trustees of the First Methodist Episcopal Church or Society in Salem, N. H., of the sum of nine hundred and fifteen dollars and ninety-four cents.

The great revival of 1820, under the labors of Rev.

O. Hinds, was a remarkable religious movement. Upwards of eighty conversions took place, chiefly of persons of mature years. The late John A. Wheeler, Esq., father of Hon. John W. Wheeler, was one of the first converts. Three young men, natives of the town, were awakened and converted within a short time of each other, and all three felt divinely called to enter the ministry, which they did in a short time. These are Abraham D. Merrill, Samuel Kelly, and Caleb Duston. The first was the son of Maj. Joshua Merrill, a respected and influential man, and for many years kept the old tavern at the junction of the Atkinson and Haverhill roads. He was born March 7, 1796. He was remarkable in his boyhood for his strength and muscular powers, and was capable of performing farm work, or engaging in the rough sports of the time, and successfully competing with full-grown men. At his thirteenth year few champions cared to wrestle with him, and he became the special pet of the arena in upholding the honor of the town against strangers, who often came to try conclusions at arms length. He was of a peaceful, diffident disposition, and shrank from public notice, but was generally coaxed to enter the lists by his admiring friends. He possessed a strong, rich voice, and was noted for his proficiency in vocal music, and taught it in Salem and adjoining towns when a young man. After entering the ministry, at twenty-six years of age, he went to Landaff Circuit with his friend and townsman, Rev. Samuel Kelly, in June, 1822. This circuit was mostly in Grafton County, and embraced fourteen towns, and was two hundred and fifty miles around it. It took thirty-one days to complete the circuit, and they preached every day and held class-meetings. The old "circuit riders" bore the privations of a scanty support and the toils of incessant labors with holy enthusiasm and success. A horse and saddle-bags, Bible and hymn-book were their outfit. They preached and sung and prayed, winning souls and building up new churches. In 1828, Mr. Merrill left the circuit, and was sent to Massachusetts, and his remaining years were spent there chiefly. He was stationed in Boston twice, Lowell three times, Cambridge twice, Lynn three times, Providence, R. I., Springfield twice, Chelsea, and other places. He was married in 1817 to Nancy Morrison, daughter of Robert Morrison, of Windham, N. H., by whom he had eight children,—six sons and two daughters. Five of the sons are still living, the author of this history being of the number. He died in Dorchester District, Boston, April 29, 1878, in the eighty-third year of his age, and fifty-sixth of his ministry.

Rev. Samuel Kelly is of the fifth generation from John Kelley, who came from Newbury, Berkshire, England, and settled in Newbury, Mass., in 1635. His great-grandfather, Richard Kelly, settled in Salem. The subject of this sketch was the son of Richard Kelly. His mother, Sibbel (Fletcher) Kelly, was the daughter of Rev. Samuel Fletcher, a Baptist minister, settled in Salem. The homestead is on the Derry road, and is now occupied by Asa Kelly. He was born Feb. 1, 1802. His father died when he was thirteen years old, and he lived with his uncle and worked on the farm and carpentering. He was converted at the age of fourteen, but his enjoyment soon ceased, and at the great revival in 1820 he felt himself in need of a new consecration. After a great struggle he gave himself anew to God, and found peace and acceptance. He now thought to fit himself for his life-work in the ministry by a nine years' course of study,—two years at Atkinson Academy, four years at Dartmouth College, and three years at Andover Seminary. But the exigencies of Methodism required his immediate service, and he reluctantly abandoned the proposed studies and went to work. His first appointment was on Landaff Circuit, with A. D. Merrill, as we have previously noticed. Subsequently he preached in Vermont on large circuits (Sutton, Montpelier, and Lyndon), Sandwich, Gilmanton, Northfield, Newmarket, Concord, Nashua, Portsmouth, Bristol, N. H., Charleston, Newburyport, Waltham, Lynn, Boston, Quincy, Mass. He also served as chaplain in the State prison at Concord, N. H., two years, and at four sessions or years in the New Hampshire Legislature, and one year as chaplain in the Vermont militia, and eleven years as chaplain of the "National Soldier's Home," Quincy, Mass. He was married twice, first, to Mary A., youngest daughter of John Sherburne, of Concord, N. H., May 17, 1827. She died Nov. 29, 1828, leaving an infant daughter, now the wife of Andrew S. Smith, Esq., of Concord. His second marriage was with Euline Robinson, daughter of Abednego Robinson, of Portsmouth. By this marriage they had seven children, all deceased except the youngest, Samuel R., who graduated at Wesleyan University, Middletown, Conn., and is professor and teacher of elocution in the New England Conservatory of Music, Boston. Rev. Mr. Kelly is now residing at Quincy, Mass., and is a hale and vigorous octogenarian, having entered upon the eighty-first stage of his life. He labors as hard as ever, studying, preaching, pastoral work, etc. His name has been on the roll of the New England Conference for sixty years, and has done effective service for the cause of God and the church.

Rev. Caleb Duston was born in Salem, N. H., May 4, 1796. He was converted at the age of sixteen years, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church. When twenty-one, dissatisfied with his Christian experience and life, he sought the Lord anew, and received a blessing with which came the spirit's call to the ministry. In 1822 he joined the New England Conference, and was twenty-five years an itinerant preacher, and fought in the years of "Methodism's age of chivalry," when every preacher was "a mounted knight armed with Paul's penoply and a commission from the great Captain, with the Word of God and Methodism's doctrines and songs." His appointments were as follows: Bridgewater, Landaff, Canaan, and Lebanon, Norwich, Vt., Barnard, Vt., Oxford and Haverhill, Manchester, Henniker, Guilford, Vt., Wilmington, Vt., Milton, Seabrook, Kingston, Epping, Sandown, and Goffstown. He married, in 1817, Eliza (Kelly) Duston. Of his family we know but little. His son, Isaiah A. Duston, resides in Derry, and is deputy sheriff for Rockingham and Hillsborough Counties. In 1848 he located in Derry, N. H., and died suddenly, without warning, Feb. 9, 1873. His last testimony was satisfactory. In it he spoke of his Christian experience as a definite and gracious reality, and he doubtless answered his Master's call with joy.

Rev. John M. Merrill was the oldest son of Rev. A. D. Merrill, and was born in Salem, N. H., Nov. 2, 1819. He was fifteen years an effective minister of the New England Conference, and was stationed at Spencer, Winchendon, Weston, West Springfield, Newburyport, and other places. Failing health compelled a change, and he entered business life in the employment of the Downer Kerosene Oil Company, in Boston, and Corry, Pa., and was superintendent of the works at South Boston at the time of his decease. He married Mary Ann Bassett Partridge Hill, of Holliston, Mass., by whom he had nine children. He died in Boston, March 17, 1881, aged sixty-two years.

Schools.—The earliest school kept in town was in the winter of 1744-45, and lasted two months. The schools were kept very irregularly from this time till 1800, probably not more than every other winter at best. In 1800 the town set off nine districts, and it was not long before as many schools were opened, and continued regularly year by year ever since. The names of ninety-one masters and twenty-nine mistresses appear on the records. In 1826, Rev. William Balch was chosen superintendent of schools, it being the first instance in the town's history. The report of the superintendent of schools for last year furnishes the following: Districts, 10; scholars (winter terms), 170; average attendance, 159; value of school-houses, etc., $7000.

Organizations, Associations, etc.—Spicket Lodge, No. 85, A. F. and A. M., was chartered on the 10th of June, 1868, A. L. 5868, by the Most Worshipful Grand Lodge of New Hampshire. It worked under a dispensation granted by Worthy Grand Master John R. Rowell, Jan. 7, 5868, empowering it to work under the above name. On the 3d of September the lodge was regularly consecrated by Deputy Grand Master Stanly, under direction of Most Worshipful Grand Master Alexander M. Winn. The original members and petitioners for the charter are George K. Whitney, Matthew H. Taylor, James Ayer, George C. Gordon, John H. Lancaster, Joseph Webster, John R. Wheeler, Theodore L. Flood, C. A. Bradley, George W. Lowell, B. R. Wheeler, George N. Austin, John S. Whittaker, Thomas Duston, John Halliwell, Lewis A. Hunt, L. W. Taylor, Giles Bennett, George H. Taylor, George Lightfoot, S. T. Newell, Eleazer Smith, A. S. Hill, C. C. Talbot, N. M. Bailey, James A. Troy, R. A. Tilton, John W. Wheeler, Richard Taylor, D. N. Russ, William H. Woodbury, Levi Cluff, John H. Havey, E. G. Duston, and George W. Rogers. Its organization under charter took place Nov. 26, 5868, with George K. Whitney, W. M., and James Ayer, Sec., and Rev. C. A. Bradley, Chaplain. Its present officers are Levi Cluff, W. M.; C. T. Maxwell, S. W.; William R. Wheeler, J. W.; L. W. Taylor, Treas.; James Ayer, Sec.; Henry Strong, S. D.; J. Q. Cluff, J. D.; George W. Palmer, S. S.; David Sloan, J. S.; N. G. Abbott, Chaplain; B. R. Wheeler, Marshal; Joseph Webster, Pursuivant; R. A. Tilton, Organizer; John R. Wheeler, Tyler; James Ayer, Rep. to G. L. Past Masters to date of March 25, 1882: 1st, G. K. Whitney; 2d, J. A. Troy; 3d, George C. Gordon; 4th, D. N. Russ; 5th, George C. Howard; 6th, B. R. Wheeler; 7th, George C. Gordon. Membership to date, 67. The Masonic Association have built a fine hall for the use of the lodge, and also have beneath it a public hall and store which they rent.

Rockingham Commandery, No. 191, U. O. G. C., was instituted June 16, 1880, by J. H. Morgan, D. S. C., and George C. Howard as Noble Commander, and James Ayer, Noble Keeper of Records, were installed, together with a full list of officers. The order confers a sick and death benefit, the latter ranging from five hundred to ten thousand dollars; admits ladies to membership. No person is eligible but those of sound health, good moral character, temperate, and competent to earn a livelihood. Entrance fees, ten dollars. Dr. G. C. Howard, Medical Examiner. Its present officers are, R. Coburn, N. C.; Mrs. E. A. Kelly, V. N. C.; J. Ayer, W. P.; Mrs. S. A. Martin, N. K. of R.; G. C. Howard, F. K. of R.; J. A. Martin, Treas.; John F. Hall, W. H.; Mrs. L. A. Ayer, W. I. G.; Charles B. Smith, W. O. G.; Winfield S. Senter, P. N. C. Present membership, twenty, with applications pending.

The Provident Mutual Relief Association, Sub-association No. 44, numbers seventeen members, with several applications pending. It secures its members a benefit at death for the relief and assistance of loved ones left behind. Its charter is dated Dec. 6, 1879. Officers: James Ayer, Clerk; George C. Howard, M. D., Medical Examiner; C. I. Bowker, S. B. Goodrich, and B. R. Wheeler, Trustees.

Granite Colony, No. 11, United Order Pilgrim Fathers, was instituted March 6, 1880, and at its organization Rev. Alfred S. Stowell was installed Governor, and Charles B. Smith, Secretary. It met at Salem Depot, and is reported to be in a flourishing condition. Present membership, forty-nine. Its officers are M. P. Thompson, Governor; N. J. Webster, Lieutenant-Governor; C. B. Smith, Sec.; George P. Ramsdell, Coll.; W. W. Merrill, Treas.; R. H. McDonald, Chap.; William F. Rowell, Sergeant-at-Arms; Hattie A. Hunt, Dep. Sergeant-at-Arms; Lydia A. Howe, S. of I. G.; J. A. Troy, S. of O. G.; Sidney P. Gage, ex-Governor.

Salem Temperance Reform Club was organized and established in 1875, and has continued to be a powerful factor in the work of temperance. It meets twice a month in the Methodist Vestry, Salem village. Present officers: C. L. Silver, President; G. Wilson, C. O. Kelly, and Mrs. C. H. Ayer, Vice-Presidents; Olive Carey, Secretary; and E. G. Sloan, Treasurer.

The industrial statistics of Salem are not as complete as the importance of this history demands, but we present them as well as possible.

The Methuen Company's Granite Quarries. formerly Gage's, are in the western part of the town, and are rented and worked by David S. Crockett. He employs at present fifteen men and ten stone-cutters, and produces stone to the value of eight thousand dollars yearly. These quarries are by no means fully developed, the quantity of stone being well-nigh inexhaustible. The stone is of a light, bright, and clear color, and when hammered presents a brilliant and fine appearance. It works to a very fine edge without crumbling, which adapts it admirably for the finest carving or decorative work.

Mills and Lumber.—On Hittitity brook, near Bluff Street, is an old saw-mill, which has been in active use for many years, and a large amount of lumber sawn. It is now owned and operated by William G. Crowell, Esq., is supplied with good and improved machinery for the various branches of work carried on. Value of buildings, machinery, etc., five thousand dollars. Employs ten hands, and produces five hundred thousand feet of lumber annually, at an approximate value of six thousand dollars.

Hon. Matthew H. Taylor has a saw- and grist-mill on Spicket River, North Salem, and is doing a good business in the manufacture of lumber. He was formerly largely engaged in the production of woollen goods, and had a factory and many operatives employed. A disastrous fire consumed the mill, since which time the valuable mill privilege has remained unimproved, and the village has suffered from the consequent inaction.

Hon. John W. Wheeler has just completed a fine mill, located on the mill privilege first obtained and used by John Allen, nearly a century ago, midway between North Salem and the old village on Spicket River. He manufactures frocking and flannels. We could not get the statistics of his business, which is probably greater than that of any other firm in Salem.

Thomas Dunston, Esq., has a woollen yarn mill on Spicket River, North Salem. He also makes gents' socks, gloves, and mittens a specialty. Value of buildings, machinery, etc., ten thousand dollars. Employs, twenty, and produces ten thousand pounds of yarn, five thousand dozens of gloves and mittens annually, at a value of twenty thousand dollars.

John F. Hall is a manufacturer of carriages, etc., at Salem village. He has a two-story and basement brick building, erected in 1877, well furnished with the requisite machinery, tools, etc., of his trade. Uses steam-power. He is also a dealer in agricultural implements.

The shoe business has been and still is to some extent carried on in Salem. Until his recent closure, W. H. H. Kelly had the largest manufactory in town, occupying Wheeler's brick building in the village, and employing about one hundred hands, using steam-power, and turning out a fine grade of work.

Thornton M. Russ has a shop at the "Centre," and employs seventeen hands, uses steam-power, and does a fair line of business. Oliver G. Woodbury's shoeshop is on Bluff near his residence. It runs steadily, employs fifteen or twenty hands, and uses steam. There are one or two small shops running at the Depot villages.

The Evans Artificial Leather Company have their manufactory at Salem Depot, built in 1880. It stands just west of the tracks of the Manchester and Lawrence Railroad. The four buildings are of brick, the main building being one hundred and twenty feet long, thirty feet wide, and three stories high, with an annex sixty feet long and thirty feet wide, of one story. The engine and boiler-house is fifty-five feet long and seventeen feet wide, and contains a fine engine of fifty-horse power, and two boilers. Between this and the main building, under the railway, is a large "boiler" for condensing waste steam. There is a fire-proof store-house located near the railroad tracks, and stables, coal-sheds, etc.

The grounds are tastefully laid out with lawns and macadamized paths and roadways. All goods are received and shipped to the cars by a private track connecting the works and railroad. A. C. Barstow is superintendent, employs twenty-five hands constantly. Capital, five hundred thousand dollars; produces six hundred thousand yards of artificial leather annually. Estimated market value, four hundred and fifty thousand dollars. Cost of buildings, machinery, etc., sixty thousand dollars. Uses four hundred tons of coal, and two thousand barrels of naphtha a year. Boston office, 92 Pearl Street; C. A. Evans, agent.

There are two grocery-stores at the "Centre" village, kept by N. G. Abbott and C. L. Bowker. The latter is postmaster, and the post-office is at his store in "Masonic Building." At Salem Depot are two stores, kept by J. C. Carey and W. A. Kimball. The post-office is at the railroad station; J. A. Troy, postmaster. North Salem has one store, kept by Levi W. Taylor. There are no public-houses in Salem, the hotels that formerly graced or disgraced the town having been closed for some two or three years. There are, however, two places open to transient guests, one at the "Centre" and the other at Salem Depot, kept by Francis B. Kelly and George Woodbury, respectively. They are private homes, but any who may chance to share of their hospitalities and comforts will enjoy the quiet and peaceful content seldom experienced in taverns. It is perhaps needless to add that these households are highly respected, temperate, and Christian families.

Military Record, 1861-65.—List of names of soldiers credited to the town of Salem in the war of the Rebellion, 1861-65. The town records are very meagre and faulty and uncertain. This list has been made from the best obtainable sources, and as far as it goes may be relied on as correct. Owing to the great difficulty in getting particulars of enlistment, service, etc., it is deemed best to confine the list to the names simply.

CHAPTER LXVII.

CIVIL HISTORY.

As setting forth the degree of influence and prominence certain citizens of the township have reached, as well as estimating public worth, as usually expressed by the inhabitants of rural towns, there follows a complete record of the selectmen of Salem, year by year, from the earliest period to the present time, those from 1743 to 1749 being for the old district of Methuen:

- 1743.—Daniel Peaslee, Henry Sanders, Isaac Clough.
1744.—Nathaniel Dow, Daniel Cress, Henry Sanders.
1745.—Henry Sanders, Nathaniel Dow, William Richardson.
1746.—Daniel Peaslee, Henry Sanders, William Richardson.
1747.—Henry Sanders, Nathaniel Dow, Richard Kimball.
1748.—Henry Sanders, John Ober, John Hall.
1749.—Daniel Peaslee, William Sanders, Peter Merrill.
1750.—Salem incorporated, Nathaniel Dow, Seth Patten, John Ober, Jonathan Wheeler, Richard Dow.
1751.—Ebenezer Ayer, Benjamin Wheeler, Edward Clark.
1752.—Obadiah Eastman, Peter Merrill, Ebenezer Woodbury.

- 1753.—Daniel Peaslee, Timothy Johnson, Joseph Wright.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

J. W. WHEELER.

J. W. Wheeler is the son of John A. Wheeler and May Stevens, his wife, who was a daughter of Rev. William Stevens, a Methodist minister of Massachusetts. He is the fourth in line from Jonathan Wheeler, of whom little is known. Richard was the second, and John A. the third, who was married April 22, 1822. Two children were born, both of whom are now living, Abraham M., who is a Methodist minister, living in Vermont, and the subject of this sketch, who was born in the town of Salem, N. H., Aug. 19, 1826. He was educated at the New Hampshire Conference Seminary, at Tilton, N. H. He left school at the age of twenty-one, and assisted in the management of his father's farm, which was one of the largest in that part of the State. Two years after leaving school, when in his twenty-third year, he was united in marriage to Phebe, daughter of Richard Dow, of Windham, N. H., a descendant of one of the earliest families who inhabited New England.

They were married Dec. 27, 1849. There were born to them three children, two of whom are living. Minnie A., their first child, was born Oct. 16, 1852, and died July 1, 1863; William R. was born Jan. 20, 1854; Ethel May was born Dec. 3, 1871.

Mr. Wheeler continued in the management of his father's farm until he was thirty-three years old, when he entered into copartnership with James W. Bailey in the purchase of the woolen-factory that occupied the site of the extensive buildings now owned by himself. At the end of the first year Mr. Wheeler sold his interest to Charles Austin. After a lapse of two years he again bought the concern with George Austin. In 1864 he purchased Mr. Austin's interest, and has since carried on the business alone. In 1879 the factory was burned to the ground. The fire broke out in the daytime, and the building and contents were consumed.

With characteristic energy Mr. Wheeler set about the erection of a new mill, which was completed in a short time. The structure is of brick, located on a never-failing water-power, and contains the latest improved machinery. The goods manufactured are frockings and flannels. In 1861 he was elected selectman, which position he occupied for two years. He was then elected representative, in which capacity he served four years. He was then elected senator, serving two years. In 1881 he was elected a member of the Governor's Council, which position he now fills. Mr. Wheeler never sought political preferment, his attention being devoted to his extensive business. But "his qualifications and peculiar fitness to fill positions of public trust," to quote the language of another, are such as to attract the attention of the public, whose confidence he retains to the fullest extent.

In private life, Mr. Wheeler is especially characterized by modest and unassuming manners, strong social feeling, and warm friendship for a large circle of admiring friends. In public life he is ever the courteous gentleman to all, and a faithful and devoted servant to public interests.

OBADIAH DUSTON

is a direct descendant of the Dustons, who figured so conspicuously in the early history of Haverhill, Mass. He is the fourth in line of descent from Thomas Duston, who was the husband of Hannah Duston, to whose memory a life-size statue holding a tomahawk in its right hand in an attitude of defense is standing in the park in Haverhill. (See history of Haverhill.)

Thomas Duston, the founder of the New Hampshire branch of the family, purchased a tract of three hundred acres of land in North Salem, N. H., on which he settled his three sons,—Thomas, Obadiah, and Caleb. David, the son of Obadiah, and father of the subject of this sketch, married his cousin, Abiah Duston, and to them seven children were born, as follows: Ruth, Abial, Thomas, David, Obadiah, Mary, and Ebenezer.

Obadiah is the sole survivor of this large family. He was born Dec. 5, 1806. He lived at home until he was twenty-five years old, assisting his father on the farm. He attended the academy at Atkinson, where he was a schoolmate of Rev. Jesse Page and Dr. Cogswell, both of whom are now living. Mr. Duston was married in 1831 to Anne Whitaker, of Haverhill, Mass. The result of this union was six children.—Hannah, Ruth, Harriet, Thomas, Elizabeth, and Lorin. But three are now living, as follows: Hannah, who married John Hallowell, of California, no issue; Harriett, who married John N. Hunt, of Bradford, Mass., to whom four children were born; Thomas married Augusta Griffin, of Hampstead, N. H., they have no children living. Mr. Duston's first business venture was keeping the town poor, teaching school in the mean time. He then took up the farm on which he now resides, and engaged in the manufacture of lumber, which he followed a number of years. He held the office of selectman of the town five years, and has been justice of the peace forty years, which position he still occupies. In 1825 he was promoted to be captain of artillery in the militia from sergeant, being then but nineteen years old. He possesses in a remarkable degree the traits of his hardy ancestors, is now in the seventy-sixth year of his age, enjoys vigorous health, and possesses a perfectly sound set of teeth. He was never addicted to the use of tobacco in any form, and always devoted his energies to the prosecution of his business, the result of which is a competency to lean upon in his declining years. His only son, Thomas, is engaged in the manufacture of knit goods, the factory being located on the home farm.

Mr. Duston's first wife died Feb. 10, 1870. For his second wife he married Fidelia Cook, widow of Edward Cook; she died Aug. 24, 1876. The picture from which the accompanying portrait was made was taken about fourteen years ago. Time has dealt gently with him, and he bids fair to be left in possession of his remarkable vigor for a number of years. Politically he is a member of the Democratic party, and is an earnest exponent of its principles. Though not a member of any church or denomination, he has been liberal in his patronage, always assisting when needed in the building of church edifices in his town.

LUTHER EMERSON, M.D.

Prominent among the citizens in the earlier history and growth of Salem, N. H., as a town after its separation from the North Parish of Methuen, Mass., was Dr. Luther Emerson, who lived and practiced during his whole professional life of more than thirty-five years in this place.

Born in Chelmsford, Mass., April 18, 1785, the son of Deacon Owen Emerson, a farmer and mechanic of that place. Inheriting from childhood a slender constitution and subject to the asthma, which unfitted him for the toils of the farm, he inclined to school and study, and after trying in vain to learn the cabinet-maker's trade, while endeavoring in his leisure hours to improve his mind by books, till at last, under the direction of Dr. Wiman, he began the study of medicine. After attending the full course of lectures at Dartmouth, N. H., and receiving his medical diploma, he began the practice of his profession in Salem, N. H., in the fall of 1807, and boarded at Mrs. N. Bodwell's, in what is now the old village near the common, making his first visit in the place on what was then called "The Cold Friday," to the house of Mr. B. Kimball.

For the first twelve years, in which he served as dentist in part, he rode horseback, feeling too poor to purchase a carriage, while the horse caused him to run in debt seventy-five dollars. Increasing practice and the strictest economy enabled him soon to secure a little home, on the site of which now stands the residence of Mrs. William Kelley. He married, in 1811, Patience Wood, of Draut, Mass., who bore him thirteen children, nine of whom were living at his death.

He was the first physician that lived and practiced in the place, and his lifelong work there gives proof of his continued success. His reputation and success had occasioned him to be known in an extended circle of practice, which embraced in part the towns of Windham, Pelham, Derry, Hudson, Atkinson, and Methuen, in Massachusetts. He served for many years as agent for the insane asylum at Somerville, Mass., in receiving patients for the same. He took a deep interest in the common-school education of his own children and in the school welfare of the town, and served seventeen successive years on its board of school committee.

"He was marked, says one of the oldest and reliable citizens of the village, for his skill and success as a doctor, for his originality of mind, uprightness of character and dealing, strength of will, and independence of thought and expression."

Failing health, after a long professional life, inclined him to give his practice into the hands of younger men, though much to the regret of many older families who had known no other physician.

A few weeks before his death he stated that he should live just one year from the death of his wife, which, he said, would be the 26th of July, 1844, and on that very day he died, in the sixtieth year of his age.

Six children now survive him,—Luther, the oldest, who has been a teacher for many years, now resides in Haverhill, Mass.; Julia A., the wife of O. T. Emerson, Esq., of Haverhill, Mass.; Joseph W., who has always lived on the old homestead; Rufus, a graduate of Amherst and Andover, is a Congregational minister; John, a carpenter and house-builder in Boston; and Charles B., a druggist for many years in Haverhill, Mass.

SANDOWN.

Geographical—Topographical—Early Settlements—Petition for Town Privileges—Incorporation of Town—Names of Early Settlers—First Ministers—Churches—Railroad

THIS town lies southwest of the centre of the county, and is bounded as follows: on the north by Chester and Fremont, on the east by Danville, on the south by Hampstead, and on the west by Derry and Chester.

The surface of the town is uneven but generally fertile.

There are several ponds in the town, the largest of which is Phillips, lying in the southern part. It is about 340 rods long and 200 wide. Angle Pond in the southeast part, lying partly in the town and partly in Hampstead, is about 200 rods in length and 100 in width. The principal stream is Squamscot River.

Sandown was settled in about the year 1736, and among the pioneers were Moses Tucker, Israel and James Huse, James Graves, Thomas Wells. (See list below).

Sandown was originally a part of Kingston, and was incorporated April 6, 1756. The first vote of the town of Kingston on this subject of which we have any record is under date of Sept. 24, 1764, as follows:

The first minister (Congregational) was Rev. Joseph Cotton, who was ordained in 1759, and died in 1780. Rev. Samuel Collins settled in 1781, and left in 1788. Rev. John Webber settled in 1795, and removed in 1800.

The Worcester and Nashua Railroad passes through the town.

The Congregational Society was organized in 1759, and the meeting-house was built by the town in 1774. The edifice is forty-four by fifty feet. The inside has a quaint appearance, with its tall pulpit, the top of which is eleven feet above the floor, and above which is the sounding-board seven and one-half feet square, and nineteen feet above the floor. Directly in front of the pulpit were the deacons' seats, made of two-inch plank, where the good fathers sat and shouted their fervent "amens." There are sixteen pews in the centre of the house, and twenty-one wall pews, the former being six and one-half feet square, and the latter half a foot shorter. The sunlight comes through seven-by-nine glass, twenty-eight lights to each window. There are three ten-paneled double doors, and wrought-iron hand-made nails were used in building the structure, both outside and inside. Six marble columns support the gallery, in which are twenty pews, six feet square, and in front of which are four seats made of three-inch plank. The panels in front of the gallery are twenty inches wide by four feet long. The frame is all of white-oak; the braces in the frame are three by ten inches; the beams are ten by twelve inches; the rafters are eight by ten inches, doubled, one foot apart, with a post between, and the corner posts are twenty-eight feet high and twelve inches square.

CHAPTER LXXIV.

SEABROOK.

Geographical—Topographical—First Settlements—Indian Depredations—Prominent Citizens—Dearborn Academy—Churches—Civil History—Incorporation—Financial Condition of Town—Military Record.

THE TOWN of Seabrook lies in the southeastern part of the county, and is bounded as follows: on the north by Hampton Falls, on the east by the Atlantic Ocean, on the south by Salisbury, Mass., and on the west by South Hampton and Kensington. The early history of this town will be found principally in the history of Hampton, of which Seabrook originally formed a part. The early record history, Revolutionary, names of early settlers, etc., are incorporated in the history of the mother-town. Seabrook is an ocean town, and has extensive plains of salt marsh. The soil is light and very productive. The inhabitants are engaged in agriculture and the manufacture of shoes. The latter industry is extensively carried on.

The first settlement of the town dates back to 1638, and among the pioneers were Christopher Hussey, Joseph Dow, and Thomas Philbrick. The early settlers of this town suffered greatly from the depredations of the Indians. For a long period the people were in a constant state of alarm, and many of the prominent citizens were inhumanly massacred. Among those killed were Thomas Lancaster, Jonathan Green, Nicholas Bond, a child named Brown, and the Widow Mussey. The latter was a prominent member of the Society of Friends, and distinguished as a public speaker. The Indians finally disappeared from their ocean hunting-grounds, and peace settled over the struggling pioneers.

Among the prominent men who have resided within this town Meshech Weare stands pre-eminent. He was the first chief magistrate of New Hampshire. His grandfather, Nathaniel Weare, was an agent to prosecute the complaints against the Royal Governor, Edward Cranfield, and spent some time in England. His son Nathaniel, father of Meshech, was also a prominent citizen. Both resided within the limits of the present town of Seabrook. Edward Gove, a resident of the town, was a member of the Assembly which Cranfield dissolved. He distinguished himself by opposition to the Cranfield government, and was arrested and convicted of high treason, sent to England, and imprisoned in the Tower of London. At the expiration of three years he was pardoned and returned to Seabrook.

Dearborn Academy was founded in 1854, by Edward Dearborn, an eminent physician and distinguished citizen of Seabrook. He endowed it with fifteen thousand dollars. It is located in the pleasant village of Seabrook, and commands a delightful view of the ocean and the surrounding country.

There are three churches in this town, besides one (Congregational) on the line, viz.: Congregational, Baptist, and Methodist. The first minister of the town was Rev. Samuel Parley, ordained in 1765, and removed in 1775. Rev. Elias Hull settled in 1779, and died in 1822.

Civil History.—Seabrook was granted to Jonathan Weare and others in 1768.

Baptist Church.—The house of worship now occupied by the Baptist Church in Seabrook was erected in 1763, at which date the Baptist Church in Newton was the only one of that order in the State of New Hampshire. It is recorded that its timbers came from six different towns, probably being contributed by persons residing in those different places. This house was erected by the Presbyterians, and occupied by them until about the close of the last century. Rev. Mr. Perley was pastor from 1765 to 1775, at an annual "salary of fifty pounds sterling, besides house, garden, and keeping for horse and cow." The old parsonage is still standing, and now occupied as the dwelling of Mr. David Boyd.

Rev. Elias Hull, a Congregationalist, was installed as pastor in 1799, and continued in that relation until 1817. Seabrook was then a part of Hampton Falls, and prominent among those in attendance at this meeting were Dudley Dodge and Betsey Fifield, his wife. Mrs. Dodge at least was converted under Mr. Hull's preaching, and both united with his church, July 18, 1800. First, Mrs. Dodge became a Baptist, and then her husband was baptized in 1816. Their change of views was followed by a change in the order of the church, for we find that Elder Hull preached his farewell sermon on April 6, 1817, and Elder True, a Baptist, preached in the same place on the 27th of that month. And from this time on the Baptists appeared to have held this ground, with occasional preaching by Elders True, Howe, Rand, Chesswell, Fernald, Adams, and Grant, the latter of whom in 1821 divided his labors for one year between Seabrook and East Salisbury. It is recorded that about this time Messrs. Danforth, Prescott, and Towle repeatedly occupied the pulpit as preachers. And prominent among those active in securing and entertaining preachers were Miss Nancy Brown, Mrs. E. Green, and Mrs. Hannah Dow, the latter of whom is well remembered by the writer as afterward a constant attendant on religious services at Hampton Falls, walking two miles when well advanced in years.

Oct. 28, 1828, "The Baptist Church in Seabrook and Hampton Falls" was constituted with a membership of fourteen, of whom Hannah Dow, Ruth Brown, Lydia Brown, and Anna Knowles resided in Seabrook. This infant church immediately invited as their pastor Rev. T. P. Ropes, one of their constituent members, and on the 2d of December the church was publicly recognized by a council called for the purpose, "and preparations made for the installation of Mr. Ropes in the old meeting-house at Seabrook."

In 1832 we find the second pastor of the church, Rev. Oliver Barron, preaching part of the time in the old school-house at Hampton Falls. But the old meeting-house appears to have been the headquarters of the church until the completion of the academy building at Hampton Falls, in September, 1834. For the history of the Baptist interest in Seabrook from this date until June, 1859, the reader is referred to the historical sketch of the Baptist Church in Hampton Falls. The year 1859 was an eventful one for the Baptist interests in both these places, for in Hampton

Falls the Baptist meeting-house was repaired and improved at an expense of $2000, and at Seabrook the old meeting-house was put in order at an expense of $3562, $950 of which was paid by the town towards fitting the first story for use as a town-house. The old house when new is described as "rough and uncouth, with unplanned seats." "These were the pews of sheep-pen form, enough to break people's backs, and the seats raised during prayer time to fall with an ominous clatter at its close, with the broad galleries running around three sides of the house. Then the cry-like pulpit, with its flight of stairs on one side only, and its high sounding-board suspended above, with the deacons' seat literally under the droppings of the sanctuary, it being a square pew under the pulpit, the front of which projected over it, . . . it having become deserted even as a place for the children to play in before it was repaired." Concerning the repairs we again quote from the published discourse of Rev. Mr. Beaman: "The old pulpit and pews vanished to give place to the modern ones. On the outside it was clap-boarded, shingled, and the doors and windows put in good condition; also the end of the house was now turned towards the road instead of the side as previously, and twelve feet were added to the front end, while the whole was surmounted by the present spire." The printed discourse from which we have quoted contains a likeness of the old meeting-house, designed by Miss Augusta Perkins, a granddaughter of the devoted and faithful Mrs. Dow.<sup>1</sup>

The idea of repairing the old meeting-house originated with Miss Mary True, a granddaughter of Elder True. Newell Brown is mentioned as being active in the work. A bell was given by Mr. Charles Sanborn, the bell fixtures by William and James Sanborn, a clock by Mrs. Hooker, of Boston, a pulpit Bible by Mr. C. F. Chase, and a communion service by friends in Portland. "Substantial aid has also been rendered by Newell Locke, Joseph H. Weare, and others too numerous to mention, but whose services are none the less appreciated."

The renovated house was dedicated March 17, 1859, with a discourse by Rev. William Lamson. Text, "Put off thy shoes from off thy feet, for the place whereon thou standest is holy ground." June 28, 1859, twenty-three members were dismissed from the Seabrook and Hampton Falls Church to form the Seabrook Baptist Church, and in the following September the church was publicly recognized by a council of pastors and delegates from neighboring churches. Rev. C. H. Pearson, one of the twenty-five constituent members (supplied as pastor the pulpit), from July, 1859, to March, 1860. Rev. Mr. Abbott (supplied as pastor the pulpit) from March to August, 1860. Rev. Charles H. Corey, the second pastor, came in August, 1861; was ordained September 17th, and resigned Dec. 1, 1863, on account of ill health." Rev. Mr. Corey's "untiring devotion to the cause will ever be held in grateful remembrance. He is now the esteemed principal of Richmond Institute, Va." Rev. Mr. Richardson, supplied from April to August, 1864. Rev. Mr. Lyford, the third pastor, served from August, 1865, to December, 1867. "His eye was single to his work and he sowed good seed." Mr. N. Colby, now pastor in Manchester, N. H., supplied most acceptably from March, 1868, to September, 1869. From this date until February, 1871, preaching was supplied by students from Newton Theological Institution. Among the number was Mr. T. T. Burhoe, now settled as a pastor in Chicago. He came as a supply to Hampton Falls February 5th, and to Seabrook on the following Sabbath, and wakening a special interest in both places urged the two churches to unite in support of the same pastor. Declining a call himself, the two churches were supplied on alternate Sabbaths from February, 1871, to August, 1872, by Mr. Burhoe and H. H. Beaman, assisted by other students. We quote from Mr. Beaman's published discourse: "This pastor will always remember his first experience here, March 19, 1872, when he rode from C. F. Chase's to Seabrook, with the rain pouring in torrents and the streets turned into rivers of water, and preached from Eph. vi. 13, to six persons."

Mr. Beaman accepted a call to the joint pastorate of the two churches in June, 1872, preached his introductory sermon August 25th, and was ordained October 2d. The ordination services were held in the church at Hampton Falls. Every church in the Association was represented by delegates. Professor Lincoln, of Newton, preached the sermon. All the services were ably conducted, the occasion one of more than ordinary interest, and the candidate proved worthy of the occasion, as shown by his earnest, faithful, and successful labors as joint pastor for the period of three years and a half. Mr. Beaman's engagement with the Seabrook Church ceased in March, 1876, and the two churches failing to unite on the same pastor, the Seabrook Church was supplied from different sources until the engagement of Mr. George Ober. He is now pastor at Brentwood, N. H. Since the close of his labors this church has been supplied a part of the time from different sources. Starting with a membership of twenty-five in 1859, eight were added in 1860 (most of them from the Hampton Falls Church), six in 1861, the same number in 1862, five in 1863, six in 1865, two in 1866, four in 1867, five in 1869, one in 1873, and three in 1874, since which time the record is not at hand. During the pastorate of Mr. Ober, the church building was painted outside and renovated within. The following persons have been chosen as deacons of this church: Micajah Green, Joseph H. Weare, Stephen Clough, Jabez True (all dead), C. F. Chase, and R. L. Gove. As early as 1832 a Sabbath-school was formed here in connection with the church, by Rev. Mr. Barron, besides another one at Hampton Falls. From 1859 to 1876 the following persons have been chosen superintendents of the Sunday-school: George A. Weare, Edwin Eaton, Charles F. Chase, and John Weare. The membership has ranged from sixty-nine at the start to one hundred and eighty in 1865. "The next year, 1866, witnessed a decline of one hundred, and since then it has held its own."

SEABROOK.—(Continued.)

History of Congregationalism in Hampton Falls and Seabrook, 1711 to 1882.<sup>1</sup>—Seabrook was for fifty-seven years a part of Hampton Falls, and the leading members of the Seabrook and Hampton Falls Church have always been residents of Hampton Falls.

The history of Congregationalism in Hampton Falls and Seabrook is a deeply interesting one, connected as it is with the birth and infancy of the towns themselves. As a church parish the territory of these two towns was first set off from Hampton, the ancient mother of towns. And under the name and authority of "the new parish in Hampton," "the church-meeting in the Hampton Falls parish," and other similar designations, all town business was transacted for many years. Hampton Falls had no other act of incorporation besides a permission from the General Court in 1718, "to call a public parish meeting annually to choose selectmen and such other officers as may be convenient to manage their parish affairs, etc. And the charter of Seabrook, in 1768, was entitled "An Act for erecting and incorporating a new Parish in the Southerly part of Hampton Falls." This was a practical union of church and State. But useful as this union may have been at that time it appears to have been a peaceful one, only when ability and piety united to fill the pastoral office. Such a happy combination of qualities appears in the case of several of the early pastors of Hampton Falls. No place was ever more highly favored in this respect, and to the commanding influence of these good and able men this place is largely indebted for its present high intellectual and moral conditions.

On the 9th of December, 1711, several members of the Congregational Church in Hampton were dismissed for the purpose of being organized into a new church in the south part of the town, now Hampton Falls. Some pioneer work had already been done in that section.

While the early town or parish records of Hampton Falls afford but scanty materials for a church history, and the records have been destroyed by fire, there has fortunately been preserved a small volume of church records kept by Messrs. Colton and Whipple, the first two pastors of the church. This volume is about four inches by six in size, strongly bound in calf and boards, and composed of about two hundred pages of course, unruled paper. It seems to contain most of the church records during these two pastorates, embracing a period of about forty-five years. Seaborn (born at sea) Colton and John Colton, pastors at Hampton, were son and grandson of Rev. John Colton, in compliment to whom the town of Boston was named, Boston, in England, being his birthplace. Theophilus Colton, the first pastor of Hampton Falls, has been considered by some as the son of Seaborn, but he was probably a cousin, being descended from another branch of the ministerial Colton family which settled in Plymouth, Mass. Mr. Colton wrote a legible, heavy, ornamental hand, while that of Mr. Whipple was fine and cramped. Both had a habit of crowding their records off the bottom of the page. This valuable little volume has title pages at both ends, with records by Mr. Colton running inwards from both ends. Title page number one is inscribed:

On the second page of the fly-leaf are these two records:

" 25; october: 1724

On the next page, numbered 3, the first entry proper occurs, as follows:

" The Inhabitants of Hampton falls having given me a Call to Settle Amongst y<sup>m</sup> In the work of The Ministry Did Thereupon Call in Some of the Neighbouring Ministers to keep a day of fasting and prayer wth y<sup>m</sup> To Seek The blessing of heaven upon them As also to Gather them Into a chh. Estate that They might be capacitated to proceed

—In That Affair—

The fast was on the 13th Dec, 1711 The Ministers that Carried on the work of That day were the Rev. Mr. Odlin who began with prayer, The Rev<sup>d</sup> Mr. Cushing, who preach & Gathered the chh, and the Rev<sup>d</sup> Mr. Gorkin who ended wth Prayer Att wth Solemnity The following Conv<sup>t</sup> was read & Acknowledged by the persons under Written."

On the next page, "4," occurs this entry under date of 10th of May, 1726, three months before Mr. Colton's death:

" I Then took col. weare along with me to the house off John Cass & before him and the mother off John casses wife, Deat with her for with Drawing from our communion, and for embracing the principles off the Quakers who proving obstinate I did thereupon as Pastor of y<sup>e</sup> chh. In the name of X<sup>i</sup> (Christ) Reject her, and Renounce her as one belonging to our communion and the good Lord have mercy on her And all hers Amen."

There is some reason to believe that this John Cass resided in the ancient house now occupied by Mr. David Boyd, in Seabrook.

On page 5 is recorded the Covenant before mentioned:

" The Covenant off The Chh. off Hampton falls. We whose Names are herento subscribed Apprehending ourselves called of God to join Together in Chh. In stirring up the communicants To bring in y<sup>e</sup> Respective sums to Deacon Shaw for his defraying the charge of that holy ordinance."

" Records for this year 1712: Beg: 2 Jan. off Persons Admitted to full Communion."

Some of these foregoing records of Mr. Colton are almost illegible, in consequence of being crowded together in a fine hand. But the record of persons admitted to full communion during his ministry of nearly fifteen years is in a large plain hand covering eight pages and including ninety-eight names, of whom forty-nine were admitted the first four years. During the fifth and twelfth years only one name is recorded for each year, and nine in the thirteenth year, among whom was "Mr. Leo. Colton, schoolmaster of ye parish & Hannah his wife." This record of persons admitted by Mr. Colton closes June 5, 1726: "Record of Marriages consummated 1712: before me T. Colton."

While some of the pages of this little volume are almost as hidden as Greek, these records of marriages of Mr. Colton are as legible as print after the lapse of one hundred and seventy years since he united his first couple, in the persons of Nathaniel Healy and Hannah Tilton, Dec. 13, 1712. This date was just a year after the day of fast, when Mr. Colton assisted in organizing the church, and about three weeks before his ordination. Nathaniel Healey, a member of his church and a prominent citizen, was twice married by Mr. Colton, the second time in 1722, to Susanna Wear. The number of marriages consummated by Mr. Colton (ninety-nine) was almost exactly the same as the number of persons admitted to full communion with the church during his ministry. It might be said of these also that they were admitted to full communion with each other through the divinely-sanctioned rite of marriage. Among the marriages by Mr. Colton was that of Jonathan Fifield to Hannah Wate, on the 15th of January, 1723. Mr.

Fifield was one of the early deacons of this church, prominent in town affairs, and for many years parish clerk. He resided on the farm now owned by Mr. John Thayer Batchelder, and the rock is now pointed out whereon one of his ancestors was killed by the Indians and another at the same time taken captive.<sup>1</sup> Deacon Fifield was the grandfather of Betsey Fifield Dodge, the mother of the Baptist Church in Hampton Falls. After the list of marriages by Mr. Colton, we come by a natural sequence to the record of infants and children sprinkled or baptized by him. We find this on the third page, beginning from the back side upside down of the book. This unique little book is a literary curiosity in several respects, among which is the arrangement of its contents with two little pages and several reversed compartments between.

"Records for This year 1712 off pssons Baptised. Beg: 2d January." In 1712 the number was twenty-four. The next year forty-two, among whom was "Sippai, my own Indian servant, w<sup>m</sup> we engaged to bring up In the fear of God. The next entry is "Meshack, son to Deacon Weare." The infant Meshack became a mighty man of valor, and left an ever-enduring record, while to this little stray book "Sippai" is indebted for rescue from oblivion. Perhaps Sippai also acted well his humbler part. In 1714 twenty were baptized, and twenty-two in the next year.

In 1716, Mr. Colton baptized eighteen, one of whom was

"Mary, daughter of Andrew Mace, of the He Shoals. Baptized at the Shoals."

In 1817 the number was twenty-nine, and the next year thirty-one, among whom was

"Elizabeth, daughter of William Sanburne. Just after his awful death."

Also twelve at the "He Shoals" in the month of July.

In 1719 the number of baptisms was twenty-six, including "Sarah and Mary, children of my kinsman William Norton," whom Mr. Colton had married to "Elizth Colton," June 6, 1717. She was probably a sister of his. Thirty-five were baptized in 1720, one of whom was "Stephen, son of Doctr Marches."

In 1721 the number was thirty-six, and thirty-eight the next year.

On the 20th of January, 1723, the rite was administered to two pairs of twins, "Richard and Anne, twin children of Jacob Stangan," a family name now unknown in this vicinity, and "Nathaniel and Elizabeth, twin children of Nathaniel Healey." The descendants of this last family are among the most respectable and prosperous of the present residents of Hampton Falls.

It is a little remarkable that the two sexes were represented in both of these cases. Eighteen other children were baptized the same year. At the close of each year the number of baptisms was summed up and stated by Mr. Colton, and his gratification at the large number of sixty-eight in 1724 is indicated by an unusual size of dividing pen-marks at the close. Among the number this year were "Hannah and Esther, children of Benjamin Gree (possibly Green), a Quaq." Also in the month of August quite a number at the Shoals, six of them being children of one Joseph Dummerille. In 1725 he recorded the names of twenty-two, with always the date and parentage in each case. In 1726, the last year of Mr. Colton's pastorate and about three weeks before his death, which occurred August 16th, he again visited the Shoals, perhaps for his health partly, and baptized seventeen children, about half of the whole number (thirty-five) for that year. Thus closes this good man's record of his labors, including four pages entitled "Records off Those That own the Cove, either for Baptism for themselves or Children or Both & C. 10: Nov. 1717."

Judging from the style of his chirography or penmanship, we should say that Mr. Colton was a cultivated, genial man; and this view is corroborated by the fact of his being called upon to baptize so many children beyond the limits of his own parish, and that of the ninety-nine marriages performed by him in forty-one cases the parties resided elsewhere, some of them being from Boston. That Mr. Colton did not enjoy firm health is indicated by his death at the early age of forty-four years, and by the following from the parish records under date of 22d December, 1719:

"Deacon Weare, Deacon Shaw Lft. Hilliard Chosen a Committee to discons M<sup>r</sup> Colton Concerning the Carrying on the worke of the ministry the winter ensuing which they Accordingly did and the answer that M<sup>r</sup> Colton gave the Comitee was that he was in hops that he should be able to Carry on the worke of the ministry himself either in his owne house or in the meeting house this winter."

Concerning his unselfish regard for the welfare of the people of his charge, we find that he settled with them for the small salary of sixty pounds, besides the parsonage, to which was added twenty pounds "as a free gift," at the second parish-meeting after its incorporation, held Dec. 8, 1718. And that he left them a legacy of some considerable amount, as indicated by the following record:

Feb. 28, 1728. "Voted that whereas there are sundry of the Inhabitants Living neare the meeting house are willing to build a school hous some where neare the meeting house provided they may have the benefit of the money M<sup>r</sup> Colton wiled as a gift on that account voted that if these be a number that will appear to build s<sup>d</sup> house without any further Charge to the parish and that the Inhabitants have occasion to make use of s<sup>d</sup> house it shall be free for them without any further demand than the gift that M<sup>r</sup> Colten gave shall be d<sup>iv</sup>ided to those men towards the defraying the Charge of building of s<sup>d</sup> house."

Further than this record we only know that a school-house was at some time built on the common near the meeting-house, and afterwards moved, by vote of the town, to near the location of the present one. On the second page of the back fly-leaf of the little volume we find this record, apparently in the hand of his successor, Mr. Whipple:

"Hampton, August 16, 1726. Died the Rev<sup>d</sup> Mr Theophilus Colton, Pastor of the Second church of Hampton after a faithful Discharge of that office for nigh 15 years & was Decently Buried the 18th following att the charge of the Parish."

This act indicates the love and respect of his parish, and not the necessity of his own case. The remains of this faithful minister of the gospel lie in the old parish burying lot, a part of the lower parsonage lot, nearly in front of the entrance, under a stone slab supported by brick-work. The following is the inscription cut in a slate tablet imbedded in the slab, which is of coarse freestone. The tablet has been badly cracked by the formation of ice beneath it:

"Blessed are the dead that dye in the Lord."

Our Mr. Colton's branch of the family settled in Plymouth, Mass., where he was born in 1682, graduating from Harvard in 1701, at the age of twenty-one years, and was not ordained until eleven years afterwards. The name is an uncommon one at the present time. Thirty-five years ago a very reliable young man bearing the name of Simon Colton and belonging in Hampton was in the employ of the writer's father, and a merchant of Portsmouth, Mr. William Colton, honors the name and has one male child.

The records of Hampton Falls as a separate parish cover only the last half of Mr. Colton's settlement, and so smoothly did the religious affairs of the parish move under his management that only a few references to them occur during this period. And one of the highest tributes to his worth is found in the promptness and unity with which they proceeded to plan for the further maintenance of the gospel ministry among them. And at a parish-meeting held six days after his death the selectmen were directed to settle with Mrs. Colton; she was voted the free use of the parsonage during the summer; the selectmen were instructed to negotiate with her for the entertainment of supplies for the pulpit; and they were to "asses Every men of Estate in y<sup>e</sup> parish Excepting Quakers in order to pay the Charges of our Reverend M<sup>r</sup> Colton's funeral." And at a meeting held on the 13th of September it was "voated that wee will voat for the Calling of a minist<sup>r</sup> by proxies." "Voated that m<sup>r</sup>. merch shall be the minister first sought too in order to preach to us." Negotiations with Mr. Merch<sup>1</sup> apparently failing, at a meeting held October 4th "y<sup>e</sup> three Deacons" were appointed a committee "to treat with m<sup>r</sup> Whipple and if he may be agreed with to Carrey on the work of the ministrey amongst us for a month or two or three," etc. And at a meeting November 1st it was voted to call Mr. Whipple at a salary of "one hundred and forty pounds money Annually," he finding himself in firewood and everything else. Deacons Nathaniel Weare, grandfather of Meshack, Benjamin Sanburn, and Nathaniel Bachilder were named as the committee to treat with him.

Under date of November 30th, it was voted to give Mr. Whipple "one hundred and twenty pounds in money and y<sup>e</sup> use of our parsonag." And at the same time it was "voated that wee will take up with maddum Colton's offer and will give her for her buildings & Land & all things thereon excepting her moveables three hundred and fifty pounds in money or Lawful bills of Credit." Our interpretation of this last vote is that up to this time the parish had owned only land and no buildings, and that it was now proposed to purchase the buildings which Mr. Colton had erected, "to be for the use of the parish forever." As the parish records do not again allude to Mr. Whipple until a vote of 20 pounds additional salary in 1732, we will consult his own records in the little volume left by Mr. Colton. And first we learn from another source that Rev<sup>d</sup> Joseph Whipple, second pastor of the Hampton Falls Church, was born in Ipswich, Mass., in 1701, the same year in which Mr. Colton graduated, and that he graduated from Harvard in 1720. The following record appears to be in his handwriting:

The above entry appears on the last of twenty-eight pages of baptisms, running from 1727 to 1750, and these pages are sandwiched between two chapters of records of Mr. Colton, and a record of about thirty-five baptisms are crowded on each page, making nearly or quite one thousand for the twenty-three years. They are headed "Children Baptised by me 1727. Joseph Whipple at Hampton Falls." We will note some of the most interesting of them:

1729, 11 May. "Elizabeth Varrill; my wife and I engaged for her." 1733, 20 May. "Fortunatus, my negro boy." "1734 Jan 27. Jupiter M<sup>r</sup> fifeled's negro man; J— Mr. J. Brown's negro man." "1735 Nov. 9. The wife and six children of Jonathan Prescott, Junr. 1739 Aug. 5. "James coll. weares (Col. Peter) negro man." 1741 May 24. "Rachel Daughter to Jupiter D (Dea.) Fifeled negro." On page 40 we find "an account of Persons dismissed from this chh. to other chhs &c oct 4, 1737 dismissed to ——— at Kensington," then follows a list of twenty-two male and thirty-five female members.

Mr. Colton was a splendid penman, and his marriages are recorded in a style worthy of the happy events, while those of Mr. Whipple are crowded together in a nervous style most unceremoniously. But he united a good many, ranging in position from "Andrew & Dinah M<sup>r</sup> Worths negroes" to the immortal Mesheck Wear, whom he had the honor of marrying twice, the first time July 20, 1738, to Mrs. Elizabeth Shaw, and the second time, Dec. 11, 1746, to Mrs. Mehitabel Wainwright. Had the Governor lived at a later day he might have heard and perhaps heeded the advice of Sam Weller, "beware of vidders."

From his first marriage, Jan. 26, 1727, to Sept. 12, 1751, are recorded the names of three hundred and forty-nine couples united by him, three in one day, many of them belonging in other places.

We come now to seventeen pages of records of church actions. Under date of June 5, 1730, the church voted "that if any had children under seven calendar months, they should be called to an account before the church." This was the most frequent cause of church discipline, the usual course being to suspend the offenders "for breach of the 7th commandment," until after some months they made public acknowledgment and were restored to the privileges of the church.

April 16, 1732, Jacob Gorland was suspended from the Lord's table for the sin of drunkenness. July 16th, he made a public confession, and was restored to his former privileges.

Oct. 28, 1739, it was voted to send delegates to the ordination of Mr. Peter Coffin at Kingstown. At the same date it was voted to send Deacons Fifield and Bachelor and Mr. Mesheck Wear as delegates to the ordination of Mr. Nathaniel Gookin, "at north hill, in Hampton," now North Hampton.

February, 1742, it was voted to send delegates to assist in gathering a church and ordaining Mr. William Parsons at South Hampton.

August, 1741, it was voted to send the pastor and delegates to attend the ordination of "Mr webster." The place we presume was Hampton, and the "Mr webster" the relative of Daniel, who was settled there.

July 22, 1743, Voted to send delegates to assist in the ordination of Mr. Elisha Odlin at "amesbury." In our early recollections this used to be the pronunciation of Amesbury by the old people.

1746, February 1st, Voted to send Deacons Fifield, Bachelor, and Mr. Mesheck Wear as delegates to attend the ordination of Mr. Langdon at Portsmouth.

1747, May 10th, "Voted that Jos. Bachelor, Saml. Shaw & Caleb Sanborn be assistants in reading & sitting (tuning) the Psalm."

1747, October 18th, "Mary ——— made a second acknowledgment of her violation of the 7th commandment & the sabbath following had her base born child baptized."

1744, November 18th, and at other times reference is made to the cases of Job Haskell, Jeremiah Preston, John Philbrick, Abigail Presentt, Mary Preston, Phoebe Cass, Martha Cass, Abigail Cass, and Mary Blake, who proved incorrigible to all attempts to admonish them. They seem to have been Quakers.

With regret we now lay aside this little volume, from which we have quoted so freely, and which sheds so much light on the early ministry of Hampton Falls. Communion with its pages has inspired love for the genial Mr. Colton and respect for the faithful Mr. Whipple. Turning to the parish records, we find in 1733 six men chosen "to take care of the youth on the Lord's day," and such officers, called tithing-men, continued to be chosen for more than an hundred years. The last of whom we have any recollection was Daniel Perreau, at the Baptist Church about 1845, called by the boys "tidy man;" and we are sorry to record that the conduct of some at the present day, destitute alike of reverence and good manners, seems sometimes to call for the presence of such an official at church services.

In October, 1734, it was "Voted that if the people on the west part of this parish—now Kensington—hire a minister for four months this winter Ensuing the charge thereof Shall be added into our Reverend m<sup>r</sup> Whippel Rate in order to be paid by the whole parish."

And at the next annual March meeting the selectmen were authorized and instructed to raise money to pay Mr. Gilman for this service. The depreciation of the currency was the chief disturbing cause during the ministry of Mr. Whipple, the subject appearing at most every annual meeting, commencing with 1732, when twenty pounds additional was voted to him for the ensuing year.

"And whereas the value of Provision is grately Esin & the wood on the Parsonag is almost gon," it was voted at the annual meeting in 1738 to give him thirty pounds, on condition of his signing a receipt in full. Said receipt appears on record Feb. 29, 1739.

In 1740 the term "hadness of our money" is used, and in 1743 the annual allowance was increased to forty pounds, and this was continued until 1747, when provision was made for the annual appointment of a committee to adjust the salary under oath, making it equal to what it was at the time of his settlement, Dec. 24, 1756. The selectmen called a meeting as follows:

"Whereas it has Pleased God in his Providence to visit our Rev<sup>d</sup> Pastor M<sup>r</sup> Joseph whipple with sickness so as he has been for some time past taken off from his Publick Labours In the ministry among us and there doeth not yet appear any prospect that he will be able for some time to Preach among us— Therefore to se if the Parish will agree to hire some suitable person for to Preach among us till such a time as M<sup>r</sup> Whipple, shall be able to Preach agsin," &c.

Mr. Whipple's death occurred Feb. 17, 1757, at the age of fifty-seven, just after entering on the thirty-first year of his pastorate, and at that date a meeting was called for the next day, when a committee consisting of Deacon Jona Fifield, Capt. Richard Nason, and Col. Mesheck Wear, were chosen to take charge of his burial at an expense not exceeding four hundred pounds. At a meeting, March 15th, Col. Weare and two others were chosen a committee to secure preaching for two or three Sabbaths. And it was voted that Mrs. Whipple should have the use of one-half of the parsonage-house for one year, also half of the garden, the fruit of thirty apple-trees, the use of half the barn, the pasturing of a cow at the upper parsonage, the improvement of the whole lower parsonage for pasturing a horse and cutting hay for a horse and cow, and also the full produce of an acre of rye sowed at the upper parsonage. At a meeting, May 3d, a committee was chosen to present to Mr. Josiah Bailey a unanimous call to settle with them as the successor of Mr. Whipple. And at a meeting, May 23d, he was offered a salary of fifty pounds sterling and a part of the parsonage lands. Declining to accept this offer, on the 23d of June the other lands were included, with the provision that he should keep in repair at his own expense the buildings and fences. This offer he accepted in the following form :

"To the Inhabitants of the Parish in Hampton falls, Gentlemen— I have calmly weighed & deliberated upon the last vote you passed for my encouragement to settle in the work of the Gospel ministry over you in this place. And under a solemn sense of the great importance of this work and with humble dependence upon the Grace & good Providence of God, I hereby declare my acceptance of your invitation and offer to settle in the work of the Gospel ministry, not doubting your readiness not only cheerfully and faithfully to make good your purposes for my outward comfort but upon every occasion to testify the same good will for me as an unforeseen Providence may give occasion and above all a constant remembrance of me at the throne of grace that I may be faithful and successful in my office among you who are Your affectionate friend and humble servant for Christ's sake.

"Hampton Falls June 30th 1757."

The above is the first instance in the records where Falls is written with a capital F. And Levi Lane, a man of excellent ability and education, continued until 1861 to write it with a small f in the records of one of the religious societies. It was a case of frequent occurrence in the early records of the parish that one or more individuals recorded their objection to a certain measure, as follows: "A. B. dissents against ye last vote." The call to Mr. Bayley was unanimous, and no objection to the terms offered him is recorded; but on the 29th of July more than thirty of the inhabitants petitioned the selectmen to call a meeting to reconsider the vote as to the terms offered, and their petition being unheeded, a meeting was called of Justices Samuel Gilman and Theodore Smith, of Exeter. This meeting was held October 5th, when the offer of fifty pounds was reconsidered, and at the same date Mr. Bayley's acceptance of forty-two pounds is recorded. Nothing further concerning Mr. Bayley occurs until the following, under date of Feb. 17, 1762:

"Whereas it has pleased God in his Providence to visit our Pastor, Mr Josiah Bayley, with sickness so as he has been for some time Past taken off his Publick Labour in the ministry among us and thier Doth Not yet appear any Prospect that he will be able for sum time to Do the Labour of the ministry among us Therefore to see if the Parish will agree to hire &c."

Under date of February 19th the desire is expressed to secure the services of Mr. Solomon Page. At a meeting, March 9th, the committee are instructed to hire a preacher for three months, and the sum of one hundred pounds is voted to Mr. Bayley as a free gift, and on the 7th of April a communication was read from him desiring the parish to take charge of the parsonage farm for his benefit, except the house-lot. And then and there the use of it for the ensuing season was sold at auction to the highest bidder. Under date of June 28th, Mr. Bayley's illness is again alluded to, and a committee chosen to secure preaching for two months, and September 7th it was voted to hire preaching for three months. Mr. Bayley died on the 12th of September, after an illness of more than seven months. He was born in Newbury, Mass., in 1734, graduated at Harvard 1752, was ordained Oct. 19, 1757, and died at the early age of twenty-eight, having been settled less than five years. His work was cut short, and his excellent letter of acceptance is about the only means of judging the character of the man. On the day of his decease, a meeting of the parish or town was legally called for the next day, to make arrangements for his burial at the expense of the parish, and at that meeting the selectmen were instructed to proceed in the matter at an expense not exceeding three hundred and fifty pounds old tenor. Side by side in the old parish burying-ground lie the remains of the three first pastors of Hampton Falls.

All natives of the same State, two of them from adjoining towns, all graduates of Harvard, laboring in the same field, they together rest in the company of many whose spiritual welfare they sought by precept and example. A dark slate head-stone marks the resting-place of Mr. Whipple, inscribed as follows:

"Here lies the Body of the Rev<sup>d</sup>
MR. JOSEPH WHIPPLE,
Who having wisely and faithfully
Discharged the Pastoral office,
In the second Church in Hampton,
Deceased Febr. 17th, 1757,
In the 56th Year of his age,
And 32<sup>d</sup> of his Ministry, highly Esteemed and beloved in Life,
And in Death much Lamented."

The lettering remains clear-cut but overgrown with moss, while that on the soft, light-colored head-stone of Mr. Bayley has begun to be obliterated. The latter is inscribed as follows:

"Here are Interred the Remains of the
Third Pastor of the Church
In Hampton Falls,
Who after He had
Wisely and Faithfully
Discharged the Duties of his office for the Space
Of 5 Years Was Received
Into the Joy of his LORD,
SEPT. 12, 1782. Eloa 28."

Both head-stones are ornamented (?) with the figure of a cherub, according to the fashion of that period.

We now come to the record of efforts made to secure a successor to Mr. Bayley in the pastoral office. At a parish-meeting on the 2d of November a committee of five, Deacon Jonathan Fifield, chairman, were instructed in behalf of the parish to extend a call to Mr. Paine Wingate, who had been preaching to them as a supply. And at the next meeting, Dec. 28th, Mr. Wingate was offered "the use, income, and improvement of the parsonage house, barn, and other buildings and of the parsonage lands and flats," he making all repairs; also the annual sum of fifty pounds sterling or its equivalent in currency. And Deacons Fifield, Worth, and Sanborn were instructed to acquaint Mr. Wingate with these proposals. At an adjourned meeting Deacons Fifield, Sanborn, and Capt. Nason were chosen a committee to wait on Mr. Wingate with some additional inducements, while the meeting awaited a reply, which came in the form of a request that the meeting be adjourned to allow him time for further consideration. Then follows a record of Mr. Wingate's letter of acceptance. However it may have been written, it is copied, lengthily as it is, in one unbroken sentence, without stops, breaks, or capitals. This acceptance fills two large pages of the records, and we have reconsidered our intention of copying it in full. First, a long and rambling introduction closing with an acceptance; then objection to the provision that he should keep the buildings in repair, and on this point he makes a good argument; then he suggests a more definite wording of the kind of money which he is to receive, and closes as follows: "These alterations I do but very reasonably propose and by agreeing thereto in peace and love I shall be ready to serve you in the Lord as he shall give me strength and opportunity, who am gentlemen your sincere friend and servant.

"Hampton Falls, Jan. 18, 1763.

"To the moderator, to be communicated."

At the adjourned meeting January 31st:

"To receive Mr. Wingate's answer to the terms proposed for his settlement in the work of the ministry, and Mr. Wingate's further answer was read to the meeting, and being read . . . It was put to vote to see if the parish would make any further proposals for Mr. Wingate's support, and it was voted in the negative."

The last third of the "further answer" referred to is as follows: "Instead of peace and love there now threatens discord and disaffection, and instead of Divine Providence smiling on the affairs and encouraging me to proceed there appears many discouragements. Wherefore as the face of things appears I can't at present entertain any further thoughts of continuing with you, and would now most heartily commend you to God and to the word of His grace, sincerely wishing you peace and prosperity, who am gentlemen your friend and humble servant. Almsbury, Jan. 29th, 1763. Paine Wingate, Junr."

Parish matters did not seem to run smooth about this time, for at the time of the same meeting Deacon Edmund Bayley, the father of the deceased minister, was in the place making a demand for the rent of the parsonage and a balance of salary. A committee was sent out to treat with him, and offer him three hundred pounds old tenor in settlement, which he declined. No further reference to the matter appears, but more than one hundred pages back is recorded a receipt from Mr. Bayley for three hundred and sixty-four pounds old tenor in full, dated June 8, 1763. Under date of March 14th it was voted to hire "Mr. Gills Merrill" for four Sabbaths he had already preached, and to pay him for six Sabbaths.

After all their differences with Mr. Paine Wingate, it was voted, April 11th, to hire him to preach the four Sabbaths ensuing. May 9th it was voted to hire "Mr. Tellis Merrill" for six Sabbaths. On the 20th of June it was voted to have preaching for six Sabbaths, and the committee were instructed to secure for this service "Mr. Laranie of Hawk," now Danville, and failing in that to engage "Mr. Walker of Penny Cook," now Concord, though from 1733 until two years later than this received, its incorporated name was Rumford. This "Mr. Walker" is presumed to have been the Rev. Timothy Walker, settled in Concord from 1730 to 1782, and father of Hon. Timothy Walker, a member of the first Constitutional Convention of New Hampshire. Under date of September 12th a call was extended to "Mr. Michai Laranie" to settle on the terms first offered Mr. Wingate. "Voted, that if Mr. Laranie comes to preach for two ensuing Sabbaths he shall be paid as usual." The name of this minister which the parish clerk makes Michai Laranie, all but the dotting of the last i, becomes in the call for the next meeting, probably written by Mesheek Weare, then chairman of the selectmen, Micah Lawrence. The study of Greek is a desirable preparation for deciphering some of these old records. On the 5th of October Mr. Lawrence declined the call of the parish, although they further offered to keep the buildings and fences of the parsonage in repair.

"Voted, to apply to Mr. Paine Wingett for to preach with us four Sabbaths." "Capt. Jonathan Sweet, Mr. Ebenezer Knowlton, and Job Hoskel deserts against the Votes of this and the Last Meeting Relative to the settling Mr. Lawrence."

The following record is given in full, as one of the best worded in the volume before us:

"At a Legal meeting of the Free holders of Hampton falls parish held the thirty-first day of october 1763, 1ly, Voted that Col. Mesheek were be moderator for said meeting. 2dly, Voted to renew the call to Mr Paine Wingate to settle in the work of the ministry in this parish. 3dly Voted that for an allowance to Mr Paine Wingate for his salary and support During his Continuance in the work of the ministry in this Parish in case he shall settle in that work here. Then he paid him the sum of sixty-five pounds sterling money of great Britton or Equivalent thereto in the Currency of this Province yearly and Each year During his Continuance in said work, also that he have the use and Improvement of the parsonage House Barn orchard and gardens and about five acres of land near mesheek weares House commonly called the Lower parsonage the Buildings and fences to be kept in Repair by the Parish or if it will be more agreeable to master Wingate to have the Improvement of the whole parsonage lands and buildings Belonging to this Parish the fences and Buildings to be kept in Repair by the Parish as aforesaid then he to have for his salary in money only the sum of fifty-five pounds sterling or Equivalent thereto in the Currency of this province to be paid him yearly and he to determine at his first settlement which he will take that the parish may be at a certainty.

"4thly, Voted that deacon Jonathan Fifield deacon Joseph Worth and deacon abner Sander Capt Jonathan Tilton and Richard Nason Esqr be a committee to wait on Mr Wingate and acquaint him with the Votes of the Parish for his settlement and support.

"5thly, Voted that this meeting be adjourned to next Monday at Two of the clock in the afternoon to Receive Mr wingate's answer.

"CALLER SANDERS Parish Clerk.

"Capt Jonathan Swett Lt Richard Smith Mr Henry Robas and Ebenezer Knowlton Dissents against the second Vote Relative to Mr wingate's Call." At the adjacent meeting "Mr wingate's answer being Brod, and read, and he Excepted of the Call given him by this parish to him to settle in the work of the ministry and the support voted for him—attested per "CALLER SANDERS Parish Clerk."

Mr Wingate's answer: "To the Church and Congregation at Hampton falls—Humb and Beloved Inasmuch as thro the permission of divine Providence your attempts to settle in order of the gospel have once and again been disappointed and your disposition towards my settling with you seems at present so far as I can learn in general not to be alienated or divided by our former parting and the Trials you have since made but rather increased contrary to my expectations. I may I think look upon your Renewed Call as a Call of divine providence notwithstanding the unreasonableness of some whose dissatisfaction I cannot account as sufficient discouragement to my settling with you but hope thro' the interposition of divine goodness will soon be removed—I therefore now accept of your invitation and purpose by the will of God to devote myself to his service in the work of the ministry among you and being sensible of my own Imperfections and humbly depending on the help and grace of God I ask your prayers continually for me and wishing grace mercy and peace may be multiplied unto you I Remain ready to serve you in the gospel of our common lord.

"PAIN WINGATE JUNR.

"Hampton falls Nov. 7th 1763."

Under date of December 14th Mr. Wingate chose to take the whole parsonage with a cash salary of fifty-five pounds sterling.

From another source it is learned that in 1763 a Presbyterian meeting-house was built in the south part of the town, now Seabrook. No allusion to the matter appears on the parish records until 1765.

"Province of) these are to Notify the freeholders and Inhabitants of New Hampshire) the Parish of Hampton falls in said province who are by law qualified for to vote to meet at this meeting-house on Monday, the Second day of Sept<sup>r</sup> next, at one of the Clock in the afternoon for the following purpose, viz: Whereas a Number of persons in said parish have lately professed themselves of the Presbyterian persuasion, and have applied to some ministers at Londonderry, whom they Call the Boston Presbytery, desiring to be under their care, Representing that they apprehend themselves able and are freely willing to maintain a minister of the orthodox faith, and that is united with said ministers in the Presbyterian government, and have made some objections to paying towards the support of the settled minister in said parish, and altho' there is no just reason that the above-mentioned persons should in any Respect be Excused except that it may Probably be most for the peace of said parish that the above-mentioned persons and their Estates should be set off to act in all Respects as a Distinct Society or parish by themselves Except paying there proportion of the province tax until a new proportion thereof. Therefore to see if the parish will vote to set off the above-mentioned persons and their estates to be Incorporated if they think proper to apply for it to act in all respects by themselves as a Distinct society or parish Except paying there proportion of the Province tax until a New proportion thereof, and to pay all other charges as usual until they shall be set off as above mentioned, the line of said New Parish to be fixed by a comitee of the general Court with Liberty for such of the above-mentioned persons as shall not fall within said New Parish to fall off with their Estates and Belong thereto and for any who shall fall within said New Parish who are not of the Presbyterian Perswasion to fall off with their Estates, and belong to the old Parish, and for any who are of the Presbyterian persuasion who have or shall have lands within said New Parish to poll off said Lands to belong to the parish of Hampton Falls.

" At a Legal meeting of the freeholders and Inhabitants of the parish of Hampton falls held the Second day of Sept<sup>r</sup> 1765 Col Meshack Weare chosen moderator for said meeting

" Voted that the people Called presbyterians in this parish be set off as a Distinct Parish by themselves according to the foregoing Notification for the aforesaid meeting.—(Not signed.)

The following notification bears the same date as the other:

Province of I Purasant to a Request to the selectmen in hampton falls New Hampshire) by thirty Inhabitants there in Desiring them to Call a parish meeting—1st to see if the Parish will Exempt the Presbyterian Society in Hampton falls from all Charges that may hereafter arise by the support of the Congregation minister or ministers in Hampton falls, 2ly to see if the people will set off to the presbyterian society a proportionable of the parsonage and privileges which belong to the Inhabitants of Hampton falls."

Then follows the legal notification of a meeting for August 22d, signed by the same selectmen. The following is the record of the second meeting, held the same day:

" At a Legal meeting, etc, Col. Meshack Weare chosen moderator for said meeting. The first article in the notification was put to vote, and it was voted in the negative; and also the second article in the notification, and that was voted in the negative."

Signed by the parish clerk.

They next appeal to the General Assembly,—

" representing themselves aggrieved at the settlement of the Rev. Mr. Pain Wingate as a minister in said Hampton Falls, that the religious sentiments and doctrines preached by the said Mr. Wingate are different from theirs and disagreeable to them."

Therefore they pray to be set off as a separate parish and exempted from taxation for ministerial support in the other parish. As the immediate result of this action a parish-meeting was held the 30th of December, at which Col. Meshack Weare, then—and most always at this period—moderator, was chosen chairman of a committee of six to appear at the General Court in behalf of the parish—

" to make a True Representation of the proceedings of the parish and to endeavor that the Petition may be Dismissed or that the petitioners may be set off in all Respects to act as a Distinct Parish by themselves."

In this last clause is found the first intimation of the town or parish of Seabrook. As to the result of the first petition of the Presbyterians the records are silent; but it appears that in the final disposition of the matter the petitioners got more than they wished, while in the division of territory which followed Hampton Falls obtained the lion's share, in the opinion of some of the present residents of Seabrook.

In 1767 they again petitioned the General Assembly "to be set off as a Distinct parish for ministerial affairs only;" and on the 23d of November, Col.

Weare was again chosen chairman of a committee to appear and answer the petition, and "Represent the Inconveniences that would attend the prayer thereof being granted." At the same date Col. Weare was chosen chairman of a committee to defend the parish against a suit commenced by Edmund Bayley, administrator of the estate of his son.

At a meeting held the 25th of April, 1768, it was voted that the selectmen "be a com. to wait on the com. appointed by the General Court to Divide the parish of Hampton falls to inform said com. . . . and to represent to said com. what may appear necessary," etc.

These records are copied from the first volume of the records of Hampton Falls, but the charter of the new South Parish does not appear on record until eleven years later. It may be found on the one hundred and twenty-third page of the second volume, inscribed in beautiful penmanship. The following is the heading:

Seabrook Charter
Anno Regni Regis Georgii tertii regis
Britanniae Franciae et Hiberniae
octavo

"An Act for erecting and incorporating a new Parish in the Southern part of Hampton falls in this Province." "Whereas a considerable number of the Inhabitants of the Southerly and Westerly part of Hampton falls have petitioned the General Assembly to be set off from the old and erected into a new Parish, which has not been opposed; &c."

This act of incorporation was signed by I. Wentworth, June 3, 1768.

The ministry of Mr. Wingate, so peculiar in its inception, was fraught with changes in parish affairs. The dissatisfaction of some at the time of his settlement appears to have led to the final division of the parish. And the setting off of the new parish disturbed the equilibrium of the balance, and led to other important changes. On the 27th of July a committee, of which Col. Mesheck Weare was chairman, were chosen—

"to confer with a com. chosen by the Presbyterian Society so called in Seabrook, in order for a Settlement Respecting Sundry arrearages of Rates due from many of Said Society to this parish and concerning an action now in the Law between the Selectmen of this parish and Mr. Jacob Smith."

Under the changed situation of the parish the meeting-house was at one end, and the majority of the parishioners towards the other end of the parish. And the result was that at a meeting called for the purpose October 20th it was voted that a new meeting-house be built near the centre of the inhabitants of the parish. And the selectmen and two others, most of whom resided in the upper part, were chosen a committee to fix the location. To this action dissent was then and there made for three reasons: first, it ought not to be removed during Mr. Wingate's ministry; second, on account of the expense of land and new buildings, while by the terms of the deed the old ones could not be put to other use; third, because

"has the most direct tendency to make confusion and lead into such difficulties as will probably ruin the parish."

This dissent, only the substance of which is here given, was signed by Mesheck Weare, Caleb Sanborn, Abner Sanborn, Jonathan Fifield, Jr., Abner Sanborn, Jr., Jonathan Fifield, Richard Nason, Joseph Worth, and Dr. Joshua Chase.

This meeting was adjourned to the 27th, and then dissolved without further action. At a meeting on the 19th of December, it was voted that a new meeting-house, forty by fifty-five feet in dimensions, be built on the vacant lot near Jeremiah Lane's; that John Tilton, Abner Sanborn, and William Prescott, selectmen, with Elisha Prescott, Samuel Prescott, and Jonathan Cram, be the building committee, and that this committee sell the pews to the highest bidder, and make a report at an adjourned meeting the first Tuesday in February. Immediately after is recorded a dissent, concluding as follows:

"By that the whole proceedings evidently tend to bring the parish into confusion, as is evident from the Notification itself, which says that there are disputes about the place where the meeting-house shall be set so as to accommodate the Inhabitants and yet would force a vote without trying any proper measures of accommodation. Wherefore we protest against all the proceedings as illegal and against paying any part of any cost or charge which may arise in consequence of said votes."

This dissent is signed by Mesheck Weare and twenty-two others.

At an adjourned meeting Feb. 7, 1769,—

"A motion was made by Col. Weare & a great number of other persons present . . . to reconsider the votes passed at the last meeting. In order to give upon some method that the parish in general might unite in Respecting a meeting-house, and the moderator was Repeatedly desired to put the same to vote, which he finally refused to do. The Report of Com for Selling the Pews Being Read the moderator was Requested to put to vote whether the Report should be accepted wh. he also Refused to Do and Dissolved the meeting." At a meeting Oct. 16, 1769, it was "voted to abate all those persons' Rates that belong to Seabrook that are in arrearages in the minister's Rates." This is the first reference to the new parish as "Seabrook."

The following document seems to be worth copying in full, and will explain itself:

"Province of ) To the Constable or Constables of the parish of

The record of that meeting is brief,—

"By Vote of the Rev<sup>d</sup> Mr. Pain Wingate Shall go to the New meeting House and preach and Dedicate the said House to the Publick Worship of God as soon as Conveniently may be.

"2ly & 3dly, Elysha present, Mr Nathan Tilton and Capt Jonathan Tilton—the moderator of the last three meetings—were chosen a committee to present the above vote to Mr. Wingate."

It seems by the record that in consequence of the refusal of Mr. Wingate to dedicate the new meeting-house or preach therein—

"there has been & still are great contentions and Divisions in said parish and a great Number of the Inhabitants have by writing from under their hands Cautioned the Selectmen from assessing their polls and Estates in any Tax for the salary or support of the Rev<sup>d</sup> Mr. Wingate;" therefore the selectmen called a meeting of the parish for 17th of December ensuing for instructions. "Voted that it is the minds of this meeting that there be no Rate Tax nor assessment made nor Based on the Polls nor Estates in this parish for the salary or support of the Rev<sup>d</sup> Mr. Pain Wingate for the current year.

"Signed by

"JONATHAN TILTON,
"Moderator."

And at a meeting March 4, 1771, the above vote was "ratified and confirmed," and it was—

"Voted that this parish do hereby heartily Join with that part of the Church in said parish who are aggrieved and Disaffected at the late and present conduct of the Rev<sup>d</sup> Mr. Wingate and such of the said church and parishes Join with him Respecting the Late and present Differences & Disputes Between the said parties in Calling a Council of Elders and Churches," etc.

This is the first allusion in the records to the church as distinct from the parish, and also the first mention of a council. A committee was chosen to make all necessary arrangements for the said council. At an adjourned meeting the first Tuesday in April it was voted to convene the council on the 23d inst. No further reference to this council appears, and it is another peculiarity of these old records that documents are often re-recorded in the spirit of the adage, "Better late than never."

Thus the next record is that of the sale of the pews by the building committee made previous to the erection of the new house:

"It Being Requested by Several Persons that this Report of the Committee Should be Record." Dated Feb. 7, 1769.

Hampton Falls is here written with a large F for the first time in these records.

The following is the last half of a request addressed to Mr. Wingate, signed by sixty-one legal voters, and dated Dec. 4, 1769:

"And we, the subscribers, . . . your Parishioners being Desirous that the said meeting-house may be Solemnly Dedicated to the Public worship of God, and that the Duties of your Sacred Function may be by you performed there Do hereby signify to you our hearty Desire and Sincere Request that you will Come to the said house and Perform the Same. In doing which we Trust and hope you will Honour God, acquit yourself Worthily, in your Sacred Office, and Do Great good to your Parishioners."

To which Mr. Wingate replies, December 28th, taking the ground that he had no power to change the place of worship; that the petitions of others could not convey to him that power; and that even the "Vote of the parish to build a new meeting house Does not appear sufficient of itself to Justify me in Removing the Stated worship from the usual place."

This he states as the opinion of disinterested persons with whom he had consulted. And in closing,

"I would recommend . . . to every member of this Society that in addition to your humble, fervent prayer to God you fall not to be using your best endeavors to Bring to a speedy issue the present unhappy controversy which subsists, and that Love and harmony may again reign among us."

The whole reply is quite lengthy. Next, under date of May 10, 1771, is recorded the delivery of the new house to the parish by the building committee. The next document which contributes to the history of these events is dated Aug. 30, 1770, signed by Nathaniel Healey and fifty-seven others, and states that whereas Mr. Wingate refuses "to Perform the Duties of his ministerial Function at Said new meeting-house," "agreeable to the Vote of Said Parish and the advice of Neighboring ministers," and they are obliged to hire preaching in the new house at their own expense, they "Do hereby Protest against all and Every Tax & assessment for the salary or support of the said Mr. Wingate." Next on record is the petition to Justices Bryant and Emery, whose order has been already given in full. It is signed by Nathaniel Healey and fifty others.

It may be of interest to some to learn the names of those who were legal voters in Hampton Falls in 1770, and to note the form of names which have since increased, diminished, or become extinct.

"A list of the Polls who Polled for and against Capt. Jonathan Tilton as Moderator of A meeting of the Inhabitants in Hampton Falls in Pursuance of a Warrant Signed by Walter Bryant and Noah Emery, Esqrs. Two of his Majesties Justices of the Peace for the Province of New-hampshire, holden at the New meeting-house in Said Hampton Falls, near Jeremiah Lanes house on Tuesday, the 20th day of January, A. This poll shows fifty-one of the new house party to forty-seven of the old house, Mesheck Weare heading the minority. A " marks those family names that have become extinct in this town. At a meeting held the 30th of September, 1771, First, Capt. Jona. Tilton was chosen moderator.

"2ty. Voted to Dismiss the Rev. Mr. Pain Wingate," etc.

"By. Voted to Chase a Com. . . to Treat and agree with Mr. Wingate with Respect to what Compensation shall be allowed and paid by said Parish for the Secular Inconvenience wh. the Dissolution of his said Religion exposes him."

The fourth vote provided for arbitration. By the fifth a committee were to request him to ask for a dismission. After three adjournments this meeting was dissolved November 8th, and among the curiosities of these records is a call in the next page for a meeting to be held on the 4th of the previous March. The call is recorded seventeen pages after the record of the meeting. The following document closes the controversy between Mr. Wingate and the party of the new meeting-house. It appears that the new meeting-house party outvoted the old, but were out-generated by Mr. Wingate.

Mr. Wingate's Resignation. A Legal Document.

"Hampton Falls Dec 4th 1771.

"To the Parish of Hampton Falls. Paine Wingate

"attested by Benjamin Tilton Parish Clerk"

On the next page are copies of three receipts given by Mr. Wingate for notes received of the selectmen. It is with a sense of relief that we come to the close of this controversy, which has been so fully narrated for the special benefit of those people in Hampton Falls who expatiate on the good old times when there was but one church in the place, and the Congregational lion, the Unitarian lamb, the Presbyterian ox, and the Baptist wadrus lay down lovingly together in Monument Square. Distance ever lends enchantment to our views. Rev. Paine Wingate, fourth pastor of the Hampton Falls parish church, was born in Amesbury, Mass., in 1759; graduated at Harvard in 1759; was ordained Dec. 14, 1763, and "resigned March 18, 1776." "After his dismission he turned his attention to civil affairs, was honored with office, and was for many years one of the judges of N. H. Died in Strat-ham, N. H., March 7, 1838, aged ninety-nine years."

Mr. Wingate lived with his one wife more than seventy years, and the births of two children are recorded. When after his dismission he was a candidate for the State Senate and for Congress, he received a full vote in Hampton Falls. On the 22d of June, 1772, six months after the arrangement with Mr. Wingate, it was voted to raise twenty pounds lawful money for the support of preaching that year, to be expended by the selectmen. In 1773, June 15th, a call for a meeting was issued by John Phillips, of Exeter,

"Pursuant to an act or law of said province passed in the present year of His Majesty's Reign Entitled an act for dissolving the annual meeting of the Inhabitants of the parish of Hampton Falls, and authorizing the holding a new meeting."

It remains for future investigation to determine the object and bearing of this act. This meeting was held June 28th, and "The Honabel Con<sup>t</sup> John Phillips, Esq<sup>r</sup>, Being appointed Moderator to Gov<sup>r</sup>n Said meeting," the usual parish officers were chosen and the usual business transacted without any reference to ministerial affairs. At a meeting July 13th, it was voted to pay the expense of petitioning the General Assembly for the aforesaid act. It was also voted to raise forty pounds lawful money to be expended by the selectmen in hiring "some proper Gospel preacher in this place this year," and "to have preaching in the Congregational order." It is presumed that "this place" meant the new meeting-house, where the legal meetings of the parish had been held since its erection. At a meeting, June 27, 1774, called for the purpose of seeing if something could be done toward settling a minister, it was merely voted to raise money for six Sabbath-days' preaching, and a committee chosen to supply preaching "for fore Sabbaths to come." And at another meeting on the 14th of November, held for the purpose of making arrangements for further preaching, Capt. Tilton, the moderator; Mr. Jeremiah Lane, grandfather of Levi Lane; and Mr. David Bachelder, grandfather of Deacon Emery Bachelder, were chosen a committee—

"To Go and treat with the Lower End of the parish concerning the Difficultys that Subsists in the parish, and upon the second adjournment of this meeting it was voted to raise 15 pounds for preaching, and a Com<sup>tee</sup> was chosen 'to apply to the association for advice and for to apply to some suitable candidate or candidates to supply the Parish with preaching.' Jan. 9, 1775, 'Mr. Paine Wingate' was chosen one of five Deputies 'to join with Deputies from other Towns and Parishes in the choice of Delegates for the Congress proposed to be held at Philadelphia the 10th day of May next."

On the 3d of May, 1775,

"Voted that Col. Mesheke Wear and Rev<sup>d</sup> Mr. Paine Wingate be the Delegates To Set in Congress at Exeter, the 10th of May Instant."

About this time several of the legal meetings of the parish were held in the old meeting-house, and in the warrant for one to be held June 7, 1775, was an article "To see if the Parish will agree to hire some Suitable Person . . . to preach alternately One half of the time at the New meeting house," etc. But no reference to this article appears in the record. The chief subjects of interest at that time were the choice of delegates to Congresses and the providing of soldiers' arms, ammunition, and provisions. A warrant dated Nov. 27, 1775, concludes with this:

"N. B. the Congress for this Colony have Resolved that no Person be allowed a Seat in Congress who shall by Himself or any Person for him before said Choice treat with Liquor &c any Electors with an apparent view of Gaining their votes or afterwards on that account."

At the annual parish-meeting March 12, 1776, it was "voted the Parsonage House and Parsonage Lands be appropriated and used for the benefit of Schooling and for the Support of the Poor the ensuing year."

And on the next page, same date, is recorded an agreement by Mr. Wingate to

"quit my Ministerial Relation and Resign all the Parsonages and Other Privileges as a settled Minister of the Parish," allowing a few days for the removal of his effects.<sup>1</sup> At a meeting the 6th of May, 1776, it was voted to hire preaching for two months, the services to alternate between the old and new meeting-houses; and before that time had expired it was voted to provide for six Sabbaths' preaching in the new house and for four Sabbaths in the old. Here was an evident purpose to gradually wean the people about the old house from their place of worship, and this purpose developed itself at the next meeting, October 21st, when it was voted to have three Sabbaths' preaching and a thanksgiving sermon, all at the new house. And incidentally it is stated that they had been supplied with preaching by a Mr. Thurston.

At the annual meeting, March, 1777, it was voted that the income of the parsonage property for the ensuing year be equally divided between the two ends of the parish. In the warrant for a meeting, March 31st, was an article in reference to hiring preaching, but no recorded action was taken on it. On the 21st of July it was "Voted to hire Some Suitable Person or Persons to Preach in this Parish upon Prohibition in Order for a settlement Amongst us."

It was voted to invite the neighboring ministers to preach among them, and to ask their advice in the matter. It was also voted to hire preaching for four months in the new meeting-house, and that the rent of the parsonage property should be laid out for preaching.

"And all Those that Incline to Lay out their Money for Preaching at the old Meeting House Signify it to the Select Men Seasonably."

"Malachi Shaw Dissents against the above Votes."

By a warrant dated Sept. 1, 1777, it appears that the selectmen had received from Hon. Jonathan Moulton, Esq., an offer of a tract of new land lying in Moultonboro' Gore, or addition, to be used in support of the gospel in the parish forever. On the 16th of September, Benjamin Sanborn, Jeremiah Lane, and Nehemiah Cram were chosen a committee to go and inspect said land. They reported at an adjourned meeting, November 4th, that it "appeared to them to be good and valuable land." A committee was chosen to thank Col. Moulton and seek some statement of his terms for "Bringing to and carrying on the proposed form." This meeting was adjourned to November 18th, for the evident purpose of hearing a report of the last committee, but the following is the sole record of that meeting: "The Moderator says this Meeting is Dissolved." At a meeting held December 29th following, for the purpose of making some arrangement about preaching, it was voted to exempt from ministerial tax that year those persons who had supported preaching at the old meeting-house and constantly attended upon the same. And it was also voted to extend a call to Mr. Ebenezer Dutch, on the same terms on which Mr. Wingate settled, viz.: the use of the parsonage property and fifty-five pounds lawful money. . . . "Good Indian Corn at four shillings per Bushel, and Other things equal thereto." The next record concerning preaching is under date of April 27, 1778, when "It was voted that the Lower Part of the Parish have what is commonly called the Lower Parsonage's Buildings and three salt marshes And the upper part of the Parish to have what is called the Upper Parsonage for the present year.

In the warrant for a meeting October 19th allusion is made to a plan for uniting with the parish in Seabrook to hire preaching between them. The Seabrook parish was at that time destitute of a settled pastor, Rev. Elias Hull, the second pastor, not being installed until Feb. 6, 1799. At the said meeting it was voted to hire preaching for two months in the new meeting-house. Then follow four adjournments of the same meeting without any recorded action, and with one of Samuel Wear's flourishes of the pen closes the first volume of the Hampton Falls records, numbering five hundred and fifty-four pages.

The first entry in the second volume of the parish records is the warrant for the annual meeting of 1799. Samuel Wear, son of Meshech, parish clerk for three years previous, continued to act in that capacity until 1788, twelve years in all. In 1787 he was one of the selectmen, his associates being (first) Nathaniel Hubbard Dodge and (third) Peter Tilton, and was afterwards a representative to the General Court. At this annual meeting it was voted to appropriate the income of the parsonage property for the support of the gospel in the parish, and all those who were dissatisfied with this arrangement could have their proportion by calling for it. May 18th, it was "Voted to hire Mr. Colby to preach at the New meeting House two months, including the two Sabbaths that are already past." And at a meeting held for the purpose June 14th it was voted to invite Mr. Zacheus Colby to settle at a salary of sixty pounds, besides the parsonage, and that he should preach at Seabrook such a part of the time as they should pay for. No further reference is made to him. At the annual meeting in 1780 the same disposition of the parsonage property was made as in the year previous, and at a meeting May 22d the committee were instructed to agree with Mr. Thurston to preach two Sabbaths. At a meeting December 11th it was voted not to hire any one to preach on probation, but it was voted to extend a call to Rev. Dr. Samuel Langdon to settle at a salary of fifty pounds lawful money annually, or forty-two pounds and eight cords of good merchantable fire-wood.

"Three and sixpence of said money to be as good as one Bushel of Indian Corn; four Pence Equal to One Pound of Pork; Two Pence half Penny Equal to One Pound of Good Beef."

And the buildings and outside fences of the parsonage were to be kept in repair, "as has been usual in times past," the lands to be free of taxes. The following is Mr. Langdon's letter of acceptance:

"Whereas the Inhabitants of the Parish of Hampton Falls at a Legal Meeting held the Eleventh Day of December, 1780, by their vote at said Meeting gave me a call to be their Minister; and by a subsequent vote made provision there he proceeds to carefully state the terms) all which votes have been communicated to me by their Committee: There seriously attended to the foregoing Call to devote my Labours in the Ministry of the Gospel to the Service of this Parish, and Notwithstanding some Discouragements which have appeared in my way, and the Earnest Applications which have been made to me by some other Parishes when there was a prospect of a Peaceable and Comfortable Settlement, I cannot but apprehend it to be my Duty to Comply with the Call of this Parish Considering the unhappy divided state they have been in for so many years past, and hoping I am not mistaken in Judging it to be a call from God, by the Intimations of his providence I do hereby Declare my acceptance of their Call, together with the provision made for that part of my support which is granted by the parish, the Delinquency of which is to be made up by the Brethren of the Church and Congregation only reserving to myself the Liberty of choice as to the alternative mentioned in the fifth vote. And relying on the gracious assistance of our Lord Jesus Christ I shall make it my constant Care, and Labour to fulfil the Duties of the Gospel Ministry in this place to the utmost of my abilities, so Long as God shall continue me among this people.

SAMUEL LANGDON, D.D.

" Hampton Falls, January 7th, 1781.

" For the parish clerk, in Hampton Falls, to be Recorded in the Parish Book."

It seems by a subsequent allusion of the records that Dr. Langdon chose the eight cords of wood in the place of the additional eight pounds lawful money. Good merchantable wood seems to have meant hard wood. It may be of interest to state that Rev. Paine Wingate was a candidate for State senator in 1786-87, and in 1788 a candidate "for Representative for the Federal government," which probably meant a member of the national House of Representatives, of which he was a member at some time. In all these cases he received a full vote in Hampton Falls, but in the latter case there was no choice, and at the election that followed his name does not appear as a candidate. Among the few allusions during Mr. Langdon's peaceful settlement, the following occurs in connection with the annual meeting, March, 1787:

"The Article Relative to making an addition to Doc<sup>r</sup> Langdon's Salary was taken under consideration, and no vote was passed upon it."

The following record occurs in January, 1788:

"The Rev<sup>d</sup> Doctor Samuel Langdon, D.D., was Chosen and Appointed for a Delegate for the Convention to be held at Exeter on the Second Wednesday of February next, for the purpose of adopting a Constitution for the United States."

The following clause from the warrant for the choice of Presidential electors in 1788 is worthy of being inserted here, however irrelevant it may seem to the subject in hand:

"And, as it is a matter perhaps of the greatest moment and Consequence to us and future posterity, it is to be hoped that a general attendance will be given, and that Each one will Endeavor to gain Such Information as shall Enable him to act with wisdom, pudence, and Discretion."

Evidently the present system of political bosses and machines did not then prevail in political affairs. The following vote was passed at the annual meeting in 1789:

"That the addition to Dr. Langdon's Salary for the future Shall be ten pence, at two Shillings for Days work, or if any Choose to pay money they may have liberty to pay."

It was previously voted that the addition should be in labor. Page 155 is filled with a record of marriages by Dr. Langdon, covering a period of three and a half years from March 18, 1786, to Sept. 21, 1789, and the number, fifteen, is small compared with the records of the earlier pastors in this line. In 1792 six marriages by Dr. Langdon are recorded, eight of the twelve persons being non-residents. Dec. 14, 1791, Mr. John Goddard and "Mr" Mary Langdon were united by the doctor. Perhaps Mary was a daughter of the doctor, and her marriage the result of an acquaintance formed while he was settled at Portsmouth, where Mr. Goddard resided. About this time "Falls" came to be written with a large F, and the term "parish" omitted.

In February, 1793, it was "Voted to Set the Parsonage Land Near Esqr weares, & 3dly, voted to Set Come of the Common on the South side of the old meeting house hit as much as Josiah Perveare took in to the School house frain."

And the committee chosen for that purpose were instructed to invest the proceeds in marsh land or upland, to be added to the parsonage.

For the year 1793 Dr. Langdon returned but four marriages, and five of the parties were non-residents.

In 1794, Paine Wingate was again a candidate for Congress.

From March, 1794, to March, 1795, Mr. Langdon returned eleven marriages, and twelve of the persons were non-residents. The next year he returned ten, of whom thirteen were non-residents. And in 1797 he returned only six, of whom just half were residents, among them Dudley Dodge and Betsey Fifield, married June 30, 1796. In 1796, Paine Wingate was again a candidate for senator, and also the year following. "Page 244, year 1797," contains the following records:

October 30th it was voted to hire some suitable person to preach four Sabbaths, and at an adjourned meeting, December 25th, it was voted to hire eight Sabbaths' preaching. And at another adjournment to Feb. 19, 1798, arrangements were made for two more Sabbaths, and "it was Put to vote and Desired by the Meeting that the Select Men Put up a Notification to see if the Town will hire Mr. Abbott upon Probation."

And at the same time a committee was appointed to confer with Lieut. Fifield and others, and invite them to join in public worship. Perhaps a similar measure might be beneficial at the present time, in view of the many who do not join in public worship. The above records are the only intimation that Dr. Langdon had been ill, had died, and been buried.

From other sources it is learned that he was born in Boston, Mass., in 1723; graduated at Harvard in 1740; opened a school in Portsmouth soon after; was settled as pastor at Portsmouth from 1746 to 1774, after acting as associate pastor for one or two years; president of Harvard from 1774 to 1780; installed pastor at Hampton Falls Jan. 18, 1781, and died Nov. 29, 1797, aged seventy-five, having been settled sixteen years. Tradition says that as president of Harvard he failed in discipline, and that as a preacher he was quite lengthy, the sun being well down in winter when the afternoon service closed, and no fire in the meeting-house either. In delivering his discourse he used a magnifying glass, occasionally examining his manuscript with its aid, and then folding it up, proceeded from memory. While settled here Mr. Langdon had the misfortune to break a leg, obliging him to preach standing in the broad aisle for several Sabbaths before he was able to assume his usual place in the lofty pulpit. It is learned from tradition that growing feeble from advanced age, he recommended Mr. Abbott as his successor.

March 12, 1798, it was voted to hire Mr. Abbott five Sabbaths on probation, and at the expiration of that time a call was extended to him to settle as pastor. The terms offered him were the parsonage, as usual, ten cords of pine and hemlock wood delivered at his door, two hundred dollars, and his choice between six cords of good merchantable hard wood and twenty-five dollars. May 7th, a month later, this offer was increased to "300 silver dollars," and his lengthy letter of acceptance, on record, is dated June 2, 1798. From the parish records it is learned that Rev. Jacob Abbott and Mrs. Catharine Thayer were joined in marriage Feb. 11, 1802, and that their first daughter was born exactly nine months afterwards, November 11th. There are also recorded the births of two sons and six daughters, making nine children in all. These births were all at regular intervals of two years, with the exception of the last, when the time was eleven months. Mr. Abbott may be considered as the last of the parish pastors, and the only one of the six<sup>1</sup> who had any children while here, so far as the records show. The second volume of the parish or town records ends with the beginning of 1814, and the only further reference to Mr. Abbott in this volume is as chairman of the school committee in 1801 and 1807. The only other instance of a committee "to inspect the schools" was in 1794, when Rev. Dr. Langdon was chairman. In all these cases Nath. Hubbard Dodge was a member of that committee.

We have already seen how soon after the settlement of Mr. Wingate, in 1763, the secession of the Presbyterians finally led to the incorporation of the parish and town of Seabrook; and, by the way, an effort was made in 1782 to form a town comprising

Seabrook and a part of Hampton Falls, to be called New Hampton Falls. At the dedication of the new town hall of Hampton Falls, Oct. 30, 1877, in the course of an historical address, the orthodox speaker said, "About this time the Baptists gave the authorities much trouble." And it is true that in 1808 they did object to being taxed for the support of another minister besides their own, and found it necessary, in order to obtain a hearing, to appeal to Thomas Leavitt, a justice of Hampton Falls, to call a meeting—

"to see if said meeting will agree to discharge the Congregational tax standing against the Baptist Society in said Hampton falls." "to see if the meeting will agree that the inhabitants each of them have liberty to attend any Society they like best and pay their minister tax where they attend only."

And in the light of to-day their request does not seem very unreasonable, though from the remark of the speaker a contrary impression might have been received. The following are the names of the persons who signed the petition for the above-named meeting: William Brown, Billy Dodge, Jacob Green, John Pike, Toppan Chase, James Green, Nathan Robie, Dudley Dodge, John Brown, Josiah Pike, Isaac Brown, Thomas Moulton, John H. Dodge, Isaac Dodge, Zephaniah Brown, Caleb Pike, Jeremiah Gove, Nathan Brown, Jacob Brown, Jeremiah Gove, Jr., Jonathan Fifield. These people were at that time Christian Baptists, though some of them afterwards became regular Baptists, called by some Calvin Baptists. William Brown was a lay preacher, united with the regular Baptists in 1835, was chosen a deacon, and died in 1856. Jacob and Zephaniah survived him, and remained connected with the Christian Baptists until the last. At the meeting held "at the Congregational meeting-house" these people received a prompt and decided "no" to their requests. But agitation of the truth is never in vain, and "truth, though crushed to earth, will rise again." At the next term of court they entered an action against the selectmen to recover the tax assessed against them in 1806. And at the annual meeting of 1809 it was voted:

"In respect to the Baptists that the Selectmen shall not tax those that present Certificates to them at or before the assessments are made."

for the minister tax. And Nathaniel H. Dodge, Jeremiah Blake, and Theo. F. Sanborn were chosen a committee to settle the legal actions commenced.

In 1810 they were denied their request for a share of the parsonage property, but this point also they finally gained. Rev. Jacob Abbott was the only one of the six parish pastors born in New Hampshire, the rest all being natives of Massachusetts. All were graduates of Harvard, for that was then the only college in the country. Mr. Abbott was born at Wilton, N. H., in 1768, graduated in 1792, was ordained Aug. 15, 1798, and resigned April 1, 1826, after a settlement of twenty-eight years. While settled here Mr. Abbott used to have in his family young men fitting for Harvard, or those who had been conditioned or suspended, and among the number was one afterwards known as Prof. Webster, who was hanged for the murder of Mr. Parkman. Tradition says he had the reputation of being a hard boy while residing in this place. Mr. Abbott was drowned on Sabbath day, Nov. 2, 1834, at Windham, N. H., aged fifty-six. He preached on the day of his death, and was returning from meeting in a boat across a pond in company with two of his own sons, a neighbor, and his son. Two of the young men escaped by swimming, Ebenezer Abbott clung to the boat and was saved, while the two elder men were drowned. One of Mr. Abbott's daughters became the wife of N. Porter Cram, of Hampton Falls, and is still living with a daughter at Winchester, Mass. In 1826, after Mr. Abbott was dismissed, Mr. Moses Dow preached about three years as a stated supply. The following is taken from the records of the Hampton Falls and Seabrook Evangelical Congregational Church:

"The Rev. Henry C. Jewett was engaged to preach during the summer of 1834. He came in June & remained three or four months. He preached a part of the time in the Hampton Falls meeting house & the remainder in the Exeter Road school-house; the Unitarians having possession of the meeting-house. After he left those who preferred evangelical preaching went to the Congregational meeting house in Seabrook, where the Rev. Jonathan Ward, was their preacher.

"Mr. Abbott, was a Unitarian during the last of his ministry. During his ministry many of the people united with the Baptists or became Unitarian. A part of the chh. however continued steadfast in the faith once delivered to the saints, adhering to and maintaining those doctrines which are generally received by what are called the 'Orthodox Churches of New England' & which are termed the Calvinistic Doctrines. But in consequence of the division of sentiment on the subject of religion among the people generally & in compliance with the advice of neighboring ministers who had been consulted on the subject, those who had remained firm in the faith concluded to unite with the people of Seabrook—Seabrook for the purpose of maintaining public religious worship & the ordinances of the gospel. This union after much consultation, delay & discouragement was ultimately effected.

"1764 About the 1st of Nov. 1764 a church was organized in the south part of the town of Hampton Falls, formerly a part of Hampton & now Seabrook. This church was of the Presbyterian order & was connected with the Boston Presbytery. The first Presbyterian chh. of Newbury Port was represented at the organization by John Moulton & Amos Coffin. The chh. was made principally of disaffected members of the Hampton Falls church. They gave as a reason for withdrawing that they were dissatisfied with Mr. Wingate & that they preferred the Presbyterian form of chh. government. Uniting with a few others from other towns they constituted a separate chh. The records of this chh., if any were kept, have been lost. But there are still in existence copies of 'A Sermon Preached January 31, 1765 at the Ordination of the Rev. Samuel Perley, to the Pastoral care of the Presbyterian chh. & congregation at Hampton Falls. By George Leslie A. M. Pastor of a chh. at Lincoln.' It seems that their were many obstacles to the organization of a chh. after this form & to the establishing the gospel in this order. One of the objections probably was a remonstrance from the Congregational chh. in Hampton Falls; & it is conceived that some would be opposed to the Presbyterian form of chh. government. About 15 years after this those who formerly belonged to the Hampton Falls chh., or a part of them, returned and were readmitted. Mr. Perley, was born at Ipswich Mass 1742; graduated at Harvard 1763; ordained July 31 1765, & dismissed May 22<sup>d</sup> 1775, died in Maine Nov. 28, 1831, at the advanced age of 89.

"1775. After Mr. Perley's dismissal there was no settled minister in Seabrook for many years. Public worship was continued, but the chh. was much scattered.

"1799, Feby 6, Rev. Elias Hall was settled as pastor over the chh. of Christ in Seabrook. Mr. Hall was born in Tolland Conn, 1778, settled Feby 6, 1799 & died Feby 28, 1822, 23 years from time of his settlement.

During the latter part of his life he preached only occasionally. He had become unsteady and finally died an inebriate, when he was but settled he was an acceptable preacher & had a full house. He was not a graduate of any college, preached without notes and was a very fluent speaker. He once favored Methodist views but was settled as a Congregationalist. The Presbyterian form of the chh. was lost & the Congregational took its place. But the records, if any were kept are not now to be found. Dea. Wene, Dea. Tucker (of Salisbury) Dea. Merrill Thomas Tine, John Eaton, Benjamin Eaton, Thomas O'By, & Joseph Felch are reported to have been among the members of the old Presbyterian church. Dea. Tucker and Thomas Tine, were members of the old Congregational Church. There were probably others, but these are all the names of males that can now be collected. The Congregational church contained but few male members.

"1822 After the death of Mr. Hall, there was not settled minister in Seabrook for several years. Part of the time they had preachers of different denominations, at others by the Missionary Society, & a part of the time they were entirely destitute."

The first meeting-house in Hampton Falls stood on the common not far from the present site of the Weare monument. It was erected about 1711, repaired in 1737 by putting on a new roof, etc., used for worship and the frequent business meetings of the parish or town until 1768 or later, and sold at auction Jan. 13, 1780, and the proceeds appropriated for the support of the poor. The second meeting-house in Hampton Falls was located near where the dwelling-house of Wells W. Healey now stands. The committee to locate it in the centre of the population were Elisha Present, William Present, Jonathan Cram, and John Tilton. They reported Oct. 26, 1768, that it be "Set on the hill upon the recent piece of Land where the School-house formerly stood, near Le<sup>t</sup>. Joseph Sanborn's." The building committee reported Feb. 7, 1769, the sale of twenty-six pews on the floor and one in the gallery for three hundred and fifty-one pounds and two shillings proclamation money, to be paid in materials, and estimated that the sale of the other pews would furnish all the means needed for its erection.

May 10, 1771, is recorded the delivery of the new meeting-house by the building committee, composed of Elisha Prescott, Samuel Present, William Present, and Jonathan Cram. No estimate of cost is given. Its size was sixty-five feet by forty, with pitch roof; it stood facing the sea, with entrances on the front and west ends, having horse-blocks in front of these entrances. The singing gallery was on the front, facing the pulpit, with the women's gallery on the east end and the men's on the west. On the first floor seats were arranged around the walls, with the high square pews in the body of the house. These pews were about five feet square.<sup>1</sup> So far as can be learned the bell on Rockingham Academy was the only one ever hung in Hampton Falls. March 30, 1739, a meeting was called for the express purpose "to see if the People belonging to this meeting Raise money to by a bell for the yonse of said Parish," but in the record of the meeting no allusion whatever is made to the subject. The first parsonage-house stood where the dwelling of Mr. Joseph T. Sanborn now stands, and it seems by the following records that this house and outbuildings were erected or purchased by Mr. Colton during his ministry:

"20th day of November 1825, Voted that we will take up with Maddum Coltons offer and will let her buildings & Land and all things thereon excepting her members three hundred and forty pounds in money or Lawfull 10/6 of Credit."

Of this amount one hundred pounds was to be paid in six months, with interest on the balance until paid. The following record, like a good many of its companions, is puzzling at first sight, but the interpretation seems to be that in the mean time "Maddum Colton" had become "Maddum Newmarch.":

"27th of March, 1729, Voted that the Selo. men have power to Raise ye whole SIXty pounds in money this present year which is due from this parish to maddum newmarch for the purching her buildings and outbuild and Land."

In February, 1749, during the ministry of Mr. Whipple, the parsonage-house was burned and the minister and his family found friendly shelter in the Sweet tavern-house. The large elm-tree on the premises of Mr. John H. Gove, known to the boys of forty years ago as "the big elum," stood in the front yard of this tavern. It was set out by one of Mr. Sweet's daughters, and in 1762 was about the size of a gallon bottle. Struck by lightning some years since, its former glory has departed. This temporary residence of Mr. Whipple is described as "the house of Benjamin Sweet, Inholder, where Mr. Morton lately lived," and the rent of the "house, cow-yard and well" was thirty pounds old tenor per year. February 19th, probably the day after the fire, a meeting was called for the 26th, when it was voted to build a new house on the same spot, two stories in height, forty feet by thirty-one feet, with one stack of chimneys. And under date of March 12, 1750, the building committee, Jonathan Fifield, Samuel Walton, Josiah Bachelder, and Jona Sweet, reported the cost of the new house as eighteen hundred and seven pounds sixteen shillings and two pence old tenor. In October, 1837, Deacon Emery Batchelder assisted in taking down this house, and he says it was then a good house, painted inside and out, and that the "stack of chimneys consisted of three flues, the inside dimensions being sufficient for a bedroom." After the building of the new meeting-house these premises were not conveniently situated for the use of the minister, and permission was obtained from the Legislature to dispose of them. The site of the last parsonage-house was where the dwelling of Mr. Lewis T. Sanborn now stands. This house, then occupied by Rev. A. M. Bridge, the last settled Unitarian minister, was destroyed by fire in 185-, and in this fire perished the early records of the parish church, except the little volume from which so many extracts have been given. After Mr. Bridge's death, it was given by Mrs. Bridge to Mr. George Osgood, of Kensington, and no one in Hampton Falls knew of its existence until a few months since.

In regard to the meeting-house erected by the Presbyterians in 1763, the statement that its timbers came from six different towns is not improbable, for the parish of Hampton originally included more towns than that, and it was the custom at that time to contribute materials instead of money; and during its history of one hundred and nineteen years it has been occupied by almost as many religious organizations,—first, by the Presbyterians in 1764; second, by the Congregationalists in 1799; third, by the Baptists in 1828; fourth, by the Congregationalists in 1835; and finally by the Baptists again in 1859. What other house of worship in the land can exceed this record? During Mr. Perley's pastorate, from 1765 to 1775, he owned, or at least occupied, the house recently clapboarded and painted and long occupied by Mr. David Boyd. The timbers of this house are almost entirely of hard wood, but the few pine ones are fully as sound. The date "1765," marked under the roof boards with lime, is supposed to indicate its age. The "chimney stack" is composed of five different flues. One side in the attic has been plastered, evidently at a later date, and in this is marked the date "1756." One brick was inscribed "D. W." before being burned, and the house is said to have been erected on a part of the original Weare homestead by Deacon Nathaniel Weare for the occupation of his son Daniel, a brother of Meshech. A son-in-law of Rev. Mr. Hall is now residing in Hampton Falls. As a comment on the drinking customs of those times, it is stated by the highest authority that Mr. Hall actually died from delirium tremens. Having accumulated some property, was induced by his brothers in business in Boston to endorse for them, and, losing all his property in this way, became discouraged and drank more excessively than he otherwise might have done. It is said that Rev. Timothy P. Ropes, first pastor of the Baptist Church, in 1828, was the first minister in this vicinity to stand up against the habit of ministerial drinking. Among those present at the State Temperance Convention at Nashua in June, 1832, was Rev. Sumner Lincoln, glorious name, now past eighty years old, who was settled in Hampton Falls in 1843 as pastor of the Unitarian Church. In private conversation he stated that in his early ministry he had attended funerals where a man walked by the side of the bearers with a bottle, and that a halt was made and the casket, borne on their shoulders, set down, that they might drink on the way to the cemetery. Standing up manfully against this custom, he publicly announced that he would attend no more funerals where liquor was used, and though remonstrated with by leading men, his decided action put an end to the custom in that place.

Starting in 1711 and following the course of "the new parrish att Hampton," or "ye new Parrish of Hampton," the terms used in the first record made, we find under date of 1737 a list of twenty-two males and thirty-five females peaceably dismissed to form a church at Kensington of the same order. In 1764 the Presbyterians go out under protest and cause a division of the township; and before this, in 1744, several had become "Quaqs" and left. In 1808 the Baptists leave and set up for themselves; and about 1835 occurred the most vital division of all. A radical orthodox might say it was a division of soul and body, and that while the numerically stronger part retained the body,—the meeting-house,—the other part possessed the soul of vital doctrines. But previous to this time, April 30, 1827, twenty-nine persons had legally organized themselves under the name of the "First Congregational Society in Hampton falls," which title is retained to-day by the organization known only to those outside as the Unitarian Church or Society. Of the twenty-nine constituent members of this society only two survive, Robert S. and True M. Prescott. The final division was evidently the result of the "half-way covenant," for preaching against which Jonathan Edwards, of immortal fame as a theologian, was driven from his life settlement at Northampton, Mass., and reduced to poverty by the sacrifice of his real estate in that place. A similar experience has been the lot of every earnest radical reformer since the world began.

On the 30th day of March, 1832, the selectmen sold the parsonage, land, buildings, and wood, and on the 8th of October the assessors of the Congregational Society received for $1154.91, that being the proportion due said society. And at the annual meeting of this society April 4, 1836,—

"It was put to vote to see if the Society would give those persons who contemplated forming themselves into a new Society to be called the Hampton Falls and Seabrook Congregational Society their proportion of the fund. Passed in the negative, six voting in favor, eight against."

But on second sober thought this decision was reversed, and at the next annual meeting, in 1837, it was "Voted that the funds of the first Congregational society in Hampton falls be divided into two parts according to polls and retable estate of the year A. D. 1836 provided the disaffected part of said society, with such other members of said society as may join with them, shall form a separate society, and withdraw from this society, producing a certificate from the Clerk of their society that they are actual members thereof."

The common fund at this time amounted to $1500, of which the new society received $450. May 13, 1837, the following names are recorded as having withdrawn: Thayer S. Sanborn, Reuben Bachelder, Emery Bachelder, Moses Bachelder, Samuel Bachelder, Jonathan Cram, Jr., Luke Ayerill, Joshua Pike, Jonathan Cram, Stephen Green, Robert S. Prescott, Josiah Bachelder, Sherburn W. Rand, Caleb Tilton, Rebecca F. Cram, and Polly Dow, of whom Deacons Emery Bachelder and Robert S. Prescott are the only survivors. Leaving to another the task of sketching the further history of those who remained, the writer will follow those who went out. 1834. While the Rev. Mr. Jerrett was preaching in Hampton Falls a meeting was held Sept. 18, 1834, for the purpose of "taking into consideration the expediency of uniting the towns of Hampton Falls, Seabrook, and Kensington into one Evangelical Congregational Society." This meeting was adjourned from time to time, and as a final result of the deliberations had at these meetings "the Evangelical Congregational Society of Seabrook and Hampton Falls" was formed and a meeting-house erected. This stands near the line which separates the two towns. 1835. The people of Hampton Falls united with the people of Seabrook to support the gospel. They attended meeting together at the old meeting-house in Seabrook. The Rev. Jonathan Ward preached for them during the summer. The Rev. David Sunderland was employed during the next season. He preached part of the time in the old meeting-house and part of the time in the new house. 1836. The Rev. D. Sunderland was preaching in the place when the new house was dedicated. He preached in it for several months. During the remainder of the year and a part of the next the desk was supplied by occasional preachers, principally from the theological institution at Andover. 1837, February. On the first Sabbath in February, 1837, Deacon Timothy Abbott, a native of Andover, Mass., preached for the first time in the place. He graduated at Amherst College in 1833, completed his theological studies at Andover, September, 1836, and was licensed by the Andover Association. After preaching a few months he received the following communication:

"REV. S. T. ABBOTT:

"SIR.—I am requested to inform you that the Seabrook and Hampton Falls Evangelical Congregational Society, at a meeting on the 24th of June inst., voted that the sum of five hundred dollars for one year be given you as a salary, and request you to settle as pastor of said society. They also request you to return an answer in writing as soon as the 1st day of July next, at which time this meeting stands adjourned.

"JACOB NOYES, Clerk of said Society.

"SEABROOK, June 27, 1837."

Mr. Abbott accepted July 1st and was ordained on the 12th, at which time twenty-two persons dismissed from the Hampton Falls Church, together with Widow Mehitable Eaton, formerly of the old church in Seabrook, were organized into a church styled "The First Evangelical Congregational Church of Seabrook and Hampton Falls." Rev. Jonathan French, father-in-law of Mr. Abbott, and settled at Northampton for fifty years, was moderator of the council, and the sermon was preached by Rev. Samuel M. Worcester, of Salem.

August 4th, Stephen Green was chosen deacon, and the pastor was authorized to procure a book and keep the records. Mr. Abbott was a man of historical tastes, and these records are a model, not only portraying the history of the church minutely, but recording the history of each individual member in their church relations. August 6th, Mrs. A. Smith and Mrs. S. Felch, members of the old Seabrook Church, were admitted. Mrs. Smith was brought into the meeting-house in her chair, being eighty-five years old and very infirm. "December 7th, Thanksgiving. Pleasant. One hundred and more present." December 31st, Mrs. Charissa Fifield was baptized by immersion. March 19, 1838, Mrs. Nancy Brown, of Kensington, being dangerously ill, was baptized and received into the church and received the sacrament of the Lord's Supper.

March 28th, a protracted meeting commenced, and Miss Nancy Brown died.

March 31st, meetings concluded. Meetings full, some conversions. The Baptist and Methodist people met with them.

April 5th, twenty-two inquirers present, sixteen of whom are hoping.

May 6th, Jefferson Janin and others were admitted. "During the last week an organ was placed in the meeting-house. It was built by Mr. Morse, of Newburyport. Cost about $700. Was purchased by Doct. Edward Dearborn and Miss Mary Knight, and by them presented to the society."

June 17th, thirteen were propounded for admission.

July 1st, "In less than a year 41 have been added to the chh., more than double the original number."

September 2d, Hannah, wife of John Porter, and daughter of Mesheck Ware, Thayer S. Sanborn and wife, and five others were received. "Mrs. Porter is 84 years old."

These records are made without formality, and somewhat in the style of a diary. Only the most interesting items are here presented.

1839, April 1st, died Widow Abigail Smith, in her eighty-seventh year; was a member of the old Seabrook Church, under Mr. Hull.

May 5th, Walter Williams, of Hampton Falls, and two others received. Mr. Williams was an aged man, using a crutch. Was a substitute in the war of 1812. Lived where J. H. Hamilton now resides.

June 18-20, at County Conference at Launprey River,—now Newmarket,—Governor Phinney, from Liberia, was present and made a statement respecting African colonization.

July 4th, Sunday-school celebration at Hampton. People from North Hampton and this vicinity attended. About two hundred children present. Procession of teachers and scholars, about two hundred and seventy-five in number, marched to music from the academy to the meeting-house, where appropriate exercises were held, and then returned to the academy for refreshments.

1840, January 5th, John Batchelder baptized and admitted. March, M. Merriam appointed superintendent of Sunday-school.

June 11th, the pastor presented a letter of dismission from the South Church in Andover, and his wife, Sarah F., one from the church in North Hampton, and were received July 5th.

On the evening of August 26th Rev. Mr. Noigs, a missionary from Ceylon, preached.

November 12th, Thanksgiving, Rev. Mr. Hadley, of Salisbury Point, preached, ninety-one present.

December 27th, severe snow-storm, only fifteen present, third successive stormy Sabbath.

1841, January 26th, pastor and delegates attended council at Kittery to dismiss Rev. Tobias Horn Miller, father of Frank W. Miller.

February 14th, baptized Adelaide Sarah, daughter of the pastor, born Jan. 6, 1841. Ordinance administered by her grandfather, Rev. Jonathan French.

May 14th, national fast, occasioned by the death of President William H. Harrison. He died April 4th, aged sixty-eight. Eighty present at the meeting.

July 5th, celebration of independence at Hampton by the children. Addresses and refreshments near Mr. Thomas Ward's. About three hundred and fifty walked in procession. The writer of this sketch was present, having just entered his sixth year. July 15th, pastor read a letter of confession from a married female member, who previous to marriage "had been guilty of irregular conduct." Voted to suspend, and a committee was appointed to visit and report. August 19th, committee reported and case deferred. Voted to purchase a pew for the use of the pastor's family. November 25th, Thanksgiving day, 75 present: temperance meeting in the P.M., and one in the evening in the Methodist house. "Reformed drunkards addressed the congregation with good effect."

1842, January 20th. Two females and one male member of the same name brought to trial for bad treatment and bad talk in a family difficulty. They confessed, repented, and were admonished. April 7th, State fast, 75 present. July 4th, Sunday-school celebration at Hampton, 300 children present. Mary Knight died at Ossipee, May 19th, 1840, leaving by her will half of the organ, and $100 to the church. "July 23d. Last night about ten o'clock a barn owned by Maj. Samuel George and a building owned by Dr. Edward Dearborn, and occupied by Matthew Merriam as a dwelling-house and store, were consumed by fire. Brother M. had charge of the communion ware, consisting of two flagons, two plates, six cups, and one baptismal basin. These were all destroyed by fire. The basin and a part of the other things were a present from the ladies and the church at Newbury Port. The fire is supposed to be the work of an incendiary." This was the first fire in this vicinity known to the writer.

August 11th, the case of female irregularity having once been deferred, was now settled by the restoration of the offender after suitable admonition and advice; forty-seven dollars paid for the pastor's pew and deed here recorded. Jan. 11, 12, and 13, 1843, special meetings at private houses; 16th to 21st held meetings in afternoon and evening in the meeting-house, through the week assisted by other ministers. Attendance in afternoon from fifty-nine to one hundred and twenty, and in evening from one hundred and eighteen to one hundred and sixty-eight; about forty inquirers; 22d, meetings full and solemn, six or more appear to have been converted during the day. Meetings continued the next week with preaching daily by other ministers. Afternoon attendance thirty to ninety-six, evening eighty-four to one hundred and fifty-two. Interest increasing, many indulging hope. January 23d, death of Ann T., daughter of Deacon S. Green, after an illness of two years: a consistent and exemplary member. January 29th, baptized his son, Asa George, born Dec. 23, 1842. February 4th, some meetings held and others prevented by violent storms. February 11th, meetings almost wholly prevented by severe and stormy weather. February 18th, meetings through the week, principally in private houses. February 25th, some interesting meetings during the week. March 5th, some meetings, thinly attended on account of the weather. March 23d, weather and traveling have prevented meetings; much sickness; letters of Christian greeting were received from other denominations inviting us to join in their special meetings, and were responded to, and accepted in part. April 6th, annual Fort church and inquiry meeting, also temperance meeting.

May 7th, eight added to the church. July, three received. July 4th, Sunday-school celebration. General invitation. Eight hundred present at the morning services in the meeting-house. Over seven hundred walked in procession to a grove on land of James Locke. Picnic table one hundred and eighty feet long. From twelve to fifteen hundred present. Addresses and singing for an hour. Ten ministers present and took part. (Most of these entries are much condensed.) July 30th, salary reduced to four hundred and twenty-five dollars, allowing pastor to make up balance elsewhere. September 3d, three received. November 5th, one admitted. November 30th, eighty present at thanksgiving services. December 30th, town of Seabrook voted, ninety-nine to thirty-five, to stop the sale of liquor. Committee of twelve chosen, and two hundred and fifty-eight dollars raised for that purpose.

1844, February 15th, J. Noyes Sunday-school superintendent. February 21st, donation visit by fifty or sixty of the young people. March 29th, State fast, sixty-five present. June 10th, Reuben Batchelder chosen deacon, Emery Batchelder, Jacob Noyes, and Thayer S. Sanborn having all declined. "July 4th, a Washingtonian celebration was held by the 'Rockingham County Washington Total Abstinence Temperance Society' at Boar's Head, Hampton Beach. A prize banner was presented by the ladies of Portsmouth to the societies of Seabrook and Hampton Falls, whose delegates ranked highest on the score of merit on that occasion." November 8th, another case of female discipline, which resulted in a satisfactory confession, when she was admonished and forgiven. These cases are not here referred to as a matter of gossip, but to indicate the advantage of suspension and discipline in place of immediate exclusion. November 14th, sixty-eight present at thanksgiving-services. December, amount collected for benevolent objects, fifty-six dollars.

1845, January 19th, pastor baptized his second daughter, Anna Farrar, born December 1st. February 4th, heaviest snow-storm for twenty years, preventing the holding of some special meetings.

March 20th, Samuel Batchelder Sunday-school superintendent. April 17th, annual fast, stormy day, 30 present; P.M., annual meeting of the Seabrook Temperance Society. May 25th, fire at the meeting-house on account of the cold. July 4th, Sunday-school celebration A.M., 300 in the meeting-house, 400 in procession, and 600 at the collation in Locke's grove. The preparatory lectures were often preached by "Father" Jonathan French. November 27th, Thanksgiving; meeting prevented by the severest rain-storm known for 30 years. December 31st, amount for benevolent purposes, $54; admitted to the church, 1; baptized, 4; deaths, 14; marriages, 7.

1846, April 1st, 60 present at fast-day services. May 13th, album visit; about 50 supped, ladies in P.M. and gentlemen in the evening. July 4th, Sunday-school celebration at North Hampton, 500 in the meeting-house, 600 in procession, and 800 at the table. November 29th, pastor baptized his second son, Albert Timothy. December 20th, dismissed to Andover Rhoda, daughter of Deacon Reuben Batchelder and wife of Sylvester Abbott, of Andover. She was one of the earliest school-teachers of the writer. December 31st, collection, $62; baptisms, 2; deaths, 12; marriages, 6. 1847, Jan. 5th, funeral of Mrs. Dr. Sewell Brown, a member of the church. April 15th, annual fast and temperance meeting. April 23d, B. F. Cram Sunday-school superintendent; September 12th, preaching by Rev. J. Sewell, of Maine, aged eighty-seven. November 30th, 51 present at thanksgiving-service. December 31st, amount of collections for benevolent purposes, $84; deaths, 13. 1848, January 27th, pastor ill and unable to attend service for the first time in many years. April 13th, 71 present at fast-day services; P.M., temperance meeting in Methodist meeting-house. July 4th, Sunday-school celebration at Hampton. July 2d, pastor baptized his infant daughter, Mary French.

July 18th and 19th, Piscataqua Association met here. August 19th, Aaron, son of Moses Batchelder, buried, aged thirty-three. November 16th, Thanksgiving; fifty present. March 6th, "Edward Dearborn, M.D., died at his residence in Seabrook. He had been a practicing physician in the place more than fifty years. A valuable citizen, an influential man, he dies much lamented. He was one of the founders and principal supporters of the society. He was buried from the meeting-house on the 10th. Large numbers followed him to the grave." March 24th, B. F. Cram, superintendent. April 3d, fast and temperance meeting. June 14th, "Died of smallpox, at his residence in Seabrook, Jacob Noyes, Esq., aged 65. He was one of the founders and a prominent supporter of this religious society, and a consistent and influential member of this church." July 4th, no celebration. September 10th, the will of Dr. Edward Dearborn was proved in court. He bequeathed $4000 to the society, provided there should be no change in its doctrines. He also provided means for the establishment of Dearborn Academy, in Seabrook.

December 31st, whole number of deaths, including those away from home and at sea, fifty-two; marriages, seven; received to the church, six; one church-member died; baptisms, five; benevolent contributions, forty-one dollars. 1852, Jan. 26, a female member restored, after a course of discipline. March 16th, died in the seventy-fifth year of her age, Phebe, widow of Dr. Edward Dearborn, and a descendant of Mrs. Hannah Dustin of famous Indian memory. She relinquished her right of dower in favor of Dearborn Academy. April 2d, voted about two hundred volumes of Sunday-school library to the destitute in Prince Edward's Island, to be delivered by Capt. William Sanborn, S. Brown, superintendent of the Sunday-school. June 30th, the church called an ex-parte council to consider the propriety of the dissolution of the pastoral relations between themselves and Rev. S. T. Abbott. The two churches in Newburyport, the two in Exeter, and those in Durham and Amesbury were represented by pastors and delegates. The report of the council is a diplomatic document. After complimenting those who called the council, the report proceeds to speak of Mr. Abbott in the highest terms, and in substance to advise his continuance in the pastoral relation.

December 31st, deaths, twenty-five; marriages, ten; contributions, sixty dollars. 1853, Jan. 16, Rev. Jonathan French, D.D., baptized John Alden, third son of the pastor, born December 12th, Sabbath day. March 28th, T. S. Sanborn, Sunday-school superintendent. Collectors appointed as usual for the different benevolent objects. December 6th, the church called another ex-parte council to seek advice about difficulties existing between church and pastor. The following churches were represented by pastor and a delegate: The Belleville, North, and Whitefield of Newburyport, North of Portsmouth, First Church Exeter, Byfield, Mass., Hampton, and Amesbury. The following resolution was presented and adopted: Resolved, that the pastoral relation existing between the church and Rev. S. T. Abbott be and is hereby recommended to be dissolved.

December 15th, at a church meeting, voted, that, whereas, etc., the pastoral relation between this church and Rev. S. T. Abbott be now dissolved. December 25th, notwithstanding the wardens had notified Mr. Abbott that his services were no longer needed and that the house would be closed, he preached as usual. December 31st, deaths, 27; marriages, 8; councils, 2; baptisms, 2; contributions, $44. 1854, January 8th, Sabbath. Although the wardens had notified Mr. Abbott that they had engaged some one else to preach, he appeared, claimed the pulpit, and preached. The wardens then obtained a legal injunction, which was served on Mr. Abbott on the following Saturday. Mr. Abbott then called an ex-parte council, composed of pastors and delegates from twelve churches at a distance, none of whom had participated in the other councils. The following is the substance of their report. Leaving out of view then the question whether he should remain so, the council are unanimously of the opinion that he is still pastor of, etc., . . . his pastoral relation having never been dissolved according to the usage and principles recognized of the Congregational Churches of New England and by the civil courts. December 31st, during the past year the pulpit was supplied by ministers from abroad, for the most part of Rev. Martin Moore, of Boston, and a Mr. Wallace.

1855, March 28th, after the injunction was served on Mr. Abbott he preached in his own house until a few weeks before his death, which occurred March 28, 1855. Mr. Abbott was not a handsome man, nor sprightly in his delivery, but he possessed a sound, sensible, and well-educated mind, and the substance of his discourses was good, and it cannot be denied that he labored faithfully for the welfare of his church and community. He stood stilly upon his ecclesiastical rights, desiring to remain where he had built himself a house and spent seventeen years of his life; while, on the other hand, the leading men of the church probably considered that they should be permitted to say who should minister to them. Under a more flexible system there might have been less friction. March 31st, during the past three the pulpit has been occupied by Rev. Theodore Cook and others. April 1st, Rev. L. G. Marsh boarded in the place, and preached six Sabbaths from this time. July 29th, the pulpit has been occupied every Sabbath this year, but by different persons. To-day Rev. Mr. Bushnell preached. October 27th, he preached for the last time here. October 28th, Rev. Henry A. Lounsbury, of New York, preached. November 30th, voted to invite Mr. Lounsbury to become the pastor, and under date of December 24th Mr. Lounsbury accepted in a brief note of four or five lines, and named February 13th as the date of his ordination, and he was accordingly ordained at that time, the sermon being preached by Rev. Dr. Dimmick, of Newburyport, who had participated in the ordination of Mr. Abbott, nearly nineteen years previously.

Under date of Sept. 16, 1857, in a communication of five lines, Mr. Lounsbury resigned his pastoral charge, and was regularly dismissed by a council called for the purpose. Brevity characterized both his communications and his pastorate. He preached his last discourse October 11th. December 31st, services have been held in the church every Sabbath during the year. 1858, March 7th, Rev. John Moor, of Andover, has preached for nineteen Sabbaths. April 25th, Rev. Edward Abbott, of Andover, has supplied for seven Sabbaths, and many extra evening meetings have been held. He has visited and preached to the people of South Seabrook. Mrs. Debora W., wife of Thayer

S. Sanborn, died 1859. December 11th, Rev. Mr. Thompson, of Stratham, has supplied since May 2, 1858. Voted to close the church for the present (1866). Urgent request having been made that the house should again be opened for public worship, a meeting was held Tuesday evening, May 15th, at which about one hundred and fifty persons were present, including S. Y. Spaulding, D.D., of Newburyport, Rev. Edward Rand, of Amesbury, and Rev. J. W. Dodge, of Hampton, and a vote was then taken to ascertain the views of the congregation about opening the house. And notice was then given that the house would again be opened on the first Sabbath in June, with preaching by Rev. Mr. Rand, of Amesbury. December 30th, the pulpit has been supplied every Sabbath since June by different clergymen.

1867. Rev. A. B. Peabody accepted an invitation from the society to supply the pulpit for a year, and commenced his labors April 1st. May 16th, the house of the late Dr. Sewell Brown was purchased as a parsonage. Deacon Stephen Green died May 18th after a few days' sickness, aged eighty-five years and ten months. June 28th, commenced repairing church, Sabbath services held in Dearborn Academy Hall. July 9th, a church of seventeen members was organized at South Seabrook, as the result of a revival of religion under the labors of Mr. William A. Rand. This church was represented by Thayer S. Sanborn as delegate. A visitation among the churches of this county as recommended by the Rockingham Conference; T. S. Sanborn, Jefferson Janvrin, and Emery Batchelder, as delegates of this church, visited the church at Kensington October 31st, and the churches in North Hampton and South Seabrook visited this church November 6th, and good meetings were held afternoon and evening. This church visited the church in South Seabrook November 13th. The repairs in the church having been handsomely finished at an expense of about two thousand dollars, the building was rededicated on the afternoon of December 5th with a sermon by Rev. A. C. Peabody from Psalms xciii. 5: "Thy testimonies are very pure; holiness becometh thy house, O Lord, forever." Subject, The sacredness of the place of God's worship. Rev. E. D. Eldridge, of Kensington, Rev. John W. Dodge, of Hampton, Rev. Mr. Bacon, of Amesbury, Rev. J. V. Haines, of North Hampton, and Mr. William A. Rand, of South Seabrook, participated in the exercises. The building has been thoroughly repaired, newly plastered and painted with new black walnut desk, circular chestnut pews with walnut trimmings, and a modern choir; the floor newly carpeted and the pews cushioned. The committee of repairs were John Batchelder, John T. Batchelder, and Charles C. Gove.

Deacon Reuben Batchelder attended the first communion service in the rededicated house January 5th, was soon after taken sick, and died March 7, 1868, aged ninety years and nine months. He was a man of strong constitution, of strong mind and earnest piety. Was deacon of this church for twenty-eight years, and the fourth deacon in regular succession from father to son. April 30, 1868, Emery Batchelder was chosen deacon to succeed his father. March 7, 1869, three females admitted to membership. May 30th, Albert Edward, infant son of the pastor, baptized by his father. July 1, 1869, annual appointment of collectors for the different benevolent objects. November 14th, John Batchelder chosen clerk. November 21st, Rev. A. B. Peabody closed his labors, and was installed pastor of the church at Stratham November 25th. From November 21st to April, 1870, the pulpit was supplied by Henry Eldridge and J. W. Warren. Rev. D. W. C. Durgin, late pastor of the Free-Will Baptist Church in Hampton, accepted an invitation, and commenced his labors April 3d, 1871, March, Mr. Durgin, having received a call from Newmarket, closed his labors at the expiration of his year. From April to September, M. H. Sargent, of Boston, sent different preachers to supply the pulpit; and from September to July, 1872, supplies were obtained from Andover Seminary. Mr. Henry Eldredge supplied during the summer vacation. From September to May, 1873, E. C. Stickle and E. A. Benner, students at Andover, occupied the pulpit alternately, to the satisfaction of all. The week of prayer was observed, Mr. Benner being present the first half of the week and Mr. Stickle the last. After this Mr. Tracy spent a week, holding meetings every evening. Average attendance during the winter, eighty-two.

April 3, 1873, eight persons were added to the membership. November 9th, Rev. George H. Pratt, late of Harvard, Mass., commenced his labors as pastor. 1874, January 1, according to the custom of this church, Mr. Pratt was chosen to act as clerk. February 26th, two admitted by letter. May 10th, five young people were received to the membership. September, one received by letter and two by profession. September 23d, Warren H. Batchelder chosen clerk. September 26th, Rev. George H. Pratt closed his labors, having accepted an invitation to preach at Agawam, Mass. Rev. Frank Haley, of Dover, N. H., accepted an invitation and commenced his labors December 1st, at a salary of $700 and parsonage. 1876, July 30, five were admitted to membership, four of them being immersed. 1877, March 19, nine were received. February 23d, Jennie, wife of the pastor, died, aged thirty-seven years. Mrs. Haley was a Christian woman of great excellence of character. May 6th, five young persons were admitted to the church, who with others recently admitted were the fruit of a revival the last winter, largely promoted by the labors of delegates of the Young Men's Christian Association, of which Mr. Folger was leader. They held meetings in union with the other denominations, Dec. 25, 26, 27, and 28, 1876. Two others were admitted in September, 1876. November 4th, three young persons were admitted. 1878, January 6, two young men were admitted. The pastor admitted by letter from the church at Macon, Ga. 1879, two female members dismissed, and one young man expelled. 1880, March, three young women admitted, one of whom, Ella H. Fogg, died December 14th, aged nineteen. Three members dismissed. 1881, Rev. Frank Haley closed his labors May 8th, and is now settled at Boseaven, N. H. Rev. Joseph Boardman accepted an invitation, and commenced his labors September 4th, at a salary of $650 and parsonage, and a vacation of four Sabbaths.

These records of the Seabrook and Hampton Falls Evangelical Congregational Church have already been mentioned as a model of historical record. So extended has this sketch become that it has been necessary to greatly abbreviate the extracts presented. The following is given as a sample of the manner in which their membership is recorded: "No. 68 Harriette Ward Sanborn, Hampton Falls, by Prof. July 1, 1838, Baptized by sprinkling, born 1823, indulged hope the last day of the protracted meetings. Parents T. S. & D. W. S. (Nos. 66 & 67) have since cherished hope. Married to Edwin P. Grosvenor, M.D. of West Newbury, Mass. Sept. 4, 1844, Dismissed July 18, 1852 & recom. to the Belleville Church in Newbury Port (See page 20)."

It is not presumed that much of this sketch will prove of interest to the average reader. But it is hoped that the thoughtful mind, historically inclined, may find something to interest and profit on every page; and it is believed that the value of these records will increase with each succeeding year. Only those who have performed work of the kind can appreciate the labor required in their preparation. One fact has impressed itself on the mind of the writer in examining the ancient records, that the men who were then foremost in civil affairs and laid so well the foundations of our institutions were men who feared God and were prominent in the church. This was the case with the father, grandfather, and uncle of Mesheck Weare, as well as himself, who intended at one time to prepare himself for the ministry. With them the inspired records were not idle tales, to be sneered at and doubted, but vital truths to be revered and obeyed. And while we of to-day enjoy the fruit of their steadfast religious principles, may we not be recreant to the duty of transmitting to our posterity a like valuable legacy?

The Congregational Church in South Seabrook<sup>1</sup> was organized July 9, 1867, with seventeen constituent members, fourteen of whom united on profession of faith. This new church was the result of a series of meetings held in the district school-house, under the leadership of Mr. William A. Rand, beginning Jan. 27, 1867. In 1868 a house of worship was erected at a cost of about five thousand dollars, outside aid being received from fifty or more churches in Massachusetts and New Hampshire. A native of Portsmouth, N. H., Mr. Rand, at the time mentioned was studying with his brother, Rev. Edward A. Rand, pastor of the Congregational Church in Amesbury, Mass. After graduating from the Portsmouth High School, he learned the drug business with the late William R. Preston, of Portsmouth; at the age of twenty went to war as corporal of Company K, Sixteenth New Hampshire Volunteers, and while in service in Louisiana was converted as the result of meetings held in camp. After he was mustered out in 1863 he was employed for two years in the wholesale drug business in Boston; then a year in a retail store in Biddeford, Me., after which he left business to commence his studies for the mini-try. Mr. Rand was licensed to preach by the Essex North Association at its annual meeting August, 1867, with the church in Ipswich, Mass. Continuing to labor in South Seabrook, he deferred the completion of his studies until 1872, when he entered the Theological Seminary at Andover, Mass., and while pursuing his course there continued to supply the infant church with the aid of his fellow-students. Graduating from Andover in July, 1875, he was immediately ordained and settled as pastor of this church, and has since continued to labor with them. Mr. Rand's work in this locality has been a unique one, for which few other men would have been so well adapted. There was need that law, order, temperance, and education should be presented as prominent features of the gospel, and this work Mr. Rand has done with marked success. Like all other good men engaged in a good work, he and his work have had their traducers. But, unmoved by these things, he has labored on, interested in both the spiritual and material welfare of the community in which he has been providentially located. Through his efforts a post-office was established in that locality several years since, and in January, 1882, he received the appointment of postmaster, and was commissioned a justice of the peace several years since. In South Seabrook Mr. Rand appears to have found his life-work at an early age, and to be content to labor on, making an indelible impression on the character of a whole community.

The Methodist Denomination in Seabrook.<sup>2</sup>—According to the most reliable information now to be obtained, the first Methodist preaching in this town was by preachers from the East Salisbury Church about the year 1820 at the South village. About that date "Uncle" Robert Dow and Thomas Fowler, two earnest Methodists in that locality, fitted up a house for a church, and services were held there by Revs. Mr. Aspinwall, Amos Worthen Prescott, and, some say, "Reformation John Adams."

A class was soon formed there with Robert Dow as leader, and weekly sessions were held alternately at his residence and that of Thomas Fowler. Mr. Dow lived on the place now occupied by his grandson, Mr. Lowell Dow, nearly opposite the Congregational Church. And near the year 1835 religious services were occasionally held in the Boyd school-house, on the Walton road, by Father Broadhead, a Methodist preacher.

As the result of this preliminary work the present church building was erected in 1836, in that part of the town known as Smith's village, at the junction of the Newburyport and Amesbury roads.

And the class at the South village then united with their Methodist brethren at Smith's village in the formation of a Methodist Episcopal Church organized in due form. Rev. E. D. Trickey was the first preacher appointed by the Conference to the charge of this church.

The present church edifice was built in 1836, at a cost of about fifteen hundred dollars. The following were the building committee: Robert Dow, Jacob Dow, Thomas Fowler, Simon Jones, and Jeremiah Smith, all of whom are now gone, and we trust have entered the mansions prepared for them. In 1862 this house was enlarged and improved at an expense of about fifteen hundred dollars. These improvements were made under the supervision of the following committee: Jeremiah Smith, Moses Eaton, Jonathan G. Chase, True Morrill, and Jonathan Walton. In 1854 a parsonage was erected at a cost of about one thousand dollars, located on the Amesbury road, a short distance from the church.

The following is the list of preachers appointed to this charge by the Conference, with the date of their service: E. D. Trickey, 1836-37; Warren Wilbur, 1838; James M. Young, 1839; Jacob Boyce, 1840-41; Rufus Tilton, 1842; Caleb Duston, 1843; L. D. Blodgett, 1844; Joseph Palmer (supply), 1845-48; J. W. Huntley, 1848; J. C. Emerson, 1849; F. O. Barrows, 1850; Samuel Beede, 1851; D. W. Barber, 1852; A. C. Dutton, 1853-54; George W. T. Rogers, 1855-57; C. H. Smith, 1858; C. R. Homan, 1859; O. H. Call, 1860-63; Freeman Rider, 1863; H. B. Copp, 1864-65; J. L. Flood, 1866; T. H. Mason, 1867; William H. Hays, 1868-69; Hugh Montgomery, 1870-73; W. C. Bartlett, 1873-74; Lorenzo Draper, 1875; W. C. Yanson, 1876-77; E. C. Berry, 1878; Joseph P. Frye, 1879-82; George Wesley Buzzell, 1882.

"Seasons of religious quickening have occurred occasionally during the whole history of the church. The greatest revival perhaps was enjoyed under the labors of Rev. Jacob Boyce in 1840 to 1842. In this refreshing many families were swept into the kingdom of heaven. A like quickening is greatly needed now in the church and parish and town."

JOHN MITCHELL WEARE.

John Mitchell Weare was born in Seabrook, N. H., May 6, 1819, son of Joseph Hubbard Weare and Betsy Mitchell, and the eighth generation from Nathaniel Weare and Sarah, who settled in Newbury, Mass., as early as 1659, where his name is of frequent occurrence on the town records. Their children were Nathaniel, who was born in England, Hester, Robert, Daniel, and Peter, who were born in Newbury. He afterwards removed to Nantucket, in which he was interested as a purchaser, where he died March 1, 1880.

Nathaniel (2d), born about 1631, married Elizabeth Swayne, of Hampton, Dec. 3, 1656. She died Feb. 10, 1712. By her he had seven children,—Elizabeth and Peter, who were born in Newbury, where he first settled; Mary, Sarah, Nathaniel, Hannah, and Abigail, who were born in Hampton, now Seabrook, to which he had removed in 1662. He became one of the most noted and influential men in the province. He went twice to England with remonstrances of his fellow-townsmen and all those in the province who were opposed to Cranfield and Mason, and acted as their agent to prosecute the appeals against Mason's judgments before the king in council. Besides holding minor offices he was counselor of the government of the province of New Hampshire twenty-one years, was chief justice of the Superior Court in 1694-95, was justice of quorum until his retirement in 1715. He died May 13, 1718.

Nathaniel Weare (3d), born Aug. 29, 1669, son of Nathaniel and Elizabeth, was a man of note, judge of Superior Court, and held numerous other offices of trust, was a man of wealth, and owned slaves. He married first Huldah Hussey, Nov. 1, 1692. She died May 2, 1701. His children by her were Daniel, Peter, John, Hannah, and Huldah. He married second Mary Wait, Aug. 24, 1703. His children by her were Nathan, Mary, Marcy, Sarah, Elizabeth, Mesheek, Abigail, and Mehitabel. He died March 26, 1755.

John Weare, son of Nathaniel (3d) and Huldah Hussey, was born Nov. 12, 1696. He married Deborah Taylor, Dec. 6, 1720. Their children were Joseph, Taylor, Susannah, Jonathan, Huldah, Jemima, and Deborah.

Jonathan Weare, son of John Weare and Deborah Taylor, was born 1724. He married Sarah Lane, Jan.

1, 1747. She died June 8, 1789. Their children were Hannah, Abigail, Peter, Jonathan, and John.

He was a man of influence, very active in business, politics, and religion, was deacon of the church, was very active in getting Seabrook set off from Hampton Falls, was selectman in 1776, at the time of the Test Act, and subscribed to the same, was quite a land speculator and grantee of some of the new townships, was farmer and miller. He died Nov. 6, 1790, leaving a widow, whose maiden name was the Mary French, by whom he had no children.

John Weare, son of Jonathan and Sarah Lane, was born 1775. Married Thankful Hubbard, Dec. 14, 1780. Their children were Joseph Hubbard, Sarah Lane, and John. Was a farmer and miller, having inherited the mill which his father bought of Mesheek Weare, which formerly belonged to his grandfather, Judge Nathaniel Weare. He died Jan. 10, 1800, and his wife, Thankful Hubbard, died Dec. 2, 1798.

Joseph Hubbard Weare, son of John Weare and Thankful Hubbard, was born Dec. 6, 1781, died Nov. 12, 1822. Married Betsy Mitchell, Oct. 23, 1804. She was the daughter of Bela Mitchell, a sea-captain, who was lost at sea about 1784, and granddaughter of William Swett, who enlisted into Capt. William Osgood's company and Col. Prebel's regiment to go to Canada to fight the French and Indians. May 2, 1755, is the way he inserts it in his diary which he kept on that expedition, noting down something every day from the time he enlisted until his return, when he was occupied in ship-building and school-teaching and land surveying. She was born March 24, 1784, and died May 18, 1831. Their children were Joseph Hubbard, Mary Ann, Elizabeth Brown, Sarah Lane, John Mitchell, and Benjamin Swett.

After the death of Joseph Hubbard Weare, his wife Betsey married Jonathan Smith, and on the breaking up of the family the subject of this sketch was put out to service, being scarcely ten years of age. At seventeen he was apprenticed to blacksmithing and carriage-building. Having served the time agreed upon he commenced business for himself at South Hampton, March, 1835, before he was twenty-one years of age. He married Mary Morrill Gove, daughter of David Gove, of Seabrook, Nov. 27, 1836, and granddaughter of Winthrop Gove, who was empowered to call the first meeting of the Presbyterians of the new parish of Seabrook, and is the seventh generation from John Gove from England, who settled in Cambridge, Mass., and died there 1682, and the sixth from Edward Gove, who settled at Hampton, 1655.

Soon after marriage he purchased a place in Chichester, N. H., to which he removed in 1836. In 1838 sold out and moved to Concord, where he was overseer in the smith-shop at the State prison under Warden Pillsbury; resigned his position there in 1849, and moved to Seabrook. In 1844 bought land and built buildings near where he was born. Since then has been prominent in agriculture; was one of the movers in organizing the Rockingham Agricultural Society in 1851, and one of the trustees; president in 1867-68, and at one time breeder of blooded stock. Finding that good stock must have good care to make it a success, he found it too confining and sold out. His specialties are eggs and apples, of which he produces more than any other one in town. He was appointed member of State Board of Agriculture by Governor Cheney in 1875. Was at one time engaged in military affairs; has held most of the offices from private to colonel in the State militia. In politics was always a Democrat of the old school, and has been somewhat prominent as a politician, having been member of the county and State committees; was elected county road commissioner in 1854; was elected member of the State Senate in 1853-54; was appointed superintendent for the erection of the Portsmouth custom-house by Secretary Guthrie, March 3, 1857; was appointed May 7, 1860, by United States Marshal Stephen W. Dearborn, as assistant marshal to take the census of the towns of Seabrook, Kensington, South Hampton, and Newton. In 1867 Seabrook was not represented in the Legislature. At the request of the county commissioners a legal town-meeting was held July 27, 1867, at which he was elected delegate to a convention of the representatives to be held at Exeter; was chosen by the convention as committee to examine into the condition of the county paupers and the expense of supporting them, and report to the next session of the convention at Concord in June following.

The convention after considering the report voted to adopt the farm system. During the great Rebellion was active in adopting measures to suppress the same; was town agent to fill the town's quota.

Dec. 22, 1863, on the recommendation of Governor Gilmore, Provost-Marshal Edward W. Hinks appointed him as special recruiting agent.

Besides filling various other town offices, was elected representative to the General Court, 1875 and 1876. Has held the office of justice of the peace since 1853, and justice of the quorum since 1868 to the State. Has done a large amount of probate business. Appointed by the judge of probate, guardian for a large number of children, but never had any of his own.

EDWARD L. GOVE.

Edward L. Gove is a lineal descendant of the original Edward Gove, whose history appears elsewhere in this volume. Stephen Gove, grandfather of Edward L., was born April 25, 1754; he married Aug. 29, 1777, Huldah Bassett, daughter of Daniel Bassett, of Lynn, Mass. They had six children,—Patience, Lydia, Judith, Anna, Stephen, and Edward. Mrs. Gove died Dec. 24, 1797, and Stephen married for his second wife Miriam Jones. To this union there were no children. He died Aug. 26, 1821. Edward Gove was born September 15, 1792, was reared on farm, and on Aug. 29, 1817, married Elizabeth Morrell, who was born May 29, 1797. There were two children born to them,—Stephen M., born Sept. 5, 1821, and Edward L., born March 18, 1826. Both Mr. and Mrs. Edward Gove were prominent speakers or ministers in the Society of Friends. They traveled extensively, were widely known, and universally respected and beloved. Their house was always a home for the weary wayfarer. Their hospitality was extended to all alike, and they lost no opportunity of doing good whenever the occasion presented itself. They were ministers in their church for the long period of nearly fifty years. He died Sept. 3, 1877, Mrs. Gove having passed away four years previously, April 29, 1873.

Stephen M. married Lydia M. Locke, February 2, 1843. Their children are Henry M., Melvin L., Horace N., and Otis M. Both Stephen and wife are dead. He was a Republican in politics, and held various town offices and positions of trust. Edward L. Gove, whose portrait appears in this work, was sent at about eight years of age to the "New England Yearly Meeting Boarding-school" at Providence, R. I., where he spent in all about three years. Upon the death of his father he inherited a part of the farm upon which he had been reared, and which has been in the family five generations. He now owns the entire homestead since the death of his brother. He was industrious and frugal and saved some money, which he invested in hat manufacturing, which proved very remunerative, particularly so during the war. Mr. Gove is noted for his persistent energy and devotion to business, and while he is frugal and prudent yet he is always liberal towards a worthy enterprise or object, and appreciates money only for the good uses to which it may be applied. He is a Republican in politics, but has never sought office further than the town office of selectman, which position he has held. He has been twice married; his first wife was Mary D., daughter of Thomas W. Thornadyke, of Weare. They were married Dec. 11, 1851. They had two children,—Lucy T. (who married George C. Herbert, of Lynn, Mass.) and William H. Mrs. Gove died Sept. 27, 1865. April 6, 1867, he married Anna Maxfield. They have two children—Mary A. and Charles E. The family of which Mr. Gove is the representative have always been noted as an honest, industrious, modest, God-loving, and God-fearing people, and for generations have been birthright members of the Society of Friends.

JOSHUA JANVRIN.

The original Janvrin ancestor came to Portsmouth from Jersey Isles. John Janvrin, grandfather of Joshua, was born in Jersey Isles, and came when a boy with his father to Portsmouth. He lived to be eighty-three years of age; he died 1837. Joshua N.,

Edward L. Gove

the immediate ancestor of the subject of this sketch, had six children.—Susan (deceased), Joshua, Matilda (deceased), John, Mary J. (deceased), and Sally. He was lost at sea in 1817, aged forty-one.

Joshua Janvrin, son of Joshua N. Janvrin and Mary French, was born in Seabrook, N. H., November 11, 1802. He was raised on farm in very humble circumstances, poor facilities being afforded him to secure an education. At the age of two years he removed with his father to Newburyport, where he resided ten years. At the age of about twenty he went to live with Mr. Dudley Locke, and learned tanning and shoemaking. After about two years' apprenticeship he started business in a small way for himself, tanning and manufacturing boots and shoes, making a specialty of fishermen's boots, which he disposed of in the Portsmouth market. Mr. Janvrin used to work frequently until twelve or one o'clock at night, and by this assiduous and persistent industry has managed to secure a handsome competency. In politics he is a Republican, has been selectman of his town three sessions, and has been justice of the peace more than twenty years. In 1850 and 1851 was member of the Legislature, and served on various committees. He has been guardian for several children, and has been chosen to settle several estates. He is a stockholder in several railroads and in a savings-bank.

An uncle of Mr. Janvrin sailed from Newburyport for Spain in command of the schooner "Syren" during the wars of Napoleon Bonaparte. Napoleon captured and confiscated the vessel and appropriated the cargo, which was dried fish, to the use of his army. There were about forty men aboard the schooner, and they were given the ship "Margaret" to return in to America. During the homeward voyage the vessel was wrecked. The majority of the crew escaped in the long boat and reached the shore safely. A few others embarked in a skiff, and after innumerable dangers and untold suffering three of that number eventually reached land; but John Janvrin, the commander of the vessel, generously allowed the boats—offering the only chance of escape from certain death—to be filled by others, and he and a few more heroic souls perished with the wreck of the ship "Margaret."

CHAPTER LX XVI.

SOUTH HAMPTON.

Geographical—Topographical—Incorporation of the Town—The Charter—Documentary History—Petition of Sundry Inhabitants to be Set Off—Memorial of Inhabitants of South Hampton—Other Petitions—Signers to the Association Test—Representatives from 1775 to 1887—Military Record.

SOUTH HAMPTON lies in the southwestern part of the county, and is bounded as follows: on the north by East Kingston and Kensington; on the east by Seabrook; on the south by Massachusetts; and on the west by Newton.

The surface of the town is rolling and the soil fertile. Agriculture is the principal occupation of the inhabitants.

Incorporation of the Town.—Prior to 1711 the boundary line of New Hampshire and Massachusetts was what is called the Shapley line, the present northern boundary of South Hampton being the State line, hence the town was wholly a part of Amesbury and Salisbury, extending from the Atlantic on the east to the town of Kingston on the northwest; thence south two and a quarter miles to the Mitchel line, so called, embracing the present town of South Hampton, nearly two-thirds of the area of Seabrook, and the easterly portion of the town of Newton. The town was chartered May 23, 1742, by Benning Wentworth, Governor of the Province of New Hampshire in the reign of George II. The first meeting was authorized to be warned and called by Joseph Jewell, John Flinders, and Henry Carrier on June 7, 1742.

The following is a copy of the charter:
Province of New Hampshire, George the Second, by the Grace of God of Great Britain, France & Ireland, Defender of the Faith.

By his Excelencys Comand
With the advice of the Council
THEODORE ATKINSON Secy

The following interesting documentary history, being petitions, etc., is taken from the State records. In addition to the general interest contained therein, these furnish us with names of various of the early inhabitants:

The Petition of Sundry of y<sup>e</sup> Inhabitants of the Est part of Salisbury which by the running the new Line fall into the Province of New Hampshire and (as we are informed) are included in the Late charter granted for y<sup>e</sup> Township of South Hampton, Humbly Sheweth:—That we the subscribers being comprehended in the afores<sup>d</sup> Charter and by reason thereof exposed to greater hard-ships and unreasonable difficulties as to all Parish and Town affairs, being six miles or more distant from their Meeting houses, we cannot with our families attend y<sup>e</sup> publick worship there, neither can we have y<sup>e</sup> privilege of voting in their publick affairs respecting Town or Parish, for if their meetings are warned in the usual Method we shall have no knowledge of them, or if by chance we hear of any of them, such is the distance that we can't attend them; and therefore it will be very prejudicial to us to stand in such relation to them with whom we can neither do our duty nor enjoy our just Rights and Priviledges:—We therefore pray that (as the rest of our Neighbourhood we may be set off as to our persons & Estates from the said town of South Hampton and annexed to Hampton Falls there to do duty and enjoy y<sup>e</sup> priviledges of Townsmen, so shall y<sup>e</sup> Petition<sup>rs</sup> ever pray, &c.

To his Excellency Benning Wentworth Esq. Captain General and Governour in Chief in and over His Majesties Province of New Hampshire in New England and to the Honourable his Majesties Council.

After our Duty expressed we find ourselves constrained to make our humble acknowledgement of your Goodness extended toward us, and Return you thanks for granting our Petition and Incorporating us into a Town called by y<sup>e</sup> name of South Hampton. We have been credibly informed that some of our Dissenting brethren that lives at y<sup>e</sup> upper or west part of our Town have preferd a petition to y<sup>e</sup> Honourable Court to be set off from us and we hear all so that they have presented a copy of a vote to your Excellency & Honours that we are willing they should be set off, which Vote we oppose for y<sup>e</sup> Reasons hereafter mentioned. Our Dissenting brethren Did at a Town meeting present us a petition which is as followeth:

"September y<sup>e</sup> 29th 1742. We whose names are under written do Petition to the Town of South Hampton that they would agree to pass a vote that that part of y<sup>e</sup> town which lyeth upon y<sup>e</sup> west side of Powes River should be set off as soon as they are in order to Settle a minister y<sup>e</sup> is more convenient for them that is as many as shall be willing to be set off, then we will agree to help support y<sup>e</sup> minister here till then; If you will finish y<sup>e</sup> meeting house and settle a minister upon your charge and like wise Release us from doing any thing toward y<sup>e</sup> meeting house that has been past: Jonathan Farrer, Micah Hoyt, James George, John Eliot, Aaron Carrier, David Goodwin, David Martain, Tomody Farrer, Thomas Greenfield, John Sargent, Abraham Merrill, Robert Martain, Nathaniel Ash, Philip Chellis, Samuel Goodwin, William Sargent, Caleb Hods, Daniel Goodwin, George Martain, Jonathan Kimball, Benjamin Kimball, Roger Eastman, David Colly, Jacob Colly, Zachus Colly, Jonathan Watson.

"A true Copy Examined by me.

"Reuben Dimond, town Clerk."

Now we had no power to set our Dissenting brethren off, for as we had not power to incorporate ourselves into a Body so we had no power to make any secession and it is not for us to arrogate that to ourselves which belongs to the Honourable Court; but we told our Dissenting brethren that it was a time of great charges with us and if they would joine with us in our extraordinary charges, when they should be thought capable by lawfull authority to maintain y<sup>e</sup> Gospel of Christ among them y<sup>e</sup> we would pay back again their part of y<sup>e</sup> extraordinary charges that should arise to them in finishing y<sup>e</sup> meeting house, settling a minister and building for him: now we did not make this offer, because they could make any majority upon us; but we did it for peace, we considering how good it is for brethren to dwell together in Love and unity, and that peace is y<sup>e</sup> beauty of a Society and it is so necessary and so valuable that we were Ready to sacrifice any thing to procure it, saving only a good conscience, and so we proceeded to a vote which is as followeth:

At a meeting of y<sup>e</sup> Inhabitants of y<sup>e</sup> town of South Hampton, September y<sup>e</sup> 29, 1742, Cornet Abraham Brown was chosen Moderator for y<sup>e</sup> same meeting. At y<sup>e</sup> same meeting it was taken into consideration that, Whereas, there are a number of Inhabitants of y<sup>e</sup> upper or west part of this town y<sup>e</sup> lives at considerable Distance from meeting and have thoughts in time to be better accommodated than constantly to assemble with us, and we being Desirous to exercise all Christian Regard and kindness to them, Votes first, That all those persons that lives above or to the Westward of Capt. Jonathan Currie's that have a mind to go off and be a Parish shall have their extraordinary charges that they are now at among us paid back again to them—that is to say, All their part of y<sup>e</sup> extraordinary charge that shall arise to them by finishing y<sup>e</sup> meeting house, settling a minister and building for him, when they shall be thought capable by lawfull authority to maintain the Gospel of Christ among them, Provided they do not molest or hinder us of y<sup>e</sup> other part in our speedy settling a Gospel minister among us, and y<sup>e</sup> they pay toward his support while they are of us or belong to us, hoping at the same time, they will of their own free will be assisting to us.

2<sup>d</sup> Voted, That we will make no opposition to them in their Indeavours to a Reglar town or parish whenever they shall be thought capable by Lawfull authority—voted in y<sup>e</sup> affirmative.

A true Copy—

Attest, Reuben Dimond, Town Clerk.

Now after this Vote was offered to our Dissenting brethren we chose a Committee to go to y<sup>e</sup> Association meeting of y<sup>e</sup> Rev<sup>d</sup> Ministers at y<sup>e</sup> Rev. Mr. Coffin's in Kingston to ask advice, How we should proceed in Reglar way to settle a Gospel minister among us, and there appeared two of our Dissenting brethren and Declared that they would not joine with us in settling a minister for they s<sup>d</sup> that vote was only a sham for we knew that they could not make a parish; but they said that we should have put into y<sup>e</sup> vote y<sup>e</sup> when they and their neighbours could make a Parish; whereas we drew y<sup>e</sup> vote according to their petition and they never ask us to set them off to joine with their neighbours for there is no such a word in their petition as their neighbours.

At a meeting of the Inhabitants of South Hampton, November y<sup>e</sup> 26, 1742, John Flanders was chosen moderator for y<sup>e</sup> same meeting. At y<sup>e</sup> same meeting it was taken into consideration, that Whereas we y<sup>e</sup> Inhabitants of this Town being in present want of a pious, learned orthodox minister of a good conversation, to dispense y<sup>e</sup> word and Administer y<sup>e</sup> ordinances of our Lord Jesus among us, and it being our Duty to look up to Heaven for Divine Assistance to guide us in all our affairs, therefore, Voted, that Thursday y<sup>e</sup> 28 day of December next is appointed to be a day of Fasting and Prayer in order for y<sup>e</sup> calling & settling a Gospel minister among us, voted and past in y<sup>e</sup> affirmative. Nathaniel Ash, Jonathan Farrer, James George, Daniel Goodwin, Jacob Colly, Sam<sup>l</sup> Goodwin, John Eliot, David Goodwin, Philip Chellis, David Colly, enters their contrary Dissents against y<sup>e</sup> Vote for y<sup>e</sup> last which was for calling and settling a Gospel minister among us.

Attest—Reuben Dimond, Town Clerk.

At the same meeting Capt. Jonathan Carrier and Joseph French Jun. was chosen a Committee to call in y<sup>e</sup> assistance of y<sup>e</sup> neighbouring ministers to celebrate a day of Fasting and prayer among us—Voted & past in y<sup>e</sup> affirmative.

A true copy.

Reuben Dimond, Town Clerk.

Now when y<sup>e</sup> Rev. Ministers was come, which we called to our assistance, our Dissenting brethren appeared and opposed them and lost of y<sup>e</sup> forenoon exercise, yet notwithstanding all their oppositions and Allegations the Rev. Ministers Did not see but y<sup>e</sup> way was clear to proceed to y<sup>e</sup> worship of y<sup>e</sup> day where unto they were call'd.

At a legal meeting of y<sup>e</sup> Inhabitants of y<sup>e</sup> Town of South Hampton, December 27, 1742, John Flanders was chosen Moderator y<sup>e</sup> Same meeting. At y<sup>e</sup> same meeting it was Voted, That we give y<sup>e</sup> Rev<sup>d</sup> Mr. William Parsons a call to settle in y<sup>e</sup> work of y<sup>e</sup> Gospel ministry among us. Voted in y<sup>e</sup> affirmative. At y<sup>e</sup> same meeting, James George, Jonathan Farrer, Aaron Carrier, David Goodwin, David Colly, Daniel Goodwin, Zachus Colly, Philip Chellis, Jonathan Watson, Sam<sup>l</sup> Goodwin, Rigbs Colly, Roger Eastman, Jacob Colly, Robert Martain, Micah Hoyt, Enters their contrary Dissents against y<sup>e</sup> Vote for calling and settling the Rev. Mr. William Parsons or any other man in y<sup>e</sup> work of y<sup>e</sup> Ministry under their present circumstances. A true Copy of y<sup>e</sup> vote and all y<sup>e</sup> Dissenters that lives above or to y<sup>e</sup> westward of Powes River.

Attest, Reuben Dimond, Town Clerk.

At y<sup>e</sup> same meeting it was Voted that y<sup>e</sup> 23<sup>d</sup> Day of February next is appointed to be a day of ordination among us & at y<sup>e</sup> same meeting Joseph French, John Orkway, Thomas Merrill and Abraham Brown were chosen a Committee to send Letters to y<sup>e</sup> Rev. Ministers and Messengers to be assistant in gathering at lunch and in ordaining the Rev. Mr. William Parsons in y<sup>e</sup> work of y<sup>e</sup> ministry among us. Voted in the affirmative.

A true Copy.

Attest, Reuben Dimond, Town Clerk.

Now y<sup>e</sup> ministers we call'd to our assistance were the Rev. Mr. Chusing, Mr. Whipple, Mr. Joseph Parsons, Mr. Sam<sup>l</sup> Parsons, Mr. Fogg, Mr. Coffin, Mr. Webster: These were chosen a Council to carry on y<sup>e</sup> work of the ordination among us, and lost y<sup>e</sup> day before y<sup>e</sup> ordination, and so we notified our Dissenting brethren to come at y<sup>e</sup> time appointed and shew Reasons if any they had why y<sup>e</sup> minister should not be ordained; but before y<sup>e</sup> time appointed came, we heard that our Dissenting brethren had made Report that they intended to take of our Council, for some were aken'd to y<sup>e</sup> man that was to be ordain'd and others had given judgment below: So we, hearing of their Stratagems and not being ignorant of their Devices, we consider<sup>d</sup> it was easier to prevent a Dispute than to cure it, or to keep an adversary out when out, then sit him out when he was in, and so being forward we thought it best to be forearmed and so we call'd ye town together to chuse other Ministers.

At a meeting of ye Inhabitants of ye town of South Hampton, Jan'y 17th 1741-42, Joseph French was chosen Moderator. At y<sup>e</sup> same meeting it was put to vote whether the Town would chuse the Rev. Mr. Olin and the Rev. Mr. Goodin and their messengers to be assistant in Council with y<sup>e</sup> other Ministers for gathering a Church and carry on y<sup>e</sup> ordination among us, and y<sup>e</sup> vote was past in the affirmative.

A true copy.

Attest, Reuben Dimond, Town Clerk.

We voted that we would pay back again all their part of ye extraordinary charges that should arise to them by finishing y<sup>e</sup> Meeting house, settling a minister and building for him when they should be thought capable to maintain ye Gospel of Christ among them: but then there was a condition annex'd to that vote: it was provided that they did not molest or hinder us in our speedy settling a Gospel minister among us; but now they have express'd us from place to place, and from time to time they have oppos'd their contrary desires one and again against our Regular proceedings in an orderly way to settle a Gospel minister among us, and then put us to a great deal of trouble and to an extraordinary charge in calling in that Grand Council which set at y<sup>e</sup> time appointed, and the Rev. Mr. Caleb Chusing<sup>d</sup> was moderator, and our Presenting brethren appear'd in Council and objected against some of y<sup>e</sup> Council; and y<sup>e</sup> moderator ask them who they were and they said Mr. Joseph Parsons, Mr. Samuel Parsons, and Mr. Pegg; the Moderator ask them what they had against them men; they s<sup>d</sup> they wear akend; and a Moderator ask them what they had against y<sup>e</sup> man that was to be ordained as to his life and conversation of his Doctrine, and they elodge nothing: but they said y<sup>e</sup> Province line would be mov'd and then they should lose the money that they had expended with us, and they had not a convenient way: The Moderator told them of y<sup>e</sup> removing y<sup>e</sup> line that could be as near us to settling y<sup>e</sup> minister, for if y<sup>e</sup> lines should be mov'd then we must petition y<sup>e</sup> Massachusetts Court for a Parish, and as to a way, their law provides how they should get help ways, so notwithstanding all y<sup>e</sup> objections and allegations they could make the Rev. Council did not see but y<sup>e</sup> way was clear to settle a minister among us.

All these molestations, interruptions and oppositions we have met with from our Presenting brethren since we offer'd them that vote; yet now they would screen themselves under that vote, that we are willing they should go off when they have never fulfill'd y<sup>e</sup> conditions of y<sup>e</sup> vote in any one article; for if our Presenting brethren had agreed with us, we should have had none occasion to have been at so much trouble and to sit in an extraordinary charge in sending from town to town and from one Parish to another about y<sup>e</sup> country to call in the Grand Council, for two or three of y<sup>e</sup> neighbouring ministers would have done our business in y<sup>e</sup> morning before y<sup>e</sup> ordination.

ECCLIASTICAL HISTORY.

Congregational Church—The Baptist Church—Free-Will Baptist Church—Other Religions—Denominations—Universalists—Methodist Episcopal—Episcopal, Etc.

The Congregational Church.—Previous to 1742 the people at Loggin Plain (South Hampton Hill) worshiped with the Second Church in Salisbury, now known as the Rocky Hill Church. Rev. Joseph Parsons was the pastor. The meeting-house was then located about one mile north of the present church, and near the residence of the late Aaron O. Morrill in Salisbury. A movement was made as early as 1735 to have the meeting-house moved to some other location, but it was not voted till 1784, when it was removed to the present location.

The Rocky Hill Church was gathered Nov. 17, 1718, and Rev. Joseph Parsons was called to the pastorate. He died March 13, 1739, in the sixty-ninth year of his age, and the twenty-first of his ministry. The church received three hundred members during his pastorate. In August, 1742, Rev. Samuel Webster, D.D., accepted the call of the church, and died in 1796, in the fifty-fifth year of his ministry. Upwards of three hundred people joined the church during his ministry, fifty-three on Jan. 4, 1756, and seventy-nine during that year. Rev. Andrew Beattie was pastor from June 28, 1797, to March 16, 1801. His successor was Rev. William Balch, who was pastor from 1802 to 1816. From 1816 to 1839 there was no settled pastor. At that time Rev. Benjamin Sawyer was called to the pastorate, and continued in charge of the church until his death in March, 1871.

In November, 1735, the town of Salisbury voted that they would not hire a minister to preach a third of the time above Powow Hill, at Loggin Plain, although land for the support of the ministry had been set off in this division. In December, 1738, the town of Salisbury voted that the meeting-house should not be moved to Stillson Allen's, nor anything be allowed for the support of preaching to those inhabitants living above Powow Hill.

Upon the death of Rev. Joseph Parsons, in 1739, Henry French and sixty-six others at Loggin Plain, above Powow Hill, remonstrated against the settlement of another pastor of the West Church in Salisbury, unless the meeting-house was moved to better accommodate them. March 10, 1740, ten persons are named in the records as excused from paying minister rates in Salisbury, if it would better accommodate them to attend and support the meeting at the East Parish of Kingston.

The parsonage land of Salisbury, in what is now South Hampton, at that time was divided into six divisions.

At a legal meeting held Dec. 27, 1742, it was voted to give Rev. William Parsons a call "to settle in the work of the gospel ministry among us," and a committee was chosen to carry the town's offer to him and to receive his answer on Jan. 3, 1743. It was voted that we build a convenient house and barn for the use of Rev. Mr. Parsons. His salary was "the income of the South Parsonage, with privilege to cut wood for fire on North Parsonage, and forty-five pounds in bills of credit on either province, at silver at six shillings and eight pence per ounce."

The church was organized Feb. 22, 1743, with Rev. William Parsons, Thomas Merrill, and twelve others. One month later, on Lord's day, March 29, 1743, thirty-nine were admitted by letter from the Rocky Hill Church and three new members. From this date to the resignation of Mr. Parsons, in 1762, sixty-one were admitted to the church by letter and one hundred and fourteen new members. Rev. Mr. Parsons' pastorate closed Oct. 6, 1762. For nearly twenty years he had been laboring with the people, and the records show that he had baptized three hundred and forty-four children and solemnized one hundred and fifty-five marriages. It was during his ministry that the great revival in New England was enjoyed. He was a native of Boston, a graduate of Harvard College class of 1735, and died in 1797, aged eighty-two years. After his dismissal at South Hampton he removed to Gilmanston, N. H., where he continued preaching, and also engaged in teaching.

He was succeeded by Rev. Nathaniel Noyes, who remained until Dec. 8, 1800. During the ministry of Mr. Noyes sixty-one were added to the church by letter, one hundred and fourteen on profession; one hundred and eighty-nine children were baptized, and three hundred and ten marriages solemnized. Rev. Nathaniel Noyes was born in Newbury, Mass., Aug. 12, 1735, graduated at Yale College in 1759, studied theology with President Davis, was pastor at South Hampton nearly forty years, and died at Newburyport in 1810, aged seventy-five years.

For several years after Mr. Noyes' pastorate at South Hampton closed the Congregationalists held meetings in the town a portion of the time; Rev. Elias Hull, of Seabrook, Rev. Mr. Hoitt, of Ipswich, and Rev. Benjamin Sawyer frequently preached. March 20, 1827, Ruth Flanders, the last member of the church, died, and Rev. Mr. Sawyer officiated at the funeral. By vote of the town in 1828 the communion service was placed in the hands of Isaac Palmer, Esq., and it was finally put in the care of Rev. Leander Thompson, of West Amesbury (now Merrimac). The records of the church are in the possession of one of the heirs of the late Thomas T. Merrill, of Merrimac. As I review the eighty-four years of history, I am led to the conclusion that the greatest displays of divine favor to this town were during the ministry of Rev. William Parsons.

The Baptist Church.—The first Baptist sermon delivered in this town was in 1774, by Dr. Samuel Shepherd. He was born at East Salisbury, Mass., in 1739, converted in early life, and united with the Congregational Church July 4, 1756. He was baptized and taken into the Baptist Church in June, 1770, and immediately began preaching. He was ordained at Stratham, Sept. 25, 1771. Elder Shepherd commenced his work in this town in 1774. Here in 1780 was organized the Branch Church. Until 1787 the meetings of the Branch Church were all, or nearly all, held in this town, and from 1787 to 1793 the Sunday services were held all the time at South Hampton, and two-thirds of the time at Salisbury. No reference is made on the Brentwood Church records till 1790 of meetings in Salisbury. In 1793, and forward probably till 1801, the Sunday services were held one-half the time at South Hampton, and one-half at Salisbury; after 1801 at Salisbury all the time, at what was known as the "Shoe-string Meeting-House," and the Baptists of this town had the use of the old meeting-house from 1801 to 1833, when the Baptist meeting-house was built, an average of one-third part of the time, Elder True supplying the Baptists here most of the time. Thus there have been more or less each year Baptist meetings held in this town on the Sabbath from 1774 to the present date.

The Baptist Church of South Hampton was organized Sept. 29, 1830, with the following members: Thomas Flanders, Samuel Flanders, Priscilla Flanders, Elizabeth Flanders, Elizabeth Dow, Lydia Jewell, Sarah Barnard, Sarah Barnard (2d), Hannah Sawyer, and Betsey Flanders. The first deacon of the church was Thomas Flanders.

The old meeting-house was occupied when it could be obtained, but other denominations had a right to occupy it a portion of the time, and when it was not to be secured the commodious dwelling-house of Moses Tuxbury was freely offered, and was occupied by this church. It was the former residence of Hon. Benjamin Barnard, and the present home of Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Wiggin. Mrs. Wiggin is the daughter of Moses Tuxbury.

In the summer of 1832 the frame of the building for the new church was raised and the corner-stone laid. October, 1832, the church was formally admitted to the Association by letter and delegate.

Jan. 16, 1833, the present house of worship was dedicated. The sermon upon that occasion was by Rev. Elijah Foster, of Salisbury. The enterprise of building the meeting-house was accomplished by six brethren—Moses Tuxbury, Thomas Flanders, Samuel Flanders, Joseph Stockman, Benjamin Currier, and Charles Jewell.

The deacons of the church have been Thomas Flanders, from 1830 to 1852; Charles Jewell, from 1833 to 1870; Stephen Woodman, from 1842 to 1845; George J. Veasey, from 1845 to 1854; John Currier, from 1854 to 1880; Abner J. Wiggin, from 1870 to 1880. John Currier was born in South Hampton, 1802; was converted in 1834, under the ministry of Rev. S. C. Gilbert, united with the church in 1835, and in 1854 was chosen deacon, which office he now holds. Abner J. Wiggin was born in Stratham, 1813, and dates his conversion 1827, removed to South Hampton in 1838, united with the church the following year, and in 1870 was chosen deacon of the church. I have not been able to ascertain who was clerk of the church from 1830 to 1836. At the last-named date Charles Jewell appears as church clerk, and he held the office till his death. He was succeeded by his son, who resigned in 1878, and Brother P. P.

Whitehouse was chosen. Phineas P. Whitehouse was born at Hampstead, N. H., August, 1842, converted at South Hampton, during the series of meetings conducted by Rev. John Peacock; was baptized at Muirkirk, Md., in 1868, admitted to this church by letter, September, 1877, and chosen clerk of the church Jan. 31, 1879.

The Sunday-school connected with the church was organized in 1831, soon after the formation of the church. In 1833 it had seven teachers and fifty pupils. In 1839 the school was suspended for a time, but reorganized in 1840. In 1853 we find it one of the five schools represented at the first meeting of the Sunday-school convention. In 1854 the school was largely attended and very interesting. The largest attendance ever reported was in 1857; thirty-seven new scholars were added that year. In 1859 we welcomed the Sunday-school convention, and it was fully attended. In 1871 the convention again met in this town, and held a very interesting session.

In 1873, Rev. J. W. Searll, our pastor, read the essay before the Sunday-school convention at Newton. The superintendent of this school read a paper before the same body in 1879, and gave the "historical sketch" in 1880.

Charles Jewell was president of the Portsmouth Baptist Sunday-school Convention in 1867, and the present superintendent was chosen president in 1870, and has held the position till the present time.

The following brethren have served the Sunday-school as superintendents: Rev. George W. Ashby, John Currier, A. J. Wiggin, George J. Veasey, Stephen Woodman, Charles Jewell, P. P. Whitehouse, and the present incumbent.

During the fifty years one hundred and thirty-nine persons have been connected with this church, fifty-two have been dismissed to the fellowship of other Baptist Churches, and nine have been excluded from membership.

We have at present twenty-seven resident, and eight non-resident members. There has always been a determination on the part of the members to maintain the principles of the Baptist denomination. The church has been assisted in its efforts to sustain public worship by many citizens of the town; those of other denominations constantly worshipping with us, contributing to the support of the ministry, assisting in devotional meetings, and in every way co-operating with us. Without this help and the aid of the convention this church would probably long ago have ceased to exist.

Free-Will Baptist Church.—Aug. 14, 1830, the first Free-Will Baptist Church in South Hampton was organized with seven members,—James Woodman, Eunice Woodman, Ezra Flanders, William Carr, Mary Carr, and Dorothy Goodwin. The first meeting was held in the house of James Woodman. (His house was on the same site as that now owned by Mrs. Samuel J. Woodman, of this town.) The second meeting of the church was held at Brother Reuben Flanders'; Elder Asa Merrill preached and baptized Nancy and Hannah Pierce. Reuben Flanders' house was on the road to Tuxbury's Mills, and is now occupied by John H. Flanders and sister. Jonathan Ring and wife were baptized by Elder Henry Pottle October 25th. The first monthly church meeting was held at Levi B. Pierce's, October 16th. December 16th, Ezra Flanders and Levi B. Pierce were chosen deacons, and James Woodman clerk. June 14, 1831, Brother Asa Merrill preached at the house of Brother Moses Tuxbury, and on the same day Peter Colby, Hannah Hoyt, Moses M. Tuxbury, and Mary, his wife, were baptized. Peter Colby afterwards became a prominent member of the Christian Church in Newton, and Moses M. Tuxbury and wife of the Baptist Church in this place. Elder Bean, Elder Knowles, and Elder James Merrill frequently preached at this time. The first record of the breaking of bread was on Nov. 29, 1831, at the house of Reuben Flanders. On May 15, 1833, the church united with the New Durham Quarterly Meeting, afterwards was dismissed from that, and united with the Rockingham Quarterly Meeting Oct. 7, 1835. On July 7, 1833, their meeting was held at the old meeting-house, and on April 6, 1834, at the school-house, District No. 2, and later the same year at the town-house June 23d. Elder Samuel Emmons Brown preached at the town-house; nearly all the meetings of the church were held at the town-house at that time. Brother Charles Stevens, Elder John Kimball, and Elder D. H. Lord were among the preachers who supplied the pulpit at this time.

In 1837 we find the church record dated Salisbury for the first time. In 1838 meetings were frequently held at Allan's Corner school-house. July 4, 1840, Pelatiah Hanscom was ordained to the work of the gospel ministry, and became the first regular pastor of the church.

A general rule was established that at church meetings each member present should make a verbal statement of God's dealing with him for the month past, and those who did not attend were required to send a written excuse.

In 1841 the services were nearly all held at the town-house and the school-house in District No. 2.

March 29, 1841, Elder Hanseom became the subject of church discipline, and the records say that he has had repeated personal entreaties, and he has also been kindly admonished by two or three, and we hope the trial will be settled without entering into church labor. May 2, 1842, the following certificate appears:

"This certifies that Brother Pelatiah Hanscom expresses to us, the undersigned, that he has no trial with the First Free-Will Baptist Church of Christ, in this town, from which he is dismissed this day.

"CHARLES W. HOYT,

"JAMES WOODMAN,

"AZOR G. WOODMAN."

The Rockingham Quarterly Conference was held in the town-house May 24, 1842. The church meetings this year and afterwards were frequently held at Dorothy Woodman's at Amesbury, and at Allen's Corner school-house, Salisbury. In 1844 services were held at the Amesbury Academy, Elder Asa Merrill frequently preaching. In 1845 the meetings were held at Allen's Corner and the Mills village, with an occasional sermon at South Hampton. In 1847 the church is spoken of as being in a lukewarm state. In 1848, Elder Benjamin H. McMurphy became the second pastor of this church. In 1848 and 1849 the meetings were nearly all held at Allen's Corner school-house and Amesbury Academy.

Sept. 26, 1849, the Free-Will Baptist meeting-house was dedicated. It was situated near the residence of Mr. James Quimby in Salisbury.

During the nineteen years' history of this church forty-eight persons were admitted to its membership. Both of its deacons are still living,—Deacon Ezra Flanders, son of Deacon Thomas Flanders, in this town, and Mr. Levi B. Pierce, at Haverhill, Mass. The church is still continued at Amesbury, it being considered advisable to change its location to that thriving and prosperous town.

Other Religious History.—The population of South Hampton in 1775 was 498; in 1790, 448; in 1855, 472; and in 1880 it is 383. The income of the parsonage from 1800 to 1833 averaged between $70 and $80, and the town usually raised a sum not exceeding $150 a year for preaching. This, together with the interest on the North Parsonage money, $263.33, was expended by a committee, consisting of two or more persons with the selectmen, and was divided among the different religious denominations proportionately to their tax. In 1810 the Congregationalists had about three-tenths of the income, the Methodists two-tenths, and the Universalists one-tenth. In 1820 the Methodists had about one-fourth, the Congregationalists one-fifth, the Universalists a little less than one-third. In 1830 the Unitarians had one-twelfth, the Methodists one-ninth, the Congregationalists one-seventh, and the Universalists one-third. From 1825 to 1830 the Universalists employed as preachers Rev. Messrs. Case, Farnsworth, King, Adams, and others; the Congregationalists, Rev. Messrs. Barrett, Sawyer, Cook, Milton, Grovener, Babbitt, Walsh, and others; the Methodists, Rev. Messrs. Brooks, Peasley, Bullinch, and others; the Unitarians, Rev. Mr. Turner; the Christians, Rev. Elijah Shaw; the Baptists, Rev. Jabez True, Rev. James Barnaby, Rev. Benjamin Harris, and others; the Free-Will Baptists, Miss Nancy Towle and Rev. Messrs. Boothby, Ambrose, Marsh, and others.

In 1830 the subject of selling the parsonage began to be agitated. Already the barn had been sold for a small sum, and two acres of land leased for nine hundred years. In 1832 the present town-house was located. The next year the standing wood was sold, the site for the Barnard school-house granted and that of the Baptist Church, and in 1834 the buryingground was laid out, and the remainder of the property sold in 1842. The amount put to interest for religious purposes was $2585.97. The income of this money in 1834 and 1835 was divided among the following societies: Deists, Naturalists, Second Universalists, Congregationalists, Quakers, Unitarians, Episcopadians, Baptists, Free Baptists, Methodists, Philanthropists, Free Thinkers, and Universalists.

The Second Universalist Society was simply an accommodation for some who had little or no religious belief, to secure a part of the income of the parsonage fund. The regular Universalist society was at this time at the height of its prosperity. It is probable that when Rev. George Richards was settled in Portsmouth, from 1793 to 1809, the seeds of that faith were sown in this town, and when, later, Hosea Ballou was settled in the same place, his biographer says, "He did not hesitate sometimes to leave the dear people of his charge and journey to other places. He went into other parts of New Hampshire, and sometimes extended his visits in Massachusetts." Among the Universalist ministers who visited the town was Rev. Sebastian Streeter, and a society was formed as early as 1815, with Joseph Jones as clerk. The prominent citizens who embraced Universalism were Benjamin Barnard, founder of the Barnard School, Col. Abel Brown, Nathan Brown, Richard White, and Jacob Jewell. In 1828, at a meeting of the Rockingham Universalist Association, held at Kingston, Mrs. Richard White was the only lady present. In 1830 the Universalist society at South Hampton was reported in a flourishing condition; the old society had been reorganized, and Benjamin Clifford was clerk. The Rockingham Association met in this town for the first time in 1832. Among the speakers present we can name Rev. Messrs. Earnsworth, Thomas King, Hosea Ballou, Thomas Whittemore, and Sebastian Streeter. The discourse of the latter was especially affecting, and as he spoke of those who had recently passed away, Benjamin Barnard, Richard White, and Jacob Jewell, the audience was melted to tears. In 1838 the Rockingham Association again met in this town. Revs. Messrs. Sebastian Streeter, Daniel Smith, and Thomas Whittemore preached. Of this meeting Mr. Whittemore said, "We know that if we described this meeting as we viewed it and felt it, we should be regarded as too enthusiastic; nevertheless, we must say that taken altogether it was one of the most precious meetings we ever attended. The conference and praise meetings were peculiarly interesting; all the addresses were marked by sound wisdom and deep evangelical feeling." In 1851, the Rockingham Association again met at South Hampton. Sermons were delivered by Rev. William Bell, Rev. S. S. Fletcher, Rev. N. Goldsmith, Rev. T. J. Greenwood, and Rev. L. B. Mason. Rev. Samuel Ladd, of the Baptist Church, was an attentive listener. In 1856 a new impetus was given to the Universalist society through the activities of the Ladies' Sewing Circle.

Rev. A. J. Paterson and Rev. G. V. Maxham came to this town under the direction of the United States Convention, and regular meetings were established at the town-house. Messrs. B. F. Eaton and J. J. Woodman read sermons, with occasional preaching in the summer months by Rev. Messrs. Greenwood, Patterson, Spaulding, Chabre, and others. A Sunday-school was organized with J. W. Eaton as superintendent, and a library of more than two hundred volumes secured.

The summer of 1859 closed these lay services. The Rockingham Association met in this town in 1864. The preachers were Rev. Messrs. William Bell, S. S. Fletcher, A. St. John Chabre, and T. J. Borden. While at Portsmouth, Rev. Mr. Patterson was much interested in the people of this town. A large number of the inhabitants still hold the doctrines of the Universalist Church. No services have been held here for several years except on funeral occasions. Since the removal of the pews from the town-house, the Baptist meeting-house has been freely offered to any who desired it for funeral services for the members of any religious denomination.

There were quite a number of Methodists in the town between 1810 and 1835, and Rev. John Brodhead frequently preached here. He was stationed at different times in nearly all the surrounding towns of the county. He was a very prominent man, chaplain to the Legislature, member of the State Senate, and for four years member of Congress. In whatever situation Mr. Brodhead was placed, he considered it his chief honor to be a faithful minister of Jesus Christ. He spent twenty-eight years of his ministerial life in this immediate vicinity, and died at Newmarket, April 7, 1838. He had a commanding personal appearance and eyes beaming with intelligence and benevolence.

Another prominent Methodist divine who preached in this town was Rev. Martin Ruter; he was stationed at Salisbury in 1815. He was born at Charlton, Worcester Co., Mass., and was thirty years old when he preached here. The degree of doctor of divinity was conferred upon him five years later. His preaching was adapted at once to please, to instruct, and to awaken.

Rev. Elias Smith, a member of the Christian Church, and the father of Matthew Hale Smith, occasionally preached here.

In 1867 the Young Men's Christian Association of Amesbury, Mass., by a delegation, the leaders of which were Mr. Thomas Quimby, Mr. Joseph O. Hutchins, and Mr. Carpenter, established a lay meeting at the school-house in District No. 2. A Sabbath-school was organized and a very good Sabbath-school library secured. The meetings were well attended, and the Sabbath-school concerts attracted attention. These services continued about two years.

In 1874, St. Paul's Church, Newburyport (Episcopal), organized a mission meeting at the residence of Mr. E. P. Downing, which was for a few months well sustained; Mr. C. T. Bruce, a layman, and a select choir from that church assisting. Their meetings were held on Sabbath afternoons.

Sabbath afternoon services are frequently held during the summer months at the school-house in District No. 3 by pastors of the churches at Amesbury, Salisbury, and this town, and also by the resident clergyman, Rev. S. S. White.

The distribution of the parsonage money, which occurred in 1842, was a blow to all denominations except the Baptist. Our fathers set apart certain property for the maintenance of religious worship, and we cannot but regard the disposal of the property and the distribution of the proceeds among the inhabitants of the town was a great wrong.

As we review the religious history of one hundred and forty years, can we discern any progress? Has light come to the people?

There has at least one great problem been settled,—the question of religious toleration.

The germ of all the trouble in regard to religious liberty is found in that compact made in the "Mayflower" before the Pilgrim Fathers had stepped upon the rock in Plymouth harbor. The question was raised, How shall the ministers of the new country be supported? It was ordered that houses be built for them at the public charge, and their salaries were established. Those people who had fled from persecution themselves did not fully comprehend the principles of religious liberty or possess its spirit. In this compact of the Pilgrims was the union of church and State, and immediately following this was a law for the suppression of anti-church and State sects, and banishment from the colony was the penalty for not sustaining this unjust law.

People were compelled in those days to pay for churches they never entered, for teaching they never heard, and clerical services they did not desire. The Quaker, the Baptist, the Methodist, and the Universalist was taxed for the support of a religion he did not believe.

Barstow, in his "History of New Hampshire," says, "That all ministers not of the standing order were viewed as thieves and robbers, as wolves in sheep's clothing, who had gained a dishonest entrance into the fold, and whom it was the duty of the standing order to drive out."

Persecutions were frequent, and the parish collectors might be often seen taking from the home of poverty the chairs, tables, and andirons, or selling at auction the corn of some poor laborer. Humorous incidents were sometimes connected with these trials. In one case the plaintiff had secured the services of Mr. Smith and Jeremiah Mason, and the defense John Sullivan and Ichabod Bartlett, as counsel. Mason contended that the defendant, whose defense was that he was a Baptist, could not avoid the payment of his tax, because "he could not prove that he had ever been dipped;" thereupon Bartlett retorted, "Neither is he a Congregationalist, for he has not proved that he has ever been sprinkled."

The law of 1791 recognized only one religious sect, and the agitation for its repeal shook New Hampshire from seaboard to mountain.

When the toleration bill was pending, in 1819, Mr. Hubbard said, "Pass this bill, and the temples now consecrated to the worship of the Saviour of the world will soon be deserted and forsaken."

Ichabod Bartlett, a young and talented lawyer of Portsmouth, espoused the cause of toleration, and finally the bill became a law, and all religious denominations in the State were possessed of equal rights and privileges.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH.

JOHN C. EVANS.

John C. Evans, son of Miles and Sally (Chase) Evans, was born in Seabrook, N. H., Nov. 27, 1829. His grandfather, Lemuel Evans, was a native of Rye, Rockingham Co., N. H., and settled in Strafford County when a young man, married a Miss Willie, and had thirteen children, of whom Miles was one. He was an early settler in Strafford County, where he followed the occupation of a farmer until his death, which occurred at the advanced age of ninety-eight years. He was a soldier in the Revolutionary war, and a minister of the gospel. His wife survived him many years, and lived to be ninety-seven years of age. Here we have a striking example of what a close attention to the laws of health will accomplish. This veteran couple reared a large and intelligent family to habits of industry and sobriety, and attained the wonderful age as above shown. Having done their life's work well, they welcomed the voice of their Master which called them to a better country, and they "wrapped the drapery of their couch about them and lay down to pleasant dreams."

Miles Evans, son of Lemuel, was born in Strafford, N. H., was twice married, first to Sally Chase, daughter of Abram Chase, of Seabrook, and had six children, three of whom died young, and three—Arthur L., John C., and Charles A.—grew to maturity. Mr. Evans left his native town and settled in Seabrook, where his children were born. His wife died Sept. 25, 1835, and he married for his second wife Susan Clifford, of Gilmanston, N. H.

Miles Evans was a farmer in Seabrook and South Hampton. He was a Democrat in politics, and a member of the Free-Will Baptist Church. He died in South Hampton, Oct. 20, 1877. John C. Evans, the immediate subject of our notice, was reared on the farm, receiving such advantages for an education as the common schools afforded. At sixteen years of age he commenced building whale-boats, and followed that business some three or four years, when he purchased the farm in South Hampton, where he now resides, before he was twenty years of age. He now owns some two hundred acres, which is in a good state of cultivation, and is justly considered one of the best, if not the best farmer in town. He also owns and runs a saw-mill, etc., and is quite extensively engaged in the lumber business.

In politics he is a Democrat, and as such is one of the leading men of the town. He has held the various offices, such as selectman, etc., of his town with credit to himself and satisfaction to his constituents. In 1871-72 he was a member of the State Legislature, serving on the Fish Committee.

In October, 1867, he married Jane N., daughter of Newell and Judith (Bayley) Frost, of Sealbrook, N. H. Their children are Sally G., Gideon W., John N., and Harry W., all of whom were born on the farm in South Hampton, N. H.

Settlement—Indian Wars.

SOUTH NEWMARKET is pleasantly situated on the west bank of the Squamscot River. It is thirty-six miles southeast from Concord, the capital of the State, twelve miles southwest from Portsmouth, its principal seaport, and four miles north from Exeter, the half-shire town of Rockingham County. It is bounded north by Newmarket; east by Stratham; south by Exeter; and west by Epping. Area, about 6000 acres; improved lands, 3330 acres; population in 1850, 516; in 1860, 786; in 1870, 808; in 1880, 829.

South Newmarket constituted a part of Exeter till Dec. 15, 1727, and of Newmarket till June 27, 1849. Newmarket was early called Lamprey River Village. Perhaps there is a question respecting the origin of the name. It was early written "Lamprey Eel."<sup>2</sup> Mr. J. L. Beckett writes it "Lamprae," from John Lamprae, a Catholic hermit, who built his hut on the banks of the river. South Newmarket was called Newfields, because of the beautiful lands which border on the Squamscot River.

Rev. William Hubbard is regarded as the authority for the settlement of Edward and William Hilton at Dover Point in 1623. Edward Hilton was the first planter of Newfields. The date of its settlement is unknown. There is a tradition that it was prior to the coming of John Wheelwright and his associates to Exeter, in the spring of 1638. Wheelwright's celebrated Indian deed of May 17, 1629, to which Edward Hilton was a witness, evidently covers its territory. Until the locality of Hilton's grant, March 12, 1630, is more definitely settled, perhaps we may suppose that Hilton himself interpreted the grant as including his settlement at Newfields. In 1633 the authorities at Portsmouth and Dover agreed that the settlement at Squamscot Falls should be called Exeter. As early as "the 4th day in the first week in the 10th month," 1639, Hilton had built his house at Newfields. At that time the boundaries of his uplands were fixed and his meadows specified by "certain Orders made at the Courte holden in Exeter."

The civil and religious character of the community depends largely upon its founders. While the Hilton brothers were enterprising planters, they also were lovers of good men. William Hilton was of Episcopal sentiments. Edward Hilton was a Puritan. The Congregational form of worship and the first meeting-house in New Hampshire were set up at his seat at Dover Point in 1633-34. He was the personal friend and confidential correspondent of Governor John Winthrop in 1633 and 1638. During the early political and religious disorders at Dover he contended efficiently for good government and religious order. His neighbors of Massachusetts Bay thought him the man most entitled to confidence in the New Hampshire Colony. When New Hampshire, in 1641, entered the New England Confederation, he was the first named in the list of magistrates. He was made deputy for Dover in 1644, and assistant for Exeter in 1652.

The Hilton family was helpful in the affairs of the First Parish of Exeter. Edward Hilton, in 1645 and 1646, endeavored to purchase Mr. Wheelwright's house and land as a parsonage for Mr. Nathaniel Norcross. Edward Hilton, Jr., in 1652, was one of the overseers to build the second meeting-house in Exeter. The younger Hilton, however, was so much in sympathy with imperialism and prelay as in 1665, with others, to petition that they might be "governed by the laws of England, and enjoy both of the sacraments of which they have been too long deprived." But the action of the General Court, May 19, 1669, releasing the elder Hilton from the imposition of county rates, must be interpreted as bearing witness to its respect for his continued fidelity to Puritan ideas of civil and religious polity.

But Edward Hilton, Sr., had now become an old man. The Newfields patriarch died in the beginning of the year 1671. He had lived in the colony nearly half a century. It is supposed that he was buried in his own grounds on the sunset bank of the beautiful Squamscot. Here, in this field of neglected graves, the first planter of New Hampshire, the first founder of Dover, the early resident of Exeter, and the first settler of Newfields, with many of his descendants of seven generations, slumber together.

Indian Wars.—The aborigines were essentially of one nation with one language, though divided into numerous tribes and different dialects. The Newfields planters found only the feeblest remnant of the Squamscot tribe with Wahangnonawit, their chief, in possession of the soil, and they never claimed a foot of land on any other score except that of fair purchase. The Squamscots were subject to Passaconaway, the sagacious and friendly sachem of the Penacooks. They migrated from this vicinity about 1672, and settled on the Hudson near Troy. King Philip's war in 1675 was the first serious trouble New Hampshire had with the Indians. Hostilities began at the east between the Kennebec and Penobscot Rivers. The victorious squads approached the Piscataqua, marking their track with conflagration and blood, and filing the community with alarm and distress. In September, 1675, they did some mischief at Lamprey River. On their way to Exeter one person was killed, another made prisoner, and other outrages were committed.

Upon the ascension of William Prince of Orange to the British throne, Feb. 16, 1689, war with France ensued. Eight persons were slain, and a lad captured at Lamprey River July 4, 1690. The next day, July 5, 1690, the Indians attacked Hilton's garrison at Newfields. Lieut. Baneroff endeavoring to relieve the garrison, eight or nine of his men were killed. Simon Stone, one of his men, received nine wounds with shot and two strokes of a hatchet. When his friends came to bury him they perceived that life was not extinct, and upon the application of cordials he revived. In the course of one week not less than forty people were killed between Lamprey River and Amesbury. Two men were killed at Exeter in the summer of 1691. The frontier garrisons were reinforced April 24, 1693, two additional soldiers being stationed at Edward Hilton's, and two at Lubberland. This latter garrison was resolutely and successfully defended in the attack on Oyster River, July 17, 1694. In the month of July, 1695, the Indians killed two men at Exeter. One person was slain at Lubberland Aug. 27, 1696. June 10, 1697, the inhabitants in this vicinity were remarkably preserved. The deep laid plot of the French and Indians involved a general massacre of the town of Exeter. The enemy hid in ambush waiting a favorable time for their attack. Some women and children went into the field without a guard to gather strawberries. Some men coming in from work fired a gun to cause the women to return to the garrison. The alarm reached not only the strawberry party, but spread quickly through the community, bringing the people together in arms. The Indians supposed themselves discovered and beat a hasty retreat, killing one individual, wounding another, and capturing a child.

The Piscataqua plantations felt the whole strength and fury of the French and Indians in Queen Anne's war, 1703-13.

Winthrop Hilton was the eldest son of the second Edward Hilton, and became the personal friend and firm supporter of his uncle, Governor Joseph Dudley. After the death of Col. Richard Waldron, June 27, 1689, Hilton became the principal military chieftain in New Hampshire. As early as March 4, 1702, he kept out a scout of two men between Exeter and Lamprey River. He offered his service to the Provincial Council to go eastward against the enemy, Jan. 27, 1704. Governor Dudley requested him to raise volunteers March 12, 1704.<sup>1</sup> The Council instructed him in the matter March 27, 1704. Though the expedition accomplished but little, the Council call it "an honorable service." Edward Taylor was killed, and his wife Rebecca and a son were captured near Lamprey River April 26, 1704. The captives were taken to Canada, whence Mrs. Taylor was afterwards released, having endured severe hardship. Maj. Hilton joined the expedition of Col. Benjamin Church in May, 1704, and was gone all summer, marching as far as the Penobscot.

Jan. 8, 1705, Governor Dudley wrote Lt. Col. Hilton to get ready to march against the Indian headquarters.<sup>2</sup> Hilton led his command of two hundred and seventy men, including twenty friendly Indians, to Norridgewock on snow-shoes. They found no enemy, but burnt the deserted wigwams and chapel. In September, 1705, Hilton was obliged to reduce his scout of twenty men, marching every ten days, to ten effective men, because of the failure of the towns to comply with the requirement of the law. This gave offense to the Governor, who tutored the colonel severely for it.<sup>3</sup>

"TO MAJOR HILTON, EXETER.

"Sir,—I intend with the blessing of God to raise a very considerable force to range the Eastern shore to destroy the enemy, and would be ready to march by the last of this instant. If you please to take to your assistance 60 men and 60 lbs. my very good officers, and raise me a number of Volunteers to be ready against the time, they shall have all encouragement in the service—ammunition given them and shoes to convey them, and the premium for the enemy destroyed—that the Assembly of this Province have or shall give them. I desire you to proceed with all vigor in the affair, and let me hear from you by every post.

"Sir,—I am not willing to pass the winter without a march to the Indian Head Quarters. I have 200 men with you already. I will take care for one hundred more from hence, and I would have you raise me one company of volunteers of sixty, and see if we cannot get Soigwalk Center with Major Walton about it, and put forward and see after your snowshoes according to law; and I will see you a fortnight hence, God please. Write to me on this head.

"Sir,—I am surpris'd that any body should divert you from my last order about a scout of twenty men. Upon your representation I could have abated the number, or time, or distance of marching; but I must have no body else do it.

"I pray you to draw your men yourself, if your officers do not do it to satisfaction, as in your power, wherein Major Worrel will assist you, and let me hear from you as often as you may.

"Keep close to my orders, and they will keep you.

"I Am, Sir, your humble servant,

"J. DUDLEY."

July of the following year, 1706, was a stirring month at Newfields. Hilton was so brave and active an officer that the Indians marked him for destruction. For this purpose a party of twenty "French Mohawks" lurked about his house, watching all who went in and out. On the morning of July 1, as they lay in ambush, they saw ten men with scythes leave the house, go into the field, and put aside their arms to mow. Stealthily they crept between the mowers and their guns, intercepting their return to the garrison, and suddenly rushed on the men. Joseph Hall and one other only of the whole number escaped harm. Richard Mattoon and his son, Hubertus Mattoon, Robert Barber, and Samuel Pease were killed. John Taylor was sorely wounded, but recovered. Edward Hall, Samuel Mighels, and a mulatto were captured. After a time Hall and Mighels made their escape. But the fatigue, privation, and terror of recapture which they underwent are almost incredible. For three weeks together they had nothing to subsist on except lily roots and the rind of trees.

The Council now ordered that ammunition, pork, and biscuit be forwarded from Portsmouth and Hampton to Lieut.-Col. Hilton's, who in July led a company of sixty-four men as far as Kingston and Amesbury without meeting the enemy.

Governor Dudley made known to Lieut.-Col. Hilton, Dec. 9, 1706, his further designs against Norridgewock.<sup>1</sup> Her Majesty's Council, Dec. 23, 1706, sent Hilton to Boston to consult his Excellency in the affair. The expedition consisted of two hundred and twenty men with ninety Massachusetts troops, and the chief command fell upon Hilton. About twenty Indians were slain,—a successful campaign, considering the difficulty of finding their haunts. Tradition relates that a squaw, who, with her papoose was captured at this time, became an inmate of Hilton's family, and lived with them till her death.

rived at the place of destination May 26, 1707, the army after some ineffectual attempts to bombard it broke up in a disorderly manner. Col. Hilton, with as many officers and men as did not choose to run away, retired to Casco Bay, and there waited further orders. Governor Dudley was much displeased at this unexpected result. But Hilton had the good fortune to secure his approbation and to receive his characteristic compliments.<sup>3</sup>

On the point of sailing a second time to Port Royal, Hilton wrote home to his wife, July 16, 1707.<sup>4</sup> But the second attempt also failed through the sickness, fatigue, and discouragement of the army.

Our own frontier was kept in continual alarm. In September Col. Hilton set out with fifty-four men as a scout after the enemy, whom he traced from Kingston to Cochecho, and so towards Winnipiseogee. Returning he discovered traces of a new party of Indians, and followed them to within two miles of Cochecho.

To me granted, To by these presents Reposing Special Trust and Confidence in your Loyalty, Courage & good Conduct, Constitute & appoint you to be Colonel of the Second Regiment of the new raised forces for her Majesty's Service against the French, the Declared Enemies of the Crown of England, and the Indian Rebels, whereof John March Esq<sup>r</sup> is Commander in Chief, and to be Captain of One of the Foot Companies belonging to the said Regiment. You are therefore to Lead, Order & Exercise the said Regiment & Company in Arms both Inferiour Officers and Soldiers Keeping them in good Order and Disciplined, Heavily commanding them to Obeey you as their Colonel & Captain, And with them to do & Execute all acts of hostilty upon & against the said Enemy & Rebels; and you are to Observe & follow such Orders & Directions as you shall from time to time receive from the Commander in Chief of the Expedition or other your Superior according to the Rules and Discipline of War pursuant to the Trust reposed in you.

Given under my hand & Seal at Aymes at Boston the Twenty third day of April 1707, in the Sixth year of her Majesty's Reign.

"MY DEAR KINSMAN:

"I always had a just value for you as my good kinsman, but much more for your steady service for and love to your country. I have not neglected writing to you as being displeas'd, for I am not so, you being the only officer against whom I have no complaint. But truly Sir, I was never so surpris'd by what the enemy can do against me as I am at this intolent, ungoverned, and base cowardice of my people. I pray you to be steady to Colonel Hutchinson and the Gentlemen in command to assist Colonel March. You have a brave Virginia prize in Port Royal harbour, and by and by will have the store-ships. If you will be content to stay twenty days at Port Royal, they will desert and come over to you. However, let the Governor be pleas'd and all will be well.

"I am, your affectionate Kinsman,

"TO THE HON. COL. HILTON, EASTWARD."

<sup>4</sup> CASCO FORT, July 16th, 1707.

"MY DEAR SPOUSE:

"I can't but take all opportunities to salute you. I do earnestly embrace this as y<sup>e</sup> last before our departure. Notwithstanding a thousand difficulties in our way, it's order'd that y<sup>e</sup> fleet prepare to take y<sup>e</sup> signal for weighing anchor tomorrow. The subjects are utterlyaverse and will at best be but passive in returning to Port Royal, just as prisoners are transported; Nevertheless, if Providence ext. advantages into our hands there, they will eagerly embrace them, and if we obtain victory, God will now have a much greater share in our songs of triumph, than if we had been successful at first. Dear Heav, pray hard for us, and cheerfully commit to y<sup>e</sup> Almighty's protection,

"Your loving, loving husband,

"DEAR SIR,—I have determin'd to visit Norridgewock the 10th of January next, and accordingly am raising in this province two hundred men to be command'd by Col. March, if his health will permit, whom alone I have appointed besides yourself of my intention, therefore desire it to be secret, and must expect forty men of your Province, which I would have volunteers, otherwise they must be drawn men, to be command'd by some very good officer, and if Col. March fail me, I must expect your service to command the whole party. The men must be well fix'd, clothed, and shod with snow-shoes in good order. Communicate this order to the Gentlemen of her Majesty's Council as soon as may be. Attend then yourself to concert the matter, that they may provide vituals and blankets if need be. Our last departure will be from Casco Bay. Desire the Gentlemen of the Council to keep it secret, lest the noise of it get in the woods.

"I am y<sup>e</sup> affectionate uncle,

J. DUDLEY.

"TO THE HON. LIEUT.-COL. HILTON."

"JOSEPH DUDLEY Esq<sup>r</sup> Captain General and Governour in Chief in & over Her Majesty's Province of the Massachusetts Bay & New Hampshire in New England in America, To WINSTROP HILTON Esq<sup>r</sup> Greeting. By virtue of the power & Authority in and by her Majesty's Royal Commission

Arrived home, he sent out a second scout of fifty-six fresh men, who were to tarry out five days. The next year, on Feb. 19, 1708, Council ordered Hilton out with a good scout; on August 2d, to Fort William and Mary, with soldiers, and out with a scout of sixteen men; and on August 11th, to call out the troop and eighteen men for scouting. During the winter of 1708-9, Col. Hilton made a tedious march with one hundred and seventy men to Pequawket and places adjacent, but without discovery. During the summer of 1709 our people kept close in garrison, and Col. Hilton performed his usual tour of duty in scouting. In 1710 the Indians still hovered on our frontier. Hilton's garrison was commanded by Capt. Nicholas Gilman. He was out upon scout duty frequently through the summer,—June 21st, with twelve men, two days; June 23d, with twenty-eight men, two days; July 5th, with twenty-one men, two days.

The Indians succeeded, July 23, 1710, in their cherished plan of killing Col. Hilton, who had so long been their terror. This was the most surprising and afflictive stroke of the war. This worthy officer was largely engaged in the masting business. Having several valuable trees felled the previous winter beyond Piscassic, he went out with seventeen men to peel off the bark. It is thought the party was less watchful than usual. While at work they were ambushed by the Indians, who rushed suddenly upon them. They were unable to make any defense, as their guns were useless from the storm of the day. At the first fire Col. Hilton and two others fell. Dudley Hilton, brother of Col. Winthrop, and another man were captured, and heard from no more. The rest fled without firing a gun or making the least reprisal. Flushed with this success the Indians then insolently appeared in the open road, and took four children at their play. They also captured John Wedgewood and killed John Magoon, near his brother's barn. The next day after Col. Hilton fell a company of one hundred men marched in pursuit of the Indians, but found only the mangled remains of their neighbors. With barbarous triumph the savages had scalped Col. Hilton, struck hatchets into his head, and left a lance in his breast. One of the slain was buried on the spot. The other two were brought home. When, on the 16th of August, another company of ninety-one men, under Capt. John Gilman, went five days in pursuit of the enemy, they had fled beyond reach.

Thus died Col. Winthrop Hilton, one of our most estimable citizens, and one of the bravest defenders of New Hampshire. "He was a gentleman of good temper, courage, and conduct, respected and lamented by all who knew him."—Penhallow.

He was buried with the honors due to his rank and character. A large military escort did duty on the melancholy occasion. He was in his thirty-ninth year, and left a widow and children. His elegant silver-headed cane is preserved as a precious memorial by his descendants. He was succeeded in her Majesty's Council by his kinsman, John Wentworth. His tombstone bears upon it the earliest date of any monument in town:

"Here Lieth Inter'd
the Body of Col<sup>l</sup>. Winthrop Hilton, Esq.,
Who Departed this Life
June 23<sup>d</sup>, A. D. 1710,
In 37th Year of his Age."

But our community had no rest. In 1711, besides exerting themselves to the utmost in the common cause abroad, they were obliged at home to keep a scout of forty men continually on the march. In 1712 new depredations were committed. April 16th, Mr. Cunningham was killed as he traveled the road from Mr. Hilton's to Exeter. On May 5th additional soldiers were stationed at Richard Hilton's garrison. The killed and captured in old Exeter during the war numbered between thirty and forty individuals. When a treaty was made with the chiefs at Portsmouth, July 11, 1713, our people most joyfully left their garrisoned houses and betook themselves to the peaceful pursuits of industry in their own dwellings and fields.

Ten years later and Lovewell's war (1722-25) brought nameless terror to our people. In 1719 Jeremiah Folsom built his two-story brick garrison-house on the hill between Newfield and Lamprey River, where it stood till 1874, more than a century and a half.

In 1722 the enemy appeared at Lamprey River. Again, Aug. 23, 1723, eighteen Indians attacked the garrisoned house of Aaron Rawlins. Mr. Rawlins was shot through the walls of the house he was defending and afterwards scalped, while the head of his eldest daughter, twelve years of age, was cut off. Mrs. Rawlins was the daughter of Edward Taylor, who was killed, and of his wife Rebecca, who was captured from the same farm, April 26, 1704. She was made prisoner while attempting to escape from the house with a son and daughter who followed her. The mother was redeemed in a few years. The son was adopted by the Indians, and lived with them all his days. The daughter married a Frenchman, and when nearly sixty years old visited with her husband her native place, hoping to recover the patrimony which she supposed was left at the death of her father.

In September, 1724, Peter Colcord with others was seized and carried to Canada. He soon returned, bringing important information respecting the Indian settlements and proceedings. In November he went on an expedition against the Indians, and the Provincial Assembly made him a present of ten pounds for his patriotism. In 1725 hostilities ceased, peace was ratified the following year, and proclaimed in town by beat of drum.

The colonists enjoyed unusual tranquillity for twenty years. In the war of George II., 1744-49, Indians prowed continually through the Piscataqua, Merrimac, and Connecticut Valleys. But new settlements had sprung up. Souhegan, Amoskeag, Suncook, Contoocook, Pemaquid now constituted the frontier. Newfields and Lamprey River soldiers enlisted in defense of other distressed communities. They were found in the command of Capt. John Gage, June and July, 1744, "to guard the mast-men;" of Capt. Benjamin Mathes, Jan. 11, 1745, "to scout up the western branches of the Piscataqua;" of Sergt. Joseph Rawlins, June 3, 1746, "men and horses impressed and sent to Canterbury to carry provisions for thirty men a month;" of Capt. Daniel Ladd, June 1 to Oct. 30, 1746, whose timely arrival, August 10th, reinforced and saved Rumford; of Col. Samuel Moores, 1744-46, against Louisburg, where William Hilton died; of Col. Theodore Atkinson, July 1, 1746, for the reduction of Canada; of Capt. Joseph Thomas, Sept. 29 to Oct. 13, 1747, "twenty-eight men, scouting from Durham to Chester, Epping, and Nottingham." The story of Mrs. Fanny Shute falls into the narrative somewhere about this time. She was much esteemed, not only for her excellent qualities, but for her youthful adventures. When eighteen months old she was carried by the Indians to Canada and sold to the French. She was educated in a nunnery, and after remaining thirteen years in captivity was redeemed and restored to her friends. "In Memory of Mrs. Frances Shute, consort of Mr. John Shute, died Sept. 7, 1819, aged seventy-seven."—Tombstone.

What is known as the last French and Indian war, 1754-60, again threw the colonies into anxiety and distress. Robert Barber, who had lately removed to Salisbury, was captured by the St. Francis Indians, August, 1753, and afterwards redeemed. Other stories of Indian depredations still are told at our firesides which are doubtless true, but they do not have the requisite name, place, and date to secure narrative here. Newmarket had officers and men in the various campaigns against the French Forts Du Quesne, Niagara, and Crown Point in 1755, under Col. Joseph Blanchard, where they won distinction by a well-directed and prolonged attack; in 1756 and 1757, under Col. Nathaniel Meserve, in expeditions against Crown Point; in 1757, under Maj. Thomas Tash, posted at Number Four; in 1758, under Col. John Hart, in another expedition against Crown Point; in 1760, under Col. John Goff, in the invasion of Canada.

Hostilities ended with the fall of Montreal in 1760. Great and universal joy spread through the colonies. From this time may be dated the flourishing condition of New Hampshire. Population and cultivation progressed with unprecedented rapidity.

CAPT. EDWARD HALL was, after the death of Col. Winthrop Hilton, the principal man of affairs at Newfields. He headed a petition to the Legislature praying that a parish be set off by meets and bounds from the north part of Exeter, and that the inhabitants be excused paying to the ministry of the old parish. The petition was granted Dec. 15, 1727, and the new parish was called Newmarket. About ten years after, Sept. 2, 1737, the parish was granted town privileges. When incorporated is not definitely stated. South Newmarket was afterwards detached from Newmarket by act of the Legislature, June 27, 1849.

Capt. Edward Hall was deacon of the church, justice of the peace, representative for Exeter in 1736, and for Newmarket in 1739, lot-layer, and surveyor of highways and of the boundaries of towns. Arthur Shute, Walter Bryant, and James Hersey, Esqs., were the king's surveyors. The eastern boundary of New Hampshire was a subject of hot dispute from 1737 to 1766. Walter Bryant, Esq., was ordered by Governor Jonathan Belcher to run the line between the province of New Hampshire and that part of Massachusetts Bay called the county of York. About half a century later, Oct. 9, 1790, Esquire Bryant was living to correspond with Rev. Dr. Belknap respecting this matter. He set out from Newmarket with eight men to assist him on Friday, March 13, 1741. He proceeded by way of Cocheeo, with snow-shoes and logging-sleds, through Upper Rochester, up Salmon Falls River to the head of Nechawannoek River. Here, on Thursday, March 19th, he set his compass north two degrees west, making an allowance of ten degrees for its easterly variation. At the end of every mile he marked a tree, where the place would admit of it. Thus he traced the line for about thirty miles. He was prevented from proceeding farther, partly by the melting of the snow and breaking up of the ice, and partly by meeting unfriendly Indians and the backwardness of his men to proceed. On Friday, March 27th, he turned back, and he reached Newmarket Wednesday, April 1st. His return to the Council was made May 22d, and his account of £116 14s. was allowed Feb. 12, 1742.

Roads and Stages.—The Newmarket settlers had such easy communication with other towns up and down the Squamscot and Lamprey by their boats that they were slow in adopting other methods of conveyance. The roads to neighboring towns were only narrow bridle-paths through the forests. There were no carriages, but considerable distances were traveled on foot and on horseback. They forded the Squamscot previous to 1700. That year Richard Hilton established a ferry at Newfields. There was no bridge across the river till the time of the Revolution.

The road to Piscassic is described in 1731 as "already a pretty good cartway, commonly called Halls-way, four or five miles from the landing-place at [South] New Market towards Nottingham." In 1733 a highway was laid out along this cart-path, and extended to Nottingham. The Hall's Mill road was laid out in 1763. In 1768 a road was laid out from the bridge at Lamprey River to Durham.

When Governor Jonathan Belcher, of Boston, contemplated a visit to New Hampshire he wrote Richard Waldron, Sept. 19, 1734: "I am told there is between Haverhill and Exeter 10 miles of very bad Road and that Gov<sup>t</sup> Shute or Burnet could not pass that way with wheels, and the Cavaleade will not look so well with the Gov<sup>t</sup> o' Horseback." Three-fourths of a century later came the era of turnpikes and stages. The incorporated turnpike, though a great convenience, was never a very popular institution. It was looked upon as a sort of monopoly, and the toll was evaded with no compunctions of conscience.

Two lines of stages passed through here daily from Dover to Boston, one line going by way of Haverhill and the other through Newburyport. They passed about nine o'clock A.M., changed horses at the tavern of John Emery, of Exeter, and dined at Haverhill and at Newburyport. Horses were changed again between these places and Boston, which they reached between four and five o'clock P.M. They returned through here about five P.M. The fare to Boston was two dollars and fifty cents, except when competition sometimes reduced it to fifty cents. Each driver was furnished with a tin horn, which hung by the side of his seat, with which he announced his coming at the entrance to the village. The blowing of the horn was always a signal for the gathering of the village quidnuncs, who were interested in the arrival of travelers and the mails. This was before the era of railroads. The opening of the Boston and Maine Railroad in 1840 cut off the drivers as fast as the rails were laid from place to place. These genial knights of the whip are now all gone.

Ship-building and Commerce.—New Hampshire, with only eighteen miles of sea-coast, and but one commodious harbor, yet bears for its seal a ship on the stocks. And previous to 1784, when the Constitution and seal were adopted, ship-building was a prominent branch of business on the Piscataqua and its tributaries. It is not ascertained when this business first began. Robert Moulton was appointed commissioner of the navy at Portsmouth, April 5, 1651. He had come to America at the head of six ship-carpenters in 1629. At first only vessels of small size were constructed, such as sloops, pinnaces, ketches, shallops, barks, and skiffs. Sometimes these were framed and set up in the woods where the timber grew. Then they were taken down and hauled to some suitable landing on the river, completed and launched. Navigators two and a half centuries ago traversed the seas in the merest cockle-shells. Could they now revisit the main they would be amazed at the size, comfort, and sailing qualities of our present ocean steamers. In 1666 a seventy-ton vessel was designed for European voyages. The largest ship launched on this side of the Atlantic prior to 1725 was one of seven hundred tons burden at New London, Conn.

The early settlers on the Piscataqua availed themselves of the facilities offered by the natural advantages of the place to engage in ship-building. The "Falkland," of fifty-four guns, in 1690, was the first war ship launched on this side of the Atlantic. Richard Earl of Bellamont, Governor of New Hampshire in 1698, credits the State with "eleven ships of good burthen, five brigantines, four ketches, and four sloops." It is believed that previous to the Revolution more national vessels of war had been built at Portsmouth than at any other seaport on this continent.

To what extent ship-building was carried on in Newmarket down to the Revolution it is impossible to tell. No record of the business is known to exist. The owners and tonnage of the craft built are not fully ascertained. The Lamprey River meets the tide-water over falls of more than twenty feet. At high tide vessels of one hundred and twenty tons freight now land, bringing coal, salt, and other heavy articles. Seven vessels, some of them of large size for the times, have been seen on the stocks together in process of building. A score of all kinds have been built here in a single year.

The Squamscot is navigable at high tide for vessels of over two hundred tons burden. Heavy freights of iron, coal, and moulding-sand still sail up the river. In times past ship-building flourished on its banks. At Exeter twenty-two vessels, large and small, have been seen on the stocks in a single year. At Newfields the people were busily engaged in lumbering and shipping. Her landing was occupied by ship-yards. The busy hum of the shipwright's hammer and awl was heard from morning till night. So pressing was this work that in the busy season he was exempted from military training. Masting required a large number of men and oxen to move the massive king's pines. One of them is said to have been eight feet in diameter at the butt end and one hundred and ten feet long, requiring seventy yoke of oxen to draw it to the river's side. From the landing these masts were floated to Portsmouth and shipped abroad. In 1746 objection was urged against a bridge over the Squamscot at Newfields, on the ground that it would obstruct vessels, masts, and rats passing along the river.

The Squamscot abounded in fish, which furnished subsistence for the inhabitants and also an important article of commerce. In 1665 exports to France, Spain, and the Straits consisted of fish, lumber, pitch, tar, and turpentine, for which were brought back salt, preserved fruits, tea, and coffee. Shipments to Virginia embraced pork, beef, and peltry, and returns were received of rice, sugar, and tobacco. Great quantities of deal boards, masts, pipe-staves, and shooks were sent to Barbadoes and the West Indies, for which were returned logwood, sperm oil, molasses, and spirits. Before the Revolution this foreign trade with the West Indies was very profitable. So great were the gains that vessels of all sizes and description were pressed into the service. Vessels of fifteen tons burden and upwards were used.

During the Revolution New Hampshire fitted out several private armed vessels. The privateer "General Sullivan" was overhauled and refitted at Newfields' Landing in 1778.<sup>1</sup> After the Revolution, ship-building on the Squamscot again became profitable. Commerce, however, never reached its former extent.<sup>2</sup> The ship-building and commercial interests of Newmarket were seriously injured by the war of 1812. Her population was nearly two hundred more in 1767 than in 1820. The decrease was owing to the decline in ship-building. Very little had ever been done by the general government for defense of our harbors. The embargo well-nigh annihilated all our commerce. After the spring of 1813, our sea coast, thousands of miles in extent, was blockaded by a British squadron. A few enterprising captains ran the blockade, and privateers were fitted out which were successful in escaping English cruisers. But the relief was only partial. Three years of blockade destroyed shipbuilding on the Squamscot. Neither has it been resumed on the Piscataqua, except at the government navy yard at its mouth.

Among the last to engage in ship-building at Newfields were Zechariah Beals, Dudley Watson, Samuel Tarlton, and George Hilton. The last vessel built here was the "Nile," in 1827. She was of about three hundred tons burden, and built for parties in Salem, Mass. Joseph Coe was the contractor and Nathaniel Garland did the blacksmith work. Up to that time we were a ship-building town. The launching of a ship was an event of great interest, to be properly celebrated. Men, women, and children living in the vicinity all attended. They expected an ample supply of good cheer. Bountiful provision might be made, coldish and crackers, cider and rum for the men, egg-nog and metheglin for the women.

Our later coasting trade was principally with Boston. Household goods, clothing, military equipments, and implements of husbandry were imported, and returns made in lumber, dry hides, and buckskins. Capt. Joseph Fernald ran a packet from Exeter to Portsmouth, by which our traders received all their heavy articles of trade. Our merchants went by stage to Boston one day, spent three or four days purchasing goods, and returned on the fifth or sixth day. The goods were shipped to Portsmouth by the regular coaster. Here they were transferred to Capt. Fernald's packet and brought up the river, generally arriving about two weeks after being purchased. This was before the era of railroads.

Manufacturing.—Mechanics and artisans are important personages in every community. Shoemakers, carpenters, masons, and blacksmiths are indispensable in a new settlement. The wives and daughters of the Newfields patriarchs manufactured the garments which clothed themselves and their husbands and brothers. The flax was pulled, rotted, broken, swingled, hutchelled, spun, woven, and bleached by hand. The wool was carded, spun, woven, and filled by hand, and it was colored in the old butternut, logwood, or indigo dye-tub. Persons in comfortable circumstances used wooden table-ware, and drank their daily beverages out of glazed earthen mugs, one mug going in course the rounds of the table. In times of the scarcity of currency, old iron and old pewter had value as articles of barter and merchandise. Taxes might be paid in tar at twenty shillings the barrel.

New Hampshire at the present time ranks high as a manufacturing State, and is especially noted for its textile industries. Only three States in the Union out- rival it in the value of cotton goods produced, while its woolen, leather, and iron products are very large. The Merrimac is said to be the busiest stream in the world. The Piscataqua with its tributaries is also greatly utilitarian. Newmarket has always been a busy town. Mechanical labor in its various departments is extensively pursued. No towns of its size produce more valuable manufactured goods. While

<sup>2</sup> Washington, in his diary, Nov. 4, 1795, says, "Before 10 I reached Exeter 11 miles distance. This is considered as the second town in New Hampshire and stands at the head of tide water of the Piscataqua River, but ships of 3 or 400 tons have been built at it."

Timothy Dwight, D. D., writes, Oct. 4, 1795, "The highest rise of the tide is about eleven feet. The river is therefore navigable to the falls for vessels of five hundred tons. The trade of Exeter is much smaller than it was formerly, five or six vessels only being employed by the inhabitants in foreign commerce. Ship-building was heretofore a considerable and profitable business in this town. A few vessels, however, are built annually."

the Squamscot offers no mill privilege, the Lamprey and the Piscassic afford numerous fine mill sites. Other smaller streams in their day have furnished motive-power for many wheels.

The first settlers on the Piscataqua were compelled to secure most of their bread from England and Virginia. There were saw-mills at Coheco in 1631, but there was no grain-mill in New England previous to 1633. A corn-mill is mentioned at Coheco in 1640. The earliest mention of a mill of any kind in Newfields is in 1653. That year a grant of land some two miles square was made to Edward Hilton, "in regard to his charges in setting up a saw-mill." This mill is probably mentioned again in 1758. It stood on the stream south of the Hilton estate and west of the Exeter road.

Iron works were set up at Lamprey village in the year 1719. To encourage this enterprise the General Court appropriated a slip of land two miles in breadth above the head line of Dover, for the purpose of supplying fuel and of introducing foreign artists and experienced workmen. There was "ye first Dam," and therefore a second dam, and "ye old Dam," and so a new dam across Lamprey River in 1723. We read in the Portsmouth Mercury Nov. 1, 1785, "The fulling and grist mill belonging to the Hon. Major General Sullivan have been carried from their situation at Packer's Falls."

The Newmarket Manufacturing Company was incorporated in 1822, and the corner-stone of cotton-mill No. 1 was laid the next year. Hall's nut and bolt works are situated at the lower falls of the Piscassic. Haines' cotton batting-mill is located about two miles above on the same stream. Neal's mills, still farther up the Piscassic, and about one mile from Newfields, consist of a saw-mill, grain-mill, planer and matcher.

Iron works were commenced at Newfields in 1830. The first blast was blown on Christmas day. The South Newmarket Iron Foundry was incorporated in 1834. The officers were Amos Paul, president; George O. Hilton, treasurer; Amos Paul, John B. Rider, and Joseph Skinner, directors.

In 1846 the Squamscot Machine Company was incorporated, and Amos Paul chosen agent. This company purchased the iron foundry and united both branches of the business. They employ about two hundred and seventy-five hands, and the monthly pay-roll is eleven thousand dollars.

The engine-shop of George E. Fifield does a fine business. They build a special form of engine and boiler adapted for the Southern lumber trade.

Theodore Moses learned his trade of hatter with Nathaniel Lord, of Newfields. He soon moved to Exeter, where he entered into trade as a wool manufacturer. The business, much enlarged by his son and grandson, has become a source of wealth to the family. Ira Choate carried on the manufacture of machinery of various kinds at South Newmarket until 1865, when he removed to Exeter, and in 1867 sold out to Exeter Foundry and Machine Company. Charles Lane ran a bark-mill, and carried on the business of tanning leather for many years. Still earlier Col. John Rogers and Capt. Joseph Funnell, Newfields men, carried on the business of tanning near the residence of the latter, in Exeter, where they erected a tide-mill for the grinding of bark. Col. Rogers afterwards manufactured "patent leather" on the Hampton road. John Hennard was the Newfields clock-maker, and previous to the Revolution, William Cario was her silversmith.

MILITARY HISTORY.

The Revolution—War of 1812—War of the Rebellion.

It has been said that if every other record of the civil struggle from 1760 to 1775 should perish, the true character and full history of the Revolution could be written from the records of the New England town-meetings. The resolutions adopted and the instructions given to representatives in convention, Legislature, and Congress are the wonder and admiration of students of political philosophy everywhere. The town of Newmarket is exceedingly unfortunate in the loss of all its records prior to the year 1784. We were a free people, loving and prizing our liberties. We did not wish independence of the English crown; we were impelled to it by necessity, not by choice. As soon as Great Britain had conquered Canada and made peace with France, the king and Parliament turned against the American colonies. Such conduct was high treason and rebellion against British freedom. In an evil hour the mother-country set her eyes upon the colonies for imperial taxation. We denied the right. When the Stamp Act was passed we resisted, peacefully but pertinaciously, and the act was repealed. The tea tax followed. It was opposed by solemn leagues and covenants, and its demands were annulled. The Boston Port Bill, cruel and tyrannical, exasperated to the last point of endurance a brave and generous people. The regulation acts of 1774 were revolutionary and suggestive of "a general disarming of the colonists."

The town of Newmarket was not indifferent to the momentous agitation that preceded the Revolution. A large number, if not a majority, of our leading men were staunch loyalists, and friends, if not members, of the Church of England, brave men, but more loyal to the king than to their country. During three generations of bloody Indian warfare our soldiers fought for British supremacy no less than for personal safety.

The selectmen of Newmarket, Samuel Gilman, James Cram, and Samuel Pickering, returned, July 12, 1776, to the New Hampshire Committee of Safety

the celebrated Association Test. It contained the names of one hundred and sixty-four persons, who "herely solemnly engage and promise that we will, to the utmost in our Power, at the Risque of our Lives and Fortunes, with Arms oppose the Hostile Proceedings of the British Fleets and Armies against the United American Colonies." It also contained the names of thirty-eight individuals who "Refuse to sign the within Declaration." We read, among others, the names Badger, Gilman, Lord, Marsters, Mighels, Odiome, Parsons, Pease, Pickering, Shute, Rogers. Some were Quakers, who had scruples against bearing arms. Some were sick and infirm, who thought it dishonest to pledge themselves as able-bodied men "to resist with arms." Some there always are in every community who never put their name to paper. But more were Tories, who had always been loyal to the church and government of Great Britain. Respectable family ties allied some to British officers. Governor Benning Wentworth had married, in 1760, Martha Hilton, of Newmarket. During the Revolution she was living with her second husband, Col. Michael Wentworth, a retired British officer. The home of Lady Wentworth, of Wentworth Hall, Newcastle, was a noted resort of royalists. The Confiscation Act of 1778, extending to John Wentworth and seventy-six others in New Hampshire, included James and John McMasters, and George Ball and Jacob Brown, traders of Newmarket.

The early years of the war were noted for the large number of arrests of persons charged with Toryism; but it was seldom that they were kept long in durance. After the detention of a few days or weeks they were generally dismissed on giving bonds to return when called for, or upon taking oath not to bear arms against the country or to aid and comfort the enemy. The Rogerses were Conformists. In December, 1775, Nathaniel Rogers, Esq., was granted leave to go about his business fifteen days, and Jan. 3, 1776, his disability was wholly removed. Capt. William Torrey was put under arrest for Tory proclivities in 1775; he had leave to go about his business fifteen days in December, 1775, and his disability was wholly removed on Jan. 3, 1776, but in 1777 he was committed to jail. Capt. Peter Pease was put under guard as a Tory February, 1777, and petitioned for release May 19, 1777. Dr. John Marsters would not sign the Association Test in 1776, and was placed under arrest in 1777, from which he humbly prayed the Committee of Safety to be released.

The number and social position of these "gentlemen Tories" suggest one of the great trials that beset the patriot cause. Secret enemies, opponents at home, were like thorns in the side or serpents in the bosom. It cost a severe struggle to overcome these patrician sentiments. It was not all done at once. It was achieved only through provocations long endured. But nothing was suffered ultimately to mar the patriotic enthusiasm. At length royalist and rebel rejoined together in the emancipation of their country from a foreign sceptre.

Newmarket contributed her full quota of men and money for the war. When the first mutterings of the storm were heard, she sided generally, not unanimoously, with the colonists. About the middle of December, 1774, Paul Revere rode express from Boston to Portsmouth, bringing word that royal troops had been ordered to the harbor to secure Fort William and Mary. The regulars were already out, and something must be done. On the night of December 14th honest yeomanry along the branches of the Piscataqua visited the fort. They imprisoned Capt. John Cochran and his garrison of five men, broke open the magazine, and seized one hundred barrels of powder and sixty stand of arms, and took from the ramparts sixteen pieces of cannon. The powder was distributed among the up-river towns. A portion was stored under the pulpit of the meeting-house in Durham, some was brought to Newmarket, and some carried to Exeter. This bold expedition of the Piscataqua patriots was the first overt act of resistance to British encroachment. It was the prelude to the Revolution. The patriots were none too early. A day or two after two English ships of war arrived in the harbor and dismantled the fort. Maj. John Demeritt afterwards hauled an ox-load of the powder seized to Medford, where it was dealt out to our troops and used at the battle of Bunker Hill.

The battle of Lexington, on the 19th of April, 1775, aroused our people to a more vivid sense of their danger. Couriers bringing the startling news reached Newmarket about daybreak, April 20th. At once the drum beat to arms. In less than three hours minute-men were on the march for Boston. Tradition includes among those first to enlist the names of Coleord, Folsom, Hilton, and Pike. At Exeter they joined other volunteers under Capt. John Taylor Gilman. That night they reached, by way of Haverhill, Bragg's tavern, in Andover. On the night of the 21st they reached Cambridge, and were assigned quarters in the college buildings.

Detachments to and from the Continental army frequently passed through Newmarket.

By the 3d of May, 1775, all the men being gone from the southward and westward of this place, the Durham company paused at Exeter, and the Provincial Congress resolved that they should return home and keep themselves in readiness to respond when called.

The Newmarket soldiers were "minute-men" who started at the alarm from post-rider and beat of drum. They left shop, field, or home at once, in shirt, and frock, and apron, with cold victuals from the cupboard, and a few Yankee notions in sack or pillow-case, and the old ducking-gun, fowling-piece, or shaky king's arm that had seen service against game in the woods or Indian skulking in the thicket. The convention at Exeter, May 17, 1775, organized this ununiformed, undisciplined, yet enthusiastic yeomanry into a brigade of three regiments. Nathaniel Folsom was appointed major-general; the colonels were John Stark, Enoch Poor, and James Reid. The regiments of Stark and Reid had their headquarters at Medford, while Poor's regiment remained on duty at home. Israel Gilman, of Newmarket, was lieutenant-colonel of Reid's regiment, and led many of his townsmen in the glories of the battle on Breed's Hill. The preceding day, June 16th, he wrote home to the Committee of Safety, describing the position and plans of the opposing armies. On the memorable 17th of June the New Hampshire troops fought with their accustomed bravery and force. Their position was behind the rail fence between the redoubt and Mystic River. The old Indian hunters and rangers of the woods were "dead shots." Thrice they hurled back and nearly annihilated the gaudy British grenadiers sent against them. They maintained their ground during the entire action, and were the last to leave the field, retiring with the order of veteran troops.

After the battle of Bunker Hill Col. Poor's regiment was ordered to the seat of war. But New Hampshire had her own harbor and frontier to defend, as well as to furnish men for the Continental army. Some soldiers were employed in building fire-rafts on the Squamscot, others in guarding the sea-coast or scouting with boats up and down the Piscataqua. Thirty-four Newmarket men under Col. Joseph Smith were thus employed. We have their "Acct of Labor on Fire Rafts built at Newington Oct. 22, 1775." We have also the pay-roll of twenty-five others, "Men and Oxen Percuring Pich wood & other Combustibles for Fire Rafts."

The next month, Nov. 5, 1775, a Newmarket company of forty men, rank and file, James Hill, captain, Samuel Baker, first lieutenant, Samuel Gilman, second lieutenant, Zebulon Barber, ensign, under Col. Joshua Wingate, of Stratham, joined the forces in the harbor, and were stationed on Pierce's Island.

Those who remained at home, as well as those who went into actual service, were called upon for military duty. British fleets were expected at our landing. If a strange vessel appeared in the harbor below, the alarm quickly spread far into the country. Many times the minute-men were called out on the appearance of an armed force or the rumor of one. In fact, however, the invader's foot never touched New Hampshire's soil.

An express arrived, Dec. 1, 1775, from Brig.-Gen. John Sullivan, who was in command at Winter Hill, stating that the Connecticut regiments refused to tarry longer, and requesting urgently that troops might be sent from New Hampshire to fill their place. These detachments were called "six weeks' men." A Newmarket company under Samuel Baker, captain, Zebulon Barber, first lieutenant, John Allen, second lieutenant, responded to the call. They remained with Gen. Sullivan till the British evacuated Boston, when they were discharged.

But space does not allow us to narrate the whole history of Newmarket in the noble struggle of the Revolution. The town was represented by true and determined men on nearly every battle-field of the war. The Committee of Safety compliment our selectmen, July 12, 1776, upon "the truly forward and patriotic disposition often shown by the inhabitants of Newmarket in the common cause."

The following is a partial list of the men who bore military commissions and served in the Revolution: Colonels, Jeremiah Folsom, John Folsom, Thomas Tash; Lieutenant-Colonels, Israel Gilman, Winthrop Hilton; Adjutants, Joseph Smith, Walter Bryant; Captains, Samuel Baker, James Hill, Samuel Gilman, Zebulon Gilman, Edward Hilton, Robert Barber, Samuel Shackford, Asa Folsom, Levi Folsom, Peter Drowne, Robert Pike, Jonathan Leavitt; Lieutenants, Nathaniel Gilman, John Colecord, Bradstreet Doe, Andrew Gilman, David Gilman, John Burleigh, Joseph Hilton, Robert Clark, Zebulon Barber.

War of 1812-15.—With the opening of the nineteenth century the business interests of Newmarket had revived and she recovered her former prosperity. But Napoleon I. was disturbing the peace of Europe, and war-clouds soon appeared between England and America. Bonaparte promulgated the Milan Decree Dec. 17, 1806. It declared every vessel denationalized and subject to seizure which had submitted to be searched by a British cruiser or had traded at an English port. This was the prelude to the war of 1812. As early as 1806 the depredations of British cruisers on American commerce commenced. In 1807 Congress prohibited the sailing of vessels from American ports, and the year 1808 became the era of the general embargo. Non-intercourse with Great Britain and France was established March 1, 1809. So effectual was the blockade that it was about impossible for vessels to leave or enter our ports. Now and then a privateer would slip by or through the blockading squadrons. The embargo acts of Congress were severely denounced and resisted in almost all of New England. At length long-continued aggressions, without apology or redress, led the American government to prepare for another conflict with Great Britain. Congress declared war on the 18th of June, 1812.

Soon after Governor William Plumer called the attention of the general government to the defenseless condition of our seaboard and the public works in Piscataqua Harbor, and ordered a portion of the militia into service. The Fourth Regiment of New Hampshire militia in 1812 was commanded by Lieut.-Col. Winthrop Hilton, and the First Battalion was under Maj. Joseph Pease, both of Newmarket. A company was drafted for thirty days, and placed under Capt. Joseph Towle, of Epping. It entered the service July 3d, and was discharged Aug. 31, 1812, and contained several Newmarket non-commissioned officers and men. A second company under the same command from September 1 to Nov. 30, 1812, included nearly the same individuals.

Varied success attended the American forces on land, sea, and lake. The army in some cases performed prodigies of valor. The fleet immortalized itself upon the ocean. But when peace was concluded between France and the allied European powers at Fontainebleau, April 4, 1814, it relieved the larger part of the British army for active service in America. England's forces were turned now more effectively against the United States. They captured Washington, Aug. 23, 1814, burning the capitol, President's house, and executive offices,—public buildings which were the ornament and pride of the nation. Meantime a British squadron was committing depredations upon the Atlantic coast and spreading alarm far into the interior. An all-pervading apprehension that Portsmouth would be attacked led to renewed calls for the mustering of the militia. On the 20th of May, 1814, Governor Gilman issued orders for raising eight companies to march in five days for the defense of Portsmouth. The Newmarket company of fifty-three officers and men under Capt. Peter Hersey responded to the call. It was mustered May 24th, and discharged July 6, 1814. Other soldiers in Capt. William Marshall's company were credited to Newmarket. While the Newmarket soldiers were quartered at Portsmouth expresses came riding into town on the night of June 21st with the alarming intelligence that the British were landing at Rye, and about to march upon the town. Alarm-bells were rung, drums beat, and signal-guns fired. The militia turned out and hastily prepared for defense. The report was unfounded, but the alarm spread into the interior and was not allayed for some days.

On the 7th of September, 1814, Governor Gilman again called for soldiers to defend Portsmouth. The call was obeyed with the greatest alacrity. Newmarket is credited with nine commissioned officers and men in Capt. Jacob Dearborn's company, enlisted September 26th for sixty days. Maj. Nathaniel Lias, of Newmarket, commanded a battalion of detached militia, enlisted September 9th, and discharged Sept. 27, 1814. It included a Newmarket company of forty-one officers and men under Capt. Peter Hersey, also fifty-one officers and men under Capt. John Coleord. Thus by October, 1814, about three thousand drafted soldiers were at Portsmouth, and Governor Gilman had his headquarters among them. We have it on British authority that the English made every preparation to destroy the navy-yard and the town of Portsmouth. But the defenses were so formidably manned that the intended attack was accounted too hazardous. The danger to Portsmouth and its harbor soon passed away. By October, 1814, the major part of our forces were discharged. A treaty of peace was signed at Ghent Dec. 14, 1814. It was ratified by the Senate February 18th, and signed by the president Feb. 23, 1815. Nowhere were the people more grateful for the return of peace than on the Piscataqua and its branches. It is related as a singular fact that not a man of New Hampshire was killed in this war.

War of the Rebellion.—The patriotism of South Newmarket was again manifested in the late struggle to perpetuate the Federal union. Immediately on the news of the firing on Sumter the spirit of 1776 fired the hearts of her citizens. She furnished her full quota of soldiers for the struggle. Many of our noblest young men offered their services. Enlistments proceeded with enthusiasm. Companies were raised and equipped first for three months, then for three years or during the war. We cannot mention here all the noble hearts which beat for the honor of our flag and volunteered for its defense. The history of the gallant Second and Eleventh New Hampshire Regiments would tell the story of many South Newmarket soldier-boys. This town gave some of her most promising young men as a sacrifice to sustain the government in the hour of peril. The blood of her heroes enriched the soil from the heights of Arlington to the remote southern boundary.

CHAPTER LXXXI.

ECCLIASTICAL HISTORY.

Congregational Church—The Methodist Church—The Universalist Church—Roman Catholic Church.

THE Rev. John Moody, A.M., belonged to a family that well may be called remarkable. He was born at Byfield Parish, Newbury, Mass., Jan. 10, 1705. He was the son of John Moody, the grandson of Samuel and Mary (Cutting) Moody, and the great-grandson of William and Sarah Moody. These patriarchs of the family had emigrated from Wales, England, to Ipswich, Mass., in 1633, and to Newbury with its first settlers in 1635. From the sturdy Newbury blacksmith, there has descended a long line of distinguished ministers.

The first pastor of Newmarket was graduated at Harvard College in 1727, his name standing the fourteenth in a class of thirty-six. He also received the honorary degree of Master of Arts from Harvard. Having studied theology, he was invited to settle at Biddeford, Me., in 1728, but modestly declined the invitation that he might have further time for study. He was ordained at Newmarket, Nov. 25, 1730.

Mr. Moody preached the sermon at the ordination of Robert Cutter, a graduate of Harvard, 1741, the first minister of Epping, Dec. 9, 1747. Text, Ephesians iv. 11, 12. The phrase so common in the old town charters, "a learned orthodox ministry," is a very expressive one. Mr. Moody was a patron of sound learning, and evinced a marked interest in general and higher education. He was an original member of the New Hampshire Ecclesiastical Convention, and bore an active part in establishing a collegiate institution in New Hampshire previous to the granting of the charter for Dartmouth College.

The Newmarket parsonage of those days dispensed its simple and generous hospitality to all ministerial travelers. The Rev. Timothy Walker, of Pennacook, in his visits on horseback to Portsmouth, the State capital, often dined or spent the night with his old college companion at Newmarket. Mr. Moody married, April 5, 1790, Ann, daughter of Deacon Edward and Mary (Wilson) Hall, of Newmarket. This pastor's wife was a descendant of Thomas Dudley, the second Governor of Massachusetts, and also of John Winthrop, the first Governor of New Hampshire. She died July 14, 1771, seven years before the decease of her husband. Their daughter Mary, and, as far as appears, their only child, was born March 4, 1792; married, Nov. 9, 1756, Winthrop, son of Col. Joseph Smith, and died Feb. 13, 1815.

Mr. Moody continued in the pastoral office in Newmarket till his death, Oct. 15, 1778, at the age of seventy-three years. His only settlement in the ministry covered a period of half a century lacking two years. To his manly integrity and intelligent piety Newmarket owes much of her social, civil, educational, and religious character.

The second minister of Newmarket was the Rev. Nathaniel Ewer. His ministry overlapped that of Mr. Moody about five years, and he is generally thought to have been a colleague with his predecessor. He was born April 17, 1726, son of Nathaniel and Mary (Stuart) Ewer, of Barnstable, Mass. He married, before leaving Barnstable, Drusilla Covill, by whom he had a large family of children. Mr. Ewer was not a graduate of college. He was a member of the Congregational Church, but became a follower of Whitefield and a New Light preacher. He preached at Durham about one year, and commenced preaching at Newmarket Plains in 1773. He joined the Presbytery over which Rev. John Murray, the friend of Whitefield, presided, May 31, 1774. The "East and West Societies" in Newmarket united June 29, 1789, and Mr. Ewer was accepted as minister for the whole town. In 1792 the old meeting-house which stood near the burying-ground had become dilapidated, and a stately new edifice was built near the present railroad junction. Mr. Ewer continued in the pastorate here nearly a quarter of a century, and was dismissed by vote of the parish July 10, 1797. He still resided in town, and showed himself interested in its welfare. He died in April, 1806, aged eighty years. He was slightly affected with paralysis some years before his death. His wife died in 1810, aged eighty-three. They were buried at the Plains, close by the west meeting-house he had so long occupied. It is sad that this resting-place of the fathers should remain so neglected.

The Rev. Samuel Tomb was the colleague of Mr. Ewer in the pastorate. He was born at Wallhill, N. Y., Jan. 1, 1767. He studied at Columbia College without graduation, and with Rev. Dr. Mason. The church at Newmarket extended to him a call July 28th, and he was ordained Oct. 22, 1794. But the connection of the two pastors was not a harmonious and cordial relation. A mutual council, April 27, 1797, failed to reconcile the parties, and Mr. Tomb was dismissed by vote of the parish, July 10, 1797. He was afterwards installed over the Second Church in Newbury, Mass., Nov. 28, 1798, where he remained about ten years. He removed to his native place, where his stormy but efficient ministry closed. He died March 28, 1832, aged sixty-five years. Among his printed discourses was an oration on the death of Washington, pronounced Feb. 22, 1800, and a sermon which he delivered at the annual fast, April 7, 1803.

The Rev. James Thurston was born at Exeter, N. H., March 17, 1769, the son of Capt. James and Mary (Jones) Thurston. He entered the first class at Phillips' Academy, but did not pursue a collegiate course. He taught school a year or two, and entered business in Exeter and in Boston. After some years, by the advice of friends, he entered the ministry. He preached at Raymond 1798-99, and was ordained at Newmarket, Oct. 15, 1800. Parsonage land and buildings for the use of Mr. Thurston and successors in office were deeded to the parish, May 30, 1803. During the summers of 1805, 1806, and 1807, he was in the employ of the Piscataqua Missionary Society to the northern parts of New England and Canada. He was dismissed Jan. 6, 1808.

After leaving Newmarket, Mr. Thurston was installed at Manchester, Mass., April 19, 1809. Here he continued in the pastorate more than ten years, and was dismissed, June, 1819. From Manchester he returned to Exeter, his native place, where he died, Dec. 12, 1835, in the sixty-seventh year of his age. His wife, whom he married Oct. 9, 1791, was Elizabeth, daughter of Dr. Thomas and Elizabeth (Shaw) Peabody. She survived him about ten years, and died Oct. 15, 1845, aged seventy-one.

Mr. Thurston possessed a truly Christian spirit, thoroughly devoted to his calling and giving to it his undivided powers. His efforts were blessed and his ministry was a successful one.

The Rev. John Brodhead was born in Smithfield, Northumberland Co., Pa., Oct. 5, 1770. He entered the itinerant service of the Methodist Church in 1794. In 1796 he came to New England. As early as 1809 he settled at Newmarket, and in 1810 moved into the parsonage, receiving the use of it as a portion of his salary. He entered political life as State senator in 1817. From 1829 to 1832 he was representative to Congress under Jackson's administration. During the latter years of his life his work in the ministry was very irregular. He died of a disease of the heart, from which he had suffered many years. His end was peaceful, even triumphant. His monument is inscribed :

"In memory of the Rev. John Brodhead, born in Lower Smithfield, Pennsylvania, 1750. Died in this place, April 7, 1828, aged 67 years, having been an Itinerant Minister in the Methodist Church 43 years, Senator and chaplain to the Legislature of this State, and a member of the Congress of the United States.

"He was beloved as a husband and father, honored as a citizen, esteemed as a statesman, and venerated as a minister.

"Peace to the just man's memory, let it grow greener with years and blossom through the flight of years."

With the close of the first century in the religious history of Newmarket, there came a change in the administration of ecclesiastical affairs. New business interests sprung up at the villages of Newfields and Lamprey River, and it was found impossible to gather the people for worship at the old centre near the railroad junction. Both villages had occasional preaching services by various denominations from 1810 onward. As early as 1825 regular congregational services were held at Lamprey River, and in 1826 assistance was asked in erecting a house of worship. The church was organized there May 27, 1828. Newfields contributed means and members to this enterprise. Meanwhile the Lamprey River pastors, from 1827 onward, maintained a third service on the Sabbath, or a weekly lecture at Newfields. The Rev. David Sanford, from May 22, 1828, to June 22, 1830, abounded in labors of this kind here. During the spring of 1829 the Piscataqua Association appointed several of the neighboring pastors to preach at Newfields.

The old parish was reorganized Jan. 16, 1829, and took the form of an incorporated religious society, and annually raised money for the salaries of their ministers. Among these were the Revs. Bezaleel Smith, 1828-29; William M. Cornell, M.D., LL.D., 1829-30; Orsamus Tinker, 1831-32; Samuel Harris, 1833; — Barton, 1834; Constantine Blodgett, D.D., 1835-36; Charles D. Jackson, 1836; William F. Rowland, 1836-37; Thomas T. Richmond, 1839. These ministers preached in the old meeting-house and old academy. In 1839 a new house of worship was erected at Newfields, and the old house was practically abandoned.

The church was reorganized Feb. 12, 1840. The ministers were John E. Farwell, 1840; John Le Bosquet, 1840; John L. Ashby, 1840-41; Henry Kingsley, 1841; John C. Hurd, 1841; Elijah W. Tucker, pastor, 1841-45; Preston Pond, 1845-46.

The old meeting-house, which had stood sixty years and of late used only as a town-house, was taken down in 1852.

Charles E. Lord became stated supply in 1851-52; Winthrop Fifield, acting pastor, 1852 till his death, May 9, 1862. In 1853-55 the parsonage property was transferred to Newfields, and the present buildings erected. Jesse H. Bragg, minister, 1862; Elias Chapman, stated supply, 1862-67; Israel T. Otis, 1868;

Joseph Bartlett, acting pastor, 1869-77. The meeting-house was enlarged and refurnished in 1871. Alexander C. Childs, acting pastor, 1877-79; James H. Fitts, 1880. The vestries were refitted 1880, and the parsonage enlarged 1882.

The Methodist Church.—The year 1808 is probably the date of the formation of a Methodist class in Newmarket. In 1811 there is mention of the Newmarket, Durham, and Portsmouth Circuit. In 1828, Matthew Newhall was sent by Conference to Durham and Newmarket. It is probable that this is the real date of the full organization of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Newmarket. There is nothing in its records, however, concerning its organization at any time. The meeting-house was erected in 1835, and dedicated in the spring of 1836. The earliest register of church members now to be found was made in 1842. It contains the names of the class of 1808. The parsonage was built in 1854-55. In 1870 the church edifice was raised and 1 vestry placed underneath. The house was again re-seated in 1880. The following is a roll of the preachers, beginning with the year 1828:

1828, Matthew Newhall; 1829, Caleb Lamb; 1830, Daniel J. Robinson; 1831-32, Elijah Mason; 1833, Samuel A. Cushing; 1834, William J. Kidder; 1835, J. H. Patterson; 1836, John Brodhead; 1837, William Padmun; 1838, G. W. Stearns; 1839, William Padmun; 1840, "Reformation" John Adams; 1841, A. H. Worthen; 1842, Franklin Furber; 1843, G. W. T. Rogers; 1844-45, H. N. Taplin; 1846-47, C. N. Smith; 1848-49, Frederick A. Hewes; 1850, Charles Greenwood; 1851, William Hewes; 1852, Samuel Beedle; 1853, Matthew Newhall; 1854-56, N. L. Chase; 1857-58, William Hewes; 1859-60, F. R. Stratton; 1861-62, John W. Adams; 1863-65, Eleazer Smith; 1866-67, W. P. Ray; 1868, George N. Bryant; 1869, David W. Downs; 1870, M. T. Cilley; 1871, A. A. Cleaveland; 1872-73, H. A. Matteson; 1874-76, C. H. Chase; 1877-78, C. S. Baketel; 1879, L. C. Earnham; 1880-81, Otis Cole; 1882, Mellen Howard.

The Universalist Church.—The Universalist meeting-house in this town was built in 1873, and dedicated in December of the same year. Rev. G. W. Becknell, of Portland, had been preaching in the town hall previous to that time, and it was at his suggestion and by his influence that the society was formed, Aug. 5, 1874. The church was also organized Aug. 5, 1874. Rev. L. F. McKinney was the first pastor, and resigned in June, 1875. Rev. E. A. Read was his successor, who resigned in April, 1877. Rev. Royal T. Sawyer was the next pastor to February, 1879. Rev. Benton Smith resigned in November, 1881. Rev. A. L. Rice is the present pastor.

The Catholic Church.—This society has held services in the town hall for several years. They are now erecting a beautiful house of worship, which will soon be ready for use. Rev. Father Powers is the minister.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

AMOS PAUL.

During the two and a half centuries of civilization which have passed over this town, by far the most important factor in its development has been the Swamscot Machine Company, and with this company and its success is intimately connected Amos Paul. The history of one necessarily includes the other. Amos Paul, son of Nathaniel and Mary A. (Marsters) Paul, was born in Newmarket, N. H., April 23, 1810. His father, a native of Eliot, or Kittery, Me., was a millwright, and settled in early manhood in Newmarket, and ever resided there. Amos was his third son, and the early formative influences to which the boy was subjected were of the healthiest nature, for his was a home, although quite humble, in which honor and morality were exemplified and taught. He had the advantages of education afforded by the common schools of his native town, and by his father's death in 1827 he was early thrown upon his own resources. He was apprenticed to James Derby in Exeter, and thoroughly learned the machinist's trade. After serving his time he continued to work for Mr. Derby until April, 1832, when he came to South Newmarket to work in a small iron foundry, which was established a short time previously by Drake, Paul & Co. Mr. Paul worked as journeyman for two years when he, in company with George O. Hilton, John B. Rider, and Joseph G. Skinner, purchased the works and formed a corporation called the "Newmarket Iron Foundry," Amos Paul, president; George O. Hilton, treasurer and manager; Amos Paul, John B. Rider, Joseph G. Skinner, directors.

Mr. Hilton continued as manager for about two years, when Mr. Paul was placed in charge, and from that time to the present that steady industry, that persistent energy, that far-reaching sagacity, promptness of action, and integrity of purpose, which had already placed Mr. Paul in prominence as a business man of more than ordinary ability, has been at work promoting the interests of all by actively endeavoring to enlarge the boundaries of the business; and he by his enterprise has given employment to many and placed the several branches of manufacture under his superintendence high in the scale of prosperity. The Newmarket iron foundry manufactured castings for cotton and woolen-mills, and at one time did a large amount of business in making stoves. Their works were entirely destroyed by fire, and although the loss was great, new buildings were at once erected. In 1846 the Swamscot Machine Company was incorporated by Amos Paul, Walter E. Hawes, and Seneca C. Kennard. The foundry and machine company continued separately in business for several years, with Mr. Paul as agent for both. In 1865 the Swamscot Machine Company purchased the entire interest of the foundry, and united both branches of the business, and this union under Mr. Paul and his able associates has been unusually prosperous. The company employs an average of two hundred and sixty men, and has a monthly pay-roll of eleven thousand dollars, more than ten dollars per capita to every inhabitant of the town. It manufactures stationary and portable steam-engines, locomotive, marine, and tubular boilers, steam-boxes for print-works, plain and galvanized wrought-iron pipe, steam and gas-fittings of all kinds, together with several specialties on patents controlled by the company.

The labor of Mr. Paul's life, thus largely expended, has resulted in building up a beautiful village, which will be a permanent monument to his business ability. The works of the company cover about ten acres on both sides of the Boston and Maine Railroad, and a frontage on the Swamscot River. The facilities for transportation are not probably equaled by any other company, for the river is navigable, and advantage has been taken of this to have a wharf on the grounds, to which vessels bring much of the coal and iron used. There is owned by the company a quantity of land which awaits the development of the future before being occupied. The extensive operations of the company, of course, demand a Boston office and depository, which is at 98 Milk Street.

Mr. Paul is of an active, nervous temperament, quick and positive in his thoughts and actions. He takes advanced and liberal grounds in all progressive movements, and is, in the highest sense, a type of the enterprising "self-made" man, and is the prominent man in his town. He was an early Abolitionist, saw the then obnoxious principles of that party become the popular belief, and the evils of slavery swept from the country by the fiery blast of war. He was a Republican Presidential elector in 1868, is a director of the Boston and Maine Railroad, and a liberal supporter of the Universalist Church.

He married (1) Mary A., daughter of Moses Randlett, of Epping. Their children were Mary H. (deceased), Amos (deceased), and Charles R.; (2) Harriet A., daughter of Thomas Randlett, of Newburyport, Mass. Their children are Isabella and Harriet A.

PATRICK QUINN.

Patrick Quinn, son of Patrick Quinn and Catharine Clark, his wife, was born Nov. 20, 1815, in Ballygar, County Galway, Ireland. His father was a blacksmith, and the young Patrick wrought with him, and was early inured to labor. After attaining his majority he decided to leave a country so overburdened by oppression, and seek a land of more liberty, and in accordance with that decision he sailed for America in April, and landed in New York June 4, 1837, and after one week's stay he went to Providence, R. I. This year (1837) was the time of the great panic, when every business enterprise was prostrate, and thousands were out of employment. It was no wonder, then, that Mr. Quinn, a foreigner and stranger, young in years, also could obtain but four months' work during his first year's stay, and of this small labor he could collect pay but for one-half the time. These dark days passed away, however, and when in the spring of 1838 he engaged with Fairbanks, Clark & Co., at India Point, Providence, to learn boiler making, he felt that he would yet carve his way to success. With this firm he remained six years. He was then solicited by Otis Tufts, of Boston, to be foreman in his boiler manufactory, employing one hundred and twenty-five men. Mr. Quinn accepted, and discharged the duties of that responsible position to his employer's satisfaction for two years. In June, 1846, immediately after the organization of the Swamscot Machine Company, he removed to South Newmarket (then Newmarket), going thither to establish a boiler-making department in that company's works, and to superintend it. He continued in their employ till 1850, when, at the reorganization of the company, after the fire, he became a stockholder, and has continued to act as foreman until the present time. He became a director of the company in 1878.

Mr. Quinn is a thoroughly practical mechanic, a student of the laws and philosophical principles connected with mechanics, and by his inventive genius has given the company the benefit of several valuable patents granted him for useful inventions.

Mr. Quinn married, April 19, 1841, Mary, daughter of William and Joanna (Cumberford) Roach. She was born in New Foundland in 1823. Their children are William J. (a lawyer in Lawrence, Mass.), Sarah E. (married Matthew Carney, senior partner of the prominent mercantile house, "Carney, Lynch & Co.," of Manchester, N. H.), Laura A., Martha E., and Charles E.

Mr. Quinn stands high in the estimation of his business associates and fellow-townsmen for his sterling worth, his reliability, and business qualifications; and in fact his possession of the qualities necessary to the successful, popular business man of to-day. He has been honored by the confidence of the people of South Newmarket, has been justice fifteen years, selectman three years, and represented his town in the State Legislature of 1869. He stands to-day one of the solid financial men of his town, and his career shows what free America can do for an enterprising man of tact and brains, even though he be a foreigner. Mr. Quinn is an active and liberal member of the Roman Catholic Church.

REV. SAMUEL NORRIS.

Rev. Samuel Norris was born in Dorchester, N. H., March 8, 1801, and died in South Newmarket, N. H., June 23, 1880. He was reared by godly parents, and at sixteen years joined the Methodist Episcopal Church. So satisfactory were his experiences, and so ready his Christian utterances, that in the winter following he received a license to exhort, and the next spring (1818) a license to preach. In June, 1818, ten months from his conversion, when only seventeen years old, he began his long career as preacher by joining the New England Conference at its session at Hallowell, Me. He was ordained deacon by Bishop George in June, 1821, at Barre, Vt., and elder in 1823 at Providence, R. I. During his twenty-two years of effective ministry he filled the following appointments: In 1818, Landaff, N. H.; 1819, Stanstead, C. E.; 1820, Rochester the first half, Landaff the second half; 1821, Craftsbury, Vt.; 1822, Danville, Vt.; 1823, Barre, Vt.; 1824, Malden, Mass. (the latter part of 1824 he was called as a "supply" to Boston); 1825-26, Weymouth, Mass.; 1827-28, Newport, R. I.; 1829-30, Rochester, N. H.; 1831-32, Salem, N. H.; 1833, Great Falls; 1834-35, Salisbury, Mass.; 1836, Haverhill and Methuen Mission. After a short service in the latter field he removed to South Newmarket, N. H., to act as financial agent of the Methodist Seminary, then located there. Here he remained three years, going to Pembroke, N. H., in 1839. He was superannuated in 1840, and continued in this relation till death. He was elected delegate to the General Conference in 1832 and 1836, and for sixty-two years his name appeared in the minutes of the church. He was never ill, and during the forty years of his retirement he preached with great acceptability whenever opportunity presented. As a man, Mr. Norris was dignified, gentlemanly, and fearless, commanding the esteem of friends and respect of opponents. His Christian reputation was ever unswerving and unchallenged. Hating sin, he could brook no alliance or compromise with it. He early espoused the cause of the oppressed, and, in obedience to his convictions, while attending the General Conference at Cincinnati, in 1836, he attended an anti-slavery meeting, for which he had the honor of a public censure at the bar of the Conference. He lived long enough, however, to rejoice in the downfall of slavery, and to receive the congratulations of his peers for the noble stand he had thus early taken.

With a clear head, a warm and sympathizing heart, he entered upon his life-work, and the church has never had cause for regretting her sending him forth as a herald of the cross. He began his work too young to have adequate preparation for it, but by diligent study, careful reading, and thoughtful application he became a well-informed and safe teacher, leading many to Christ. His love for the church of his choice was lifelong and ardent. As a preacher, he was clear, convincing, and prized. He married, Aug. 23, 1823, Elizabeth H., daughter of Rev. John Brodhead. This faithful and loving companion for nearly sixty years now resides in South Newmarket, eagerly waiting until the Master shall in his own good time call her to join the loved ones on the other shore. Their only child living beyond infancy was John Brodhead Norris, of whom we quote the following notice from the Philadelphia Railway World of Feb. 23, 1878:

"One of the most active, intelligent, and influential members of the New York Stock Exchange, and a man of great personal popularity, Mr. John B. Norris, who died at his residence in Brooklyn last Saturday night, deserves something more than a passing notice, for men of this stamp, although known only to the business community, and fully appreciated only by their kindred and friends, are often more worthy of the notice of the living than those who have made more noise in the world. As Mr. Norris has long been connected in various ways with the railway enterprises of the country, it is fitting that the Railway World should give him a place in its columns. Mr. Norris was born in Newport, R. I., in 1828, and was the son of Rev. Samuel Norris, a Methodist minister, who married Miss Brodhead, both of whom are still living. He was, therefore, in the summer of life when called upon to leave it and those he loved so well. In 1853-55 he was a member of the Boston Stock Exchange, associated with Henry E. Bailey, as Bailey & Norris. In 1856 he located in New York, became a partner of J. Howard Wainwright, and soon after a member of the New York Stock Exchange. In 1857 he was associated in the business of banking with O. D. Ashley until 1861, when he formed a connection with Alfred Lockwood. His last copartnership was with A. W. Greenleaf, under the firm of Greenleaf, Norris & Co. The usual vicissitudes of business men were met by Mr. Norris during this experience of twenty-five years in Wall and State Streets, but upon the whole he was a successful man. It is not particularly to his business successes or reverses however that we care to allude, except to say that no man bears a more unsullied record in all the transactions of the Stock Exchange of New York and Boston. Scrupulously honorable, he gained a deservedly high reputation among business men, and there are but few who can claim so fair and bright a character. But the traits which will linger in the memory of his friends to the exclusion of all else were those which a frank, manly, and generous heart were constantly unfolding. His soul was saturated with generous impulses, and his friendship meant devotion and sacrifice. There was not a mean thread in the fabric of the man. He was full of earnest, hearty, and constant love. No man claimed by him as a friend can fail to recognize these points of his character. And, more than all this, Mr. Norris was not only a tender, loving husband and father, but his filial love was something remarkable. For thirty years his excellent and aged parents lived with him, their only son, and his devotion to them has been extremely beautiful and touching. To the writer he has often expressed the most loving tenderness for his father and mother, and the sentiment of affection seemed as pure and unadulterated as it can be on earth.

"During his life Mr. Norris had been connected with a number of the railway enterprises of the day, and at the time of his death was president of the American District Telegraph Company of Brooklyn, and a director, we believe, in the Union National Bank of New York. To the New York Exchange Mr. Norris will be a severe loss. At one time its vice-president, he has of late been actively engaged in the duties of the law committee, and in that capacity has made Wall Street an uncomfortable place for rogues and sharpers. The world seldom loses a more useful or a better man, and the New York Stock Exchange must bid farewell to one of its most valuable members."

After the death of this beloved son Rev. Mr. Norris removed to South Newmarket, where, meeting the bereavements and thickly-crowding infirmities of life with Christian fortitude and resignation, never allowing them to palsy his faith or unnecessarily abridge his activities, he sank to rest in Jesus at seventy-nine years.

JACOB HERSEY.

Conspicuous among the families dating back to the pioneer settlements of this section of the State, and whose occupancy of the soil has been permanent unto the present day, is the Hersey family. The line of title of certain lands goes away back into the colonial days and the grants from the crown. How much of activity, of earnest labor, of romantic history, of hardship and endurance in the generations dead and gone lies covered deep by the dust of oblivion! The pen of the historian cannot trace their history, but their impress has been felt and their names preserved, not only in the traditions of the "oldest inhabitants," but connected with landmarks and localities in such a manner as to be as enduring as our civilization.

Jacob Hersey, the venerable representative of this old-time family, whose portrait occupies another page of this history, was born Dec. 11, 1803, in the house where, in his old age, he is cheerfully passing through the twilight of life. His grandfather, Peter Hersey, received seventy-five acres of land from his grandfather after serving his time with him as a farmer. Both the grandfather, Peter, and his son, Peter, who married Mary Folsom, and had five children,—Mary, Jeremiah, Nancy, Peter, and Jacob, of whom we more particularly write,—were of the sturdy stock of New England farmers, and right well did they serve their day and generation, and with many lusty blows did they assist the onward march of civilization. Not men of talk were they, but prudent, silent men, although companionable enough, preferring, as does Jacob, to occupy their time in attending to the management of their estates rather than assume the dignities and uncared-for responsibilities of official place. They were men of sterling native intellect, and much esteemed. The family had strong attachments, and Jacob, becoming a farmer, remained with his father until the death of the latter, in 1831. Then the two brothers, Peter and Jacob, were associated together in general farming and stock-raising. Working harmoniously together, they acquired a high reputation in this direction, and were very successful in business, increasing their flocks and purchasing land until they owned about three hundred and fifty acres. Peter died in 1871, and Jacob, on the old place, is to-day the largest land-owner, not only in South Newmarket, but a much larger area, and stands one of the first of the wealthy men of his town. He has never married, and has never accepted office, although often solicited so to do. Mr. Hersey has been a man of more than ordinary physical endurance and mental endowments. Keen to observe and quick to take advantage of the steps to prosperity, he has been a warm friend, a clear-headed counselor, and a representative agriculturist, enjoying the confidence of a wide acquaintance.

No family, perhaps, has done more for improvement of the town in its early days than the Hersey family, and it is sad to note that to-day Jacob is, at the advanced age of seventy-nine years, the sole representative of his line. He is, notwithstanding his age, a man of unusual intelligence and youthful appearance, and bears the confinement to his house, enforced on him by rheumatism, with cheerfulness and good humor.

A. H. VARNEY, M.D.

Among the physicians who have merited and enjoyed the patronage of their respective communities in this county must be mentioned Albert H. Varney, M.D. Although not a native of the county nor of the State, his twenty-two years of active medical practice in South Newmarket entitle him to be justly considered a representative physician of Rockingham County. He was born in North Berwick, Me., March 27, 1836. His parents were descended on both sides from reputable English families, and were lifelong residents of Maine.

Dr. Varney received an academic education at South Berwick, studied medicine with the skilled Dr. Moses Swett, of Parsonfield, Me., and was graduated from the Medical Department of Harvard University in 1857. His professional life commenced in Chicago, Ill. In January, 1860, he came to New Hampshire, settling in South Newmarket. Here he has since resided, and by his skill and attention has established a high reputation and a successful practice. Although largely occupied by professional duties, he has yet found time for extensive reading and active co-operation in all things tending to advance the interests of his town. Broad and progressive in his views, he early espoused the cause of Republicanism, and has earnestly labored to promote the principles of that political party. He has been chosen at various times to discharge the duties of important public trusts, which he has faithfully done. He has been justice of the peace for eighteen years, town clerk for twenty consecutive years, was superintendent of school committee seven years, and represented his town in the State Legislature of 1871. He was an industrious legislator, serving as chairman of the special committee on the bill to regulate the sale of medicines and poisons. He was commissioned, Oct. 2, 1867, assistant surgeon of the Second Regiment of New Hampshire militia, and served three years. From his character one would expect to find Dr. Varney in accord with the feeling of universal brotherhood, and we find him not only a member of the Society of Free and Accepted Masons, but also a member of Fraternity Lodge, No. 56, I. O. O. F., in which he has occupied the highest position. Public-spirited, energetic, and wide-awake, Dr. Varney is a good representative of his profession, and one of the active, successful men of South Newmarket.

S. H. TARLTON.

Samuel Hopkins Tarlton, son of Samuel and Jerusha (Hopkins) Tarlton, was born in what is now South Newmarket, N. H., Feb. 19, 1806.

The Tarlton family is of English origin, embracing in that country many men in high position in old-time days. Elias Tarlton, great-grandfather of S. H., was the emigrant and settled in Rye. He reared three sons,—Stillman, William, and Joseph. Stillman became a ship-carpenter, and settled in South Newmarket, where he built a house for one of his sons, which has been kept in the family until recently. He had numerous children. Samuel (born Dec. 11, 1769) was the oldest son, and, like his father, was a ship-carpenter, following his trade in steady industry many years. He was a quiet, unobtrusive man, much esteemed. He married Jerusha Hopkins (born July 16, 1774); had children,—Stillman, born Sept. 29, 1794, married Martha Warner (deceased); Martha M., born April 18, 1796 (Mrs. Samuel Paul); Mercy H., Jan. 29, 1799 (Mrs. H. J. Jenness); Sarah, Sept. 4, 1802 (Mrs. David Manson); Samuel II., Mary A., Aug. 26, 1808 (Mrs. Dana Bullard); and John W., died in infancy. Mr. Tarlton died July 10, 1855, aged nearly eighty-six, surviving his wife only one year and six days. Samuel II. passed his early life at common school in his native town; learned the machinist trade at Great Falls; worked as journeyman at Great Falls, Dover, Newmarket, and elsewhere until 1843, when he became a locomotive engineer on the Eastern Railroad, and after some years was made master-mechanic at Portland shops of Portsmouth and Saco Railroad. He afterwards helped construct the Concord Railroad from Portsmouth to Epping. His mechanical skill and ingenuity caused him then to be employed to take out engines from the manufactories to various places in the West, setting them up, and running them until they were accepted. On the reorganization of the "Swamscot Machine Company," after the fire, Mr. Tarlton became a stockholder, and has been a director of the company for about fifteen years. He married Mary J., daughter of Gee Pickering, of Newington, in May, 1838. Their children now living are George, married Mary Webb, and resides with his father; and Sarah. In 1856, Mr. Tarlton purchased the homestead of his wife's people in Newington, and where she was born. This place was held in the Pickering family from the time of the grant from the crown until bought by Mr. Tarlton. After eight years' residence there he removed to his native place, and erected the building now his residence. No man in this section stands higher for sterling worth, strict integrity, and prudent conservatism than Mr. Tarlton, and by industry and economy he in his old age has the fruits thereof in the shape of a handsome competency. He represented South Newmarket in the State Legislature of 1853-54, and is a liberal supporter and member of the Universalist Society.

CHAPTER LXXXII.

THE town of Stratham is located in the eastern part of the county, and is bounded as follows: on the north by Great Bay and Greenland, on the east by Greenland and North Hampton, on the south by North Hampton and Exeter, and on the west by Exeter and South Newmarket.

The surface of Stratham is rolling, and the soil very fertile and productive.

A petition signed by fifty inhabitants of Squamscot patent to the Governor and Council, in which they set forth that they are in number upwards of sixty families, and live very remote from any public meeting-house for the worship of God, and meet with great difficulties to get to the nearest meeting-house in the winter-time (which is Exeter), that they have never been joined to any town, and that their children had no advantages for education, etc., was presented Dec. 3, 1709, praying that a charter for a town might be granted them with the following bounds: Beginning at a rock called Brandy Rock (so called to this day), near Sandy Point, and to run up the river to the mouth of a creek called Wheelwright's Creek, and to run at each end into the woods upon a southeast line three miles. The petitioners also represented that they had the capacity and were willing and ready to maintain a minister and schoolmaster.

It appears by the records that there was a remonstrance to this petition, signed by nineteen men living within the bounds of Squamscot, in which they desire that the petition will not be granted. As for the petitioners, they say, most of them are poor people, and several of them, according to the best of our knowledge, instead of defraying any town charge, are likely to be a town charge themselves. Signed your earnest desirers.

In one of our early record books I find the following in relation to the charter of the town: Ordered and appointed that Squamscot patent land be a township by the name of Stratham, and that there be a meeting-house built for the public worship of God with all convenient speed, and that it stand on the king's great road leading from Greenland to Exeter, within half a mile of the midway between the two southeast lines of said towns, and that a learned and orthodox minister be obtained to preach in the same by the 14th day of March next.

Signed by George Vaughan, lieutenant-governor.

March 20, 1716.

At the annual town-meeting in 1734 it was voted that the Rev. Mr. Rust be considered for sickness in his family and the death of his wife by way of contribution.

The following interesting old documents are not only of general interest, as illustrative of the early times, but also furnish us with a list of early inhabitants:

It is stated in Bouton's Provincial Papers that Mr. Rust died in 1740; this is a mistake, he died in 1749. At a town-meeting that year it was voted that the reverend ministers, who were his bearers, should each preach one-half day in the meeting-house. At the same meeting it was voted to pay his son Henry, who was the executor, £163, old tenor, as soon as possible, he to give acquittance unto said town from all demands of his father's salary from this day.

Rev. Joseph Adams, the second minister of the town, it seems by the record, had preached for two or three years, more or less, in town previous to the death of Mr. Rust, for it was voted in town-meeting in 1746 that Rev. Joseph Adams be invited to settle as a minister of the gospel in Stratham. Rev. Joseph Adams died in Stratham, Feb. 24, 1785, aged sixty-six, having served as minister for the town thirty-eight years,—obtained March 20, 1747.

At the annual meeting in 1767 it was voted to build a new meeting-house on the spot where the old one now is. Thomas Wiggin, Stephen Boardman, Joseph Hoitt, Samuel Lane, Esq., Daniel Clark, John Taylor, and Simon Wiggin were chosen a building committee.

May 11, 1767, they reported that said house be 63 feet long, 45 feet wide, steeple 12 feet square.

1778, May 7th, Benjamin Barker and Mark Wiggin were chosen delegates to attend the State Convention at Concord, to be holden June 10, 1778. Voted to hire five soldiers to go to the service. Voted to take care of the soldiers' wives and children.

Nov. 10, 1785, a petition, signed by one hundred and one legal voters, was presented to the selectmen for a town-meeting, to see if the town would vote to give Rev. James Miltimore a call to settle as a minister of the gospel in this town. Meeting held Nov. 28, 1785, Hon. Paine Wingate, moderator. Voted to give Mr. Miltimore a call, chose a committee of thirteen to present the call to Mr. Miltimore, and to take into consideration what support he should have.

The committee reported that he have ninety pounds lawful money annually as a salary, have the use of the parsonage land and a house at the expense of the town. P. Wingate, for the committee. The report was accepted.

Mr. Miltimore's letter of acceptance, addressed to the inhabitants of the town of Stratham, was read in town-meeting, Jan. 2, 1786.

He closes with these words, "Assuring you that it is with peculiar satisfaction I behold you, who not long since appeared to tremble over the gulph of dissension, so happily fixed on the sure ground of union and love, constrained to conclude this to be the voice of Heaven, I do with a trembling heart accept your call and manifest my willingness to be solemnly inducted to the work of the ministry in the church and congregation in Stratham."

1775. Voted that the selectmen hire eight months' schooling by a grammar master, and eight months by an English master.

1791. Voted to have the bell belonging to the town cast over, and that all those of the Baptist society and the people called Quakers, who object to the vote, may give in their names to the selectmen before the assessment is made and be excused from any tax on account of casting over said bell. It was voted at the annual meeting in 1795 that every man may wear his hat if he pleases.

At the annual meeting in 1799 it was voted to build four new school-houses; voted to purchase the stuff this year and build them next year. At the annual meeting in 1803 it was voted to raise three hundred dollars for schools, and that each district may hire a schoolmistress two months, and pay her out of the said three hundred dollars.

In 1778 Maj. Benjamin Barker and Maj. Mark Wiggin were chosen delegates to attend the first State Convention at Concord, to be holden June 10, 1778.

Five soldiers were hired to go to the service.

Voted to take care of the soldiers' wives and children.

At the annual meeting in 1786, a committee consisting of N. Rollins, Andrew Wiggin, Jr., and Stephen Piper, was chosen to sell the upper parsonage lot (so called) and apply the money towards the purchase of Capt. Jonathan Wiggins' house and lot for the use of the Rev. James Miltimore.

1790. Voted to have the bell cast over, and all those of the Baptist Society and the people called Quakers that object to this vote by giving in their names to the selectmen may be exempt from tax.

1795. Voted that every man may wear his hat if he pleases in town-meeting.

At the annual meeting 1799 it was voted to build four new school-houses.

Voted to purchase the "stuff" to build said houses this year, and build them next year.

1803. It was voted to raise three hundred dollars for schools, and that each district may have a school-mistress two months, and pay her out of the said three hundred dollars.

Rev. James Miltimore was dismissed from the ministry in Stratham, at his request, by vote of the town Oct. 5, 1807.

List of Pastors.—Henry Rust, Joseph Adams, James Miltimore (graduated at Dartmouth College, 1774), Jacob Cummings (Dartmouth College, 1819), William John Newman, Joseph R. Whittemore (Amherst College, 1833), John M. Steele (Dartmouth, 1844), Edward C. Miles (New York University, 1849), Lewis Goodrich (Bowdoin College, 1845), and Albert B. Peabody.

Voted that he have the parsonage without compensation until the next annual meeting if he choose to occupy it.

At the annual meeting in 1809, Nathan Wiggin, Phinchas Merrill, Esq., and George Wingate were chosen a committee to inspect the schools. This was the first board of superintending school committee in town.

In 1829 it was voted to instruct the selectmen to purchase a farm for the use of the poor in town.

In 1837 the town-meeting house was taken down, the Congregational Society built a new church the same year, and prepared a room in the basement for the purpose of holding town-meetings. From 1717 to 1837 the warrants for town meetings called the voters to meet at the town's meeting-house.

In 1876, Charles N. Healey was chosen a delegate to the State Convention, held at Concord, Dec. 6, 1876, to revise the constitution.

A petition signed by twenty-four legal voters was presented to the selectmen to lay out a cemetery. In accordance with this vote a lot was selected near the Baptist Church, on land of Andrew Wiggin, Esq., at a cost of three hundred dollars,—John N. Thompson, Isaac S. Wiggin, Jenness Brown, selectmen.

At the annual meeting in 1877 it was voted to build a town-house, and that the sum of three thousand five hundred dollars be raised for that purpose. Josiah B. Wiggin, Freeman H. Burleigh, James W. Rollins, and Otis B. French were appointed a committee to locate said house, and report at an adjourned meeting. At the adjourned meeting the committee reported in favor of a lot offered by George Wingate, near the post-office. The report was accepted and adopted. Freeman H. Burleigh, James W. Rollins, and Charles W. Jones were appointed a building committee.

At the annual meeting in 1878 it was voted to sell the town farm, accordingly it was sold to E. J. Folsom for the sum of three thousand five hundred dollars by John N. Thompson, chairman of selectmen.

The first town-meeting in Stratham was held April 10, 1716. Capt. Andrew Wiggin was chosen moderator; David Robinson, town clerk. A committee of five was appointed to build a meeting-house. The committee consisted of Capt. Andrew Wiggin, George Veasey, Nathaniel Ladd, Joseph Rollins, and William Seannon. It was voted that the house be forty-eight feet long, thirty-six feet wide, and twenty feet stud. At a subsequent meeting it was voted to raise the meeting-house on land of Daniel Leavitt. (This was near the site of the present Congregational Church.) At a legal meeting held Aug. 15, 1716, William Moore was chosen to represent the town in the General Assembly, Jan. 2, 1717. Andrew Wiggin was chosen to represent the town in the General Assembly. It appears by the record that he served as representative until 1744 (and David Robinson as town clerk forty-seven years, or until 1763). At the same meeting it was voted that Capt. Andrew Wiggin and Thomas Rollins shall entreat with a minister to preach three or four Sabbaths in the year by way of contribution.

March 25, 1717, it was voted that Mr. Rust shall preach in the town, if he be willing, for a quarter or half a year.

April 24, 1717, a committee appointed for the purpose, report an agreement with the Rev. Henry Rust to come and settle among them as a minister of the gospel. The first year to give him sixty pounds, second year, seventy pounds; third year, eighty pounds; one-third to be paid in corn, pork, and beef, the other two-thirds in money, and one hundred pounds in money, to be paid in four years toward building him a house.

Likewise, the Rev. Henry Rust, upon the consideration of these terms hath engaged to settle amongst us.

In consideration of all above-written we of both parties have 'set to our hands' this 24th day of April, 1717. Andrew Wiggin, Henry Rust, Thomas Rollins."

March 25, 1818, voted that the Rev. Mr. Rust shall be ordained at soon as convenient, and the providing for the ordination be done by contribution, and that Capt. Andrew Wiggin's house shall be the place for the people to carry on and provide for the ordination. A committee was chosen to seat the meeting-house, and a fine of five shillings was imposed upon each person who neglected to occupy the seat assigned. It was voted that Capt. Andrew Wiggin shall have liberty to set in whatever seat he pleaseth.

The officers chosen annually at this time and for many years afterwards were a moderator, clerk, constable, five selectmen, two assessors, a committee of three to call the selectmen to account, tithingmen, surveyors of highways and fences. It was voted at this meeting that James Palmer's barn be a sufficient pound for the year ensuing. At the annual meeting in 1727, George Veasey, Jonathan Wiggin, and Moses Leavitt were appointed a committee to sell the common land and buy a bell for the meeting-house. In 1730, Andrew Wiggin and Richard Calley were appointed a committee to strengthen the steeple for the safety of the ringing of the bell at the charge of the town. At the same meeting it was voted that there be a committee chosen to appoint a place or places for a school-house or houses in town. At the annual meeting, 1733, voted that there shall be a school-house built by the mouth of the lane by Mr. Jonathan Chase's, by the way that leadeth to Jonathan Clark's, and another the south side of Joshua Hill's house.

At a meeting, in 1733, a committee was chosen to take down the bell, which is broke, and send it to London to be new cast.

"To the Inhabitants qualified to vote in Stratham, Greeting: Inasmuch as there is much uneasiness among the people of this town under the Rev. Mr. Rust's ministry, that they are obliged to go to other towns on Sabbath days to hear the word of God preached to them more agreeable to the wonderful outpouring of God's Spirit of late, and Mr. Rust has been applied to, to call a Church meeting, to but a Church meeting can't be obtained. These are therefore in his Majesty's name to notify you to meet at the meeting-house on Friday, the 30th day of September, at 2 o'clock P. M., to take the mind of the town in respect to the ministry, and to choose a committee to agree with some person qualified for the ministry, and that is a friend to and a subject to the wonderful outpouring of God's Spirit at this day to preach to the people in the meeting-house one half each Sabbath day for as long a time as shall then be agreed on. This by the request of a number of Freeholders in this town. Given under hands at Stratham, Sept. 21, 1746.

"BENJAMIN NORRIS,

"NOAH BARKER,

"JOSEPH MERRILL,

"THEOPHILUS EDWELT.

"Selectmen of Stratham."

A committee was chosen to agree with a minister to preach half each Sabbath day not exceeding six months.

Baptist Ministers.—The following is a list of the Baptist ministers from the organization of the church to the present time: Samuel Shepherd, Samuel Cook, Samuel L. Gilbert, J. H. Learned, Thomas Archibald, John M. Wedgwood, Benjamin Knight, Charles Newhall, William H. Dalrymple, Jacob Tuck, M. B. Laning, Noah Hooper.

FREE-WILL BAPTIST.—Asa Merrill, William Rollings.

CHRISTIAN BAPTIST.—Noah Piper.

Christian Baptist Ministers.—The following is a list of the ministers of the Christian Baptist Church from its organization to the present time: Noah Piper, Frank K. Stratton, James L. Pierce, William B. Cottle, John W. Tilton, and Henry C. Plaisted.

Postmasters.—Only two postmasters have been appointed for Stratham, Zebulon Wiggin and Joseph S. Staples.

Phineas Merrill, Esq., was perhaps in his day one of the most useful and eminent men that this town has produced, born in 1767. He was Representative several years, and for many years town clerk and one of the selectmen. Widely known as a civil engineer, his surveys of land are pronounced by modern surveyors as very accurate. He taught all the schools in town for a good many years, was the author of a series of arithmetics, published a map of the town in 1793; also about 1800 a map of Exeter and a map of the State. A very accomplished penman, specimens of his work with the pen compare favorably with the best we see now. He died in the prime of life, 1815.

We have had other distinguished men, such as Paine Wingate, Dr. Josiah Bartlett, and the Hon. Judge Daniel Clark, who have been members of Congress.

DR. JOSIAH BARTLETT, JR.—Probably no man ever lived in Stratham who was more popular and generally respected than he. His fine personal appearance, with his cheerful social qualities, made him a universal favorite. His practice was extensive not only in this but surrounding towns. He was for many years one of the main pillars of the Congregational Church. His untimely death in the midst of his usefulness by drowning on his return from a medical convention in New York, by the giving way of a bridge in May, 1853, was not only a calamity to his family, but to this whole community.

It appears by the record that the representatives to the General Assembly were not chosen every year. Probably each served as such until his successor was elected. For instance, it will be seen that Moses Leavitt was chosen in 1744 and 1745, and again in 1748; no doubt he served in 1746 and 1747. This may have

Physicians.—Richard Rust, Samuel Shepherd, James Odell, Josiah Bartlett, Josiah Bartlett, Jr., and George H. Odell.

Garrison.—The house of John H. Dearborn, a hundred and sixty years ago or more during the Indian troubles, was a garrison, a nightly resort for safety to the people of that neighborhood. It is well preserved, although perhaps the oldest house in town. Five generations at least of the Dearborn family have had their home in this house. A very full and interesting record of the seasons, crops, storms, droughts, earthquakes, diseases, deaths, and other events was made and preserved in this family, commencing more than one hundred and thirty years ago. The record is in a very neat and legible hand, made by the great-grandfather and grandfather of the present Mr. Dearborn, commencing in 1748 and ending with 1800.

The following are some of the earlier records: "1748. A tedious cold winter, by reason of much snow and bad passing, as ever was known by any person now living. The cold began the 3rd of December, 1747, and held twenty-six days; after that, the deep snows began to come, and continued four months, so exceeding deep, there was scarcely any passing from house to house. Twenty-five snow storms this winter, which contained about twelve feet of snow in depth; middling crops of corn, but the extreme drought hurt the grass. Seventeen deaths.

"1749. A comfortable winter, but in April came on a most distressing drought, exceeding that of last year, which cut off our English corn and grass, that we had but little hay, and cattle ready to perish for want of feed. Indian corn seemed almost past recovery, but a great rain on the 5th of July revived it, so that we had the best crop ever known, which was the principal support of man and beast through the year. 'Tis wonderful to see people strive to keep their cattle alive; many go forty and fifty miles into the country to cut meadows, and drive them into the woods to browse them; some pick leaves off the trees and carry them into their barns for cattle to live on in the winter. Twenty-six deaths.

"1750. A hard winter; hay scarce; cattle are kept alive by corn and browse. A vast many has fish up our river; a fruitful summer. Twenty-six deaths.

"1751. Uncommon mild winter, so that the ferry-boat crossed the salt river every month in the winter; a wet summer; great crops of grass, middling crop of corn. Fifteen deaths.

"1752. A more than common cold winter, continuing cold for two full months, and froze so hard that it was the common practice to go with sleds and sleighs from Boston to Castle William, and the vessels all froze into the river; a great crop of hay and a great prospect for corn, but on the 29th of August a severe frost killed the stalks, and it immediately turned white, also killed almost every green thing; corn being then in the milk was so blasted there was scarcely any sound corn that year for seed, and the spring and summer following there was such a scarcity of food, both corn and meat, that it would make almost the hardest heart ache to hear the complaints of multitudes of people ready to famish for want of food, begging for a handful of corn; but in the summer of 1753 corn came over sea and supplied many. A very sickly time in Boston and towns adjacent, with the smallpox, throat distemper, and mortal fevers. Twenty-three deaths.

"1753. An open winter, so that boats passed from Exeter to Portsmouth; plentiful crops of corn and grass; a very sickly year through the country. Fifty-seven deaths.

"1754. A very moderate winter; a cold day came on suddenly the 22d of January, in which many people out a-fishing and otherwise exposed perished; a fruitful summer. Thirty-eight deaths.

1 Died in the service.

2 Mortally wounded at first battle of Bull Run.

3 Lieutenant heavy artillery.

4 Assistant Surgeon United States navy.

5 Ensign on the "Kearsarge" at the capture of the "Alabama."

"1755. Remarkable for earthquakes throughout the world; in particular, Nov. 1, Lisbon sunk, in which ten thousand people lost their lives, and the 18th of the same month, the greatest ever known in New England, at two o'clock in the morning. Fourteen deaths.

"1756. A fourth open winter, many people plowed and fenced in February; as good carting as in summer; a fruitful year; unfortunate in the war; fourteen deaths in town, four in the war.

"1757. A hard winter, much snow; great scarcity of hay; very sharp drought in summer which cut short the fruits of the earth; a terrible sickly time with fevers. Thirty-six deaths.

"1758. A very severe winter; deep snows and the most difficult passing that has been for ten years, the latter end of March the snow being three or four feet deep and hard like ice, and people sliding upon it over the fences. A bad whooping-cough among children. Successful in war this year. Thirty deaths."

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

EZRA BARKER.

Ezra Barker, son of Levi and Mary (Wiggin) Barker, was born in Stratham, N. H., on the old Barker homestead, on the 22d of May, 1803.

His father was a son of Ezra Barker, born in 1769, and died in 1841. Levi was twice married,—first to Mary Wiggin, by whom he had eight children, viz.: Mark, George, Mary, Elizabeth, Nancy, Ezra, Abby, and Martha J., all born in Stratham, and all have died except Ezra. Mr. Barker was a farmer by occupation, and a Republican in politics. He was selectman several years, and member of the Legislature two years. He was a member of the Baptist Church, and was liberal towards all benevolent institutions. His wife died July 15, 1819, aged fifty-two years, and he married for his second wife Melitabel Clark, who survived him.

Ezra Barker, Sr., born in 1729, died in 1800. He had two children, viz.: Levi and a daughter, name not known.

Ezra Barker, Jr., spent his boyhood on the old farm in Stratham, attending the district school winters and working on the farm summers. This was supplemented by a few terms at the academy in Greenfield, N. H. He remained at home, taking charge of the farm and his aged parents, till their death, when he came in possession of one-half of the farm, and by purchasing the other half of the heirs the entire homestead of some two hundred acres. Early in life he planted a nursery, and sold his trees of various kinds all through New England; thus he made his first money outside of legitimate farming. He has always been considered one of the best farmers in Stratham, and one of its shrewdest men.

He has been very successful at whatever he has undertaken, and now (1882) is one of the wealthiest, if not the wealthiest man in town. He never married, but has lived a quiet, most-temperate life. He is a bondholder in various railroads, and a stockholder in twenty-two banks. In politics he is a Republican. He has never been an aspirant for official honors, preferring the quiet home life of the intelligent New England farmer.

While he is not a member of any religious organization, still he cherishes the faith of his fathers, and is a supporter of the Baptist Church.

Mr. Barker is a man of strong convictions, and has the courage of those convictions. He possesses great force, and has always carried through successfully whatever he has undertaken. Industry and economy have been the cardinal principles actuating him through a long life made successful by them. He reviews the past with no apprehension of the future, and to-day (1882), though nearly seventy-nine years of age, retains all the vigor of youth. He is the youngest man for his years that the writer remembers having ever seen.

George Barker married Mary Piper, and had ten children, viz.: Mary A. (deceased), Albion, Caroline, George M., Louisa, John H., Thomas, Levi, and two others.

George Barker was a farmer in Stratham, and died in 1874.

Mary Barker, daughter of Levi, married Capt. George Lane, of Stratham, and has two children, viz.: Amanda and Henry.

Elizabeth Barker, daughter of Levi, married Edmond J. Lane, and has one son, Edmond B.

THE WIGGIN FAMILY.

This name is common only in New Hampshire, and is seldom met with in this country out of New England.

Stratham has for nearly two centuries been the seat of the family, and it is thought that at this time more than half the inhabitants of that ancient town are the lineal descendants of Thomas Wiggin, who was the first of the name in this country, and probably the ancestor of all who now bear it,—at least, in the Northern States.

This gentleman came to New Hampshire in 1631, as agent for the proprietary for the Upper Plantation, embracing Dover and Stratham, with part of Newington and Greenland. After spending a year or two here, he returned to England on the business of the province, and by his "good testimony," as Governor Winthrop says, "in behalf of the Massachusetts colony, did much to avert the evils that threatened it from the enmity of Georges and Mason. On his return to New Hampshire he brought with him a considerable number of families from the west of England, some of whom were of good estates and some account for religion." Mr. Leveredge also accompanied him. He was a worthy Puritan minister, but the colony did not feel able to support him, and he soon removed to Massachusetts. Governor Wiggin was continued at the head of the plantation under the Lords Say and Brook, until the people of Dover displaced him and elected that factious demagogue and immoral minister, Burdette, for their Governor.

Upon the union of this province with Massachusetts Wiggin was appointed a magistrate. He was a deputy to the General Court from Dover in 1645, and from 1650 to 1664 was one of the assistants,—the only one at that time from New Hampshire. He was one of the principal men of the province during his life, and seems to have enjoyed much of the confidence and respect of the community. He did not, however, escape envy and abuse, but he found himself sustained not only by his own conscientiousness of good intentions, but by the good opinion of those who knew him and by the tribunals to which an appeal was occasionally made for the punishment of libelers. Governor Wiggin died about the year 1667. His wife was Catherine, but her maiden name is unknown. He was probably married in England, upon his return there in 1633. He had two sons,—Andrew and Thomas. The former was born about 1635, and the latter about 1640.

Andrew Wiggin, the eldest son of Governor Thomas, was born in 1635. He married Hannah Bradstreet, a daughter of Governor Simon Bradstreet, of Andover, Mass., about the year 1659. Her mother was Ann Dudley, daughter of Governor Thomas Dudley, celebrated for her accomplishments and poetical genius. A small volume of her poetry was published, and was perhaps the first effort of the American muse given to the public through the press.

On the 4th of June, 1663, Thomas Wiggin and Catharine, his wife, gave to their son Andrew a deed of all that land called or known by the name of Squamscott, being three miles square or thereabouts. Mr. Wiggin was not much in public life, but in private life he was highly regarded, and considered as a sort of patron of the Quamscott.

Mr. Wiggin died in 1710, at the age of seventy-five. His wife died about three years before him. His children were Simon, Thomas, Andrew, Jonathan, Abigail, Mary, Dorothy, Sarah, and another daughter who was the wife of Samuel Wentworth, but whose Christian name we have not been able to learn.

1. Thomas, the eldest son of the first Andrew, was born March 5, 1661. He married Martha Denison, a daughter of John Denison, of Ipswich, and granddaughter of Maj.-Gen. Daniel Denison and Patience, his wife, who was a daughter of Governor Dudley. The mother of Mrs. Wiggin was Martha, a daughter of Deputy Governor Synods, of Massachusetts. Mr. Wiggin died early in life, leaving but one child, Hannah. His widow married Capt. Jonathan Thing, of Exeter, in July, 1693, and by him had one child, Daniel, born May 12, 1694. Capt. Thing died Oct. 31, 1694. Her third husband was Matthew Whipple, of Ipswich. She died Sept. 12, 1728.

2. Simon, second son of the first Andrew, was born April 17, 1664. The name of his first wife is unknown, who was the mother of his children. His second wife was Catharine, widow of Robert Tufton, who took the name of Mason. She was originally Catharine Wiggin, daughter of Thomas, a son of Governor Thomas Wiggin. He died about 1720. His last wife died in 1738. In her will she speaks of her daughter Elizabeth, wife of Walter Philbrick, and of her grandsons, John Tufton, Thomas Tufton, and Tufton Philbrick. The children of Capt. Simon Wiggin were:

1. Hannah, who probably married either William Cogswell, March 15, 1722, or George Veasey, Dec. 17, 1719. Her cousin Hannah, daughter of Thomas, it is supposed, married the other.

2. Deborah.

3. Simon (lieut.) was born Aug. 12, 1701, and died Aug. 11, 1757. He married Susannah Sherburne, who was born March 13, 1703, and died July 9, 1763. His children were:

1. Simon, Esq., was born March 4, 1734. He married Hannah Marble, of Bradford, Mass., July 22, 1756, and died Oct. 11, 1823. His wife died Nov. 9, 1811, aged seventy-five. Their children were:

1. Capt. Simon, born 5th January, 1759. He married Joanna Thurston, of Exeter, who was born Sept. 15, 1765, and of their children were William Henry, who married Mary Ann Shackford, and Sarah Jane.

2. Anna, born April 15, 1760, wife of Noah Robinson, Esq., of New Hampton.

3. Sarah, born June 5, 1762, wife of Daniel Hilton, of Newmarket, and mother of Nancy and Charlotte, wife of Dr. Odell.

4. Hannah, born Sept. 24, 1764, wife of John Smith, of Exeter.

5. Betty, born —, 1766, wife of Benjamin Clark and mother of, 1. Elizabeth, who married Andrew Lane; 2. Benjamin Franklin, who married Elizabeth Wingate; 3. Daniel; and 4. David, of District of Columbia, both attorneys-at-law.

3. Hannah, daughter of the first Andrew, was born Aug. 10, 1666, and is probably the one who married Samuel Wentworth, son of Elder William Wentworth. She died prior to the year 1704, and is not named in her father's will, but her son Samuel has a legacy. This son was a merchant in Boston, and died about the year 1715, and his father administered on his estate, a part of which is inventoried as land given to the deceased by his grandfather, Andrew Wiggin.

4. Mary, daughter of the first Andrew, was born —, 1668. She married Capt. Jeremy Gilman, a son of Moses and grandson of the first Edward Gilman, of Exeter. Their descendants are numerous; among them were Col. Samuel Gilman, of Newmarket, and afterwards of Tanworth, and who was trustee of Governor Wentworth's estate on his leaving the country; Col. Israel Gilman, of Newmarket; Col. David Gilman, of Tanworth; Bradstreet Gilman, Esq., of Newmarket, and the late Deacon Samuel Gilman, of Exeter.

5. Abigail, daughter of the first Andrew, married William French, of Stratham.

6. Dorothy, was the wife of — Gilman.

7. Sarah, was the wife of William Moore, whose children were William, Esq., Mary, and Jacob B. Moore, late of Concord, and now of New York.

8. Jonathan, son of the first Andrew, died in the spring of the year 1838. His children were, 1. Sarah, wife of — Hill; 2. Anna, wife of Joseph Jewett; 3. Mary, wife of — Perkins; 4. Hannah; 5. Lydia; 6. Hannah; 7. Andrew Wiggin, Esq.

The latter was born March 27, 1719. He married Anna Ross. Second wife was Melitable Moody. On the 12th of September, 1751, he married Mrs. Dorothy Sweat, who was born Feb. 26, 1727.

Andrew Wiggin died 1774. His children were by his last wife:

1. Andrew, born July 14, 1752, and died Jan. 22, 1836. He married Mary Brackett, of Greenland, on the 29th of January, 1774. Their daughter, Mary, was born Oct. 9, 1780, and died June, 1832. She was married to George Hilton, Esq., of Newmarket, July, 1803, and was the mother of George O. Hilton, who married Nancy Walker, of Portsmouth. The latter's children are Mary Miltimore and George William. Andrew Wiggin's second wife was Mary, the daughter of Hon. Paine Wingate, born July 12, 1766, married Jan. 6, 1788. Their children were (1) Harriet, born Oct. 27, 1788, died April 6, 1836; (2) Caroline, born April 20, 1790, died June 19, 1817; (3) Andrew Paine, born Sept. 1, 1791, married to Mrs. Olive Gilbert Jan. 23, 1821; she died Dec. 31, 1823; (4) Eliza, born Feb. 23, 1794, married to Mr. Andrew Taylor April 23, 1820. Their children are Andrew Bartlett, Charles Green, and George Osgood. (5) Caleb, born Jan. 8, 1796; (6) Sarah B. Wiggin, born Aug. 19, 1803, married to A. W. Miltimore May 13, 1827.

Caleb Wiggin received a common-school education and one year at Phillips' Academy, at Exeter, N. H. He has always been a farmer on the home farm in Stratham. In politics a Republican. He was captain of a State militia for many years. His father was a major.

He has been twice married,—first to Eliza Adams, Oct. 23, 1839. Of this union three children have been born, viz.: Mary C., Anna E., and Caleb M., deceased. He married for his second wife Amelia, daughter of Abednego and Mary Sawyer Robinson, of Dover, N. H., June, 1848. She was born April 30, 1807. She is descended from James Robinson, a Scotchman, who, in company with two brothers, settled at Portsmouth, in Rockingham County, N. H., Exeter, and Stratham. The line of descent is as follows: First, James; second, Jonathan, a colonel in the Revolutionary war, and settled in Stratham; and third, Abednego, who lived in Stratham, Portsmouth, New York City, Ohio, Pittsburgh, Pa., and finally returned to Portsmouth, where he died in January, 1853. He was a merchant and farmer. His wife died February, 1853. He had a large and intelligent family of eleven children, of whom six are living.

CAPT. J. E. ODELL.

Capt. James E. Odell was born Oct. 4, 1813, in Stratham, N. H., and his family on both sides reaches back to old and honored families in the early days. James Odell was a farmer, and was father of five children,—James, Mary (Mrs. Zebulon Wiggin), Eliza (died in prime of womanhood), George (a physician in Greenland), Charlotte (who was twice married, (1) to a Boyd, by whom she had one child, Charles A.; (2) Jonathan Leavitt, by whom she had one son, Joseph H. Leavitt). He died, highly respected, at the advanced age of seventy-five years.

James Odell, born in Stratham in 1785, commenced the study of medicine at an early age with Dr. Graves, of Brentwood, and after graduation settled in Stratham, where he enjoyed a brilliant though short professional life, exhibiting unusual skill, which at once placed him in the front rank of the medical men of his day. A highly promising career was cut short by his untimely death at the early age of thirty-seven years, in February, 1822. He married Charlotte, daughter of Daniel Hilton, and had children,—James E., Sarah W. (she married John Smart, and had four children, and, with her husband, is dead), William G. (died young), George H. (died April 24, 1871, aged fifty years, leaving a widow, Louisa (Barker) Odell, and three children,—Mary, George H., and James E. He was one of the most prominent physicians of this part of the State. Mrs. Dr. James Odell was a member of the sect known as Disciples or Christians. After Dr. Odell's death she married Walter Wiggin. They had three children,—Horace (deceased), Daniel H., and Charlotte (deceased).

James E. Odell was but nine years old when his father died, and he was placed with an uncle, Dr. George Odell, of North Hampton, and afterwards of Greenland. He remained with his uncle until he was eighteen, in the summer working on the farm, and attending school winters. He then went to Hampton Academy, where he was graduated when twenty-two. During a portion of this time he engaged in teaching to obtain funds to defray his expenses while pursuing his studies. Soon after leaving Hampton Academy he began to farm in Stratham. He hired money and purchased the place where his mother resided, so that the family might have a home. He continued teaching winters and employing his time in summer in labor on the farm. He was in humble circumstances, but by industry, diligence, and economy, accompanied by strong energy, coupled with patient endurance, he was enabled to steadily advance in prosperity, and by the exercise of his natural good judgment and shrewd common sense he was prevented from taking any backward steps, and has become not only a wealthy representative farmer of Stratham, but of Rockingham County. Sept. 17, 1842, he married Sarah E., daughter of Daniel and Sarah (Clark) Wiggin. She was born in Stratham, July 21, 1823.

Mr. Odell resided on the first place purchased by him, and already referred to as the home of his mother, until about 1853, when he sold it to his brother George, and purchased another near there, where he resided a few years, which, after developing and improving by the addition of beautiful buildings, he sold to Capt. William Lester. He remained on this place until 1869, when he removed to the place where he now resides. Since that time he has greatly improved its condition, largely remodeled the house and out-buildings, erected one new barn, and in many ways made valuable and permanent improvements, which have so beautified the place as to make it the finest in Stratham, and one of the handsomest farm homes in the county. This is but one of several good farms owned by him, and he has not confined himself to agriculture, but has been successfully engaged in dealing in real estate, stock, and also produce for Boston markets.

In all his business dealings he has been uniformly successful. He was a thorough and able teacher, a tidy farmer, a prudent and careful buyer, and a good salesman, thus combining the elements of a live business man. He is prompt in meeting engagements, and his word is as good as his bond. He is a stockholder in the Boston and Maine Railroad, and also in the Savings-Bank of Exeter.

In early life Capt. Odell was a Democrat, but when the Free-Soil elements of both the Whig and Democratic parties united and formed the Abolition party, he joined this party of freedom, and has since been unwaveringly a member of it and its successor, the Republican party. Capt. Odell has held all the prominent offices in town; was selectman ten years, town clerk from six to eight years in his early life, and was in the State militia, passing through all the grades from private to captain. In 1867-68 he represented Stratham in the State Legislature.

The captain was for years a member of the Christian Church, but afterwards became an attendant of the Congregational Church, and one of its liberal supporters. Mrs. Odell is a Baptist.

This worthy couple have no offspring, but their declining years are cheered by an adopted daughter of amiability and decided musical talent. Her name is Belle.

Capt. Odell has filled his position in life with the full stature of a man, and is blessed by the esteem and confidence of a large circle of friends belonging to the better class of the citizens of his State.

THE ROLLINS FAMILY.

James Rawlins<sup>1</sup> emigrated to America in 1632, with the settlers of Ipswich, Mass. He did not, however, remain long in Ipswich, for he is mentioned by Farmer as being at Newbury in 1634, being probably one of a small party who went there for the purpose of looking out a favorable spot for settlement. We next hear of him at Dover, where he was located as early as 1644, as he received a grant of land from the town July 10th of that year. Another grant of one hundred acres "was layed out for him" Nov. 26, 1656. This last-named lot is so accurately described, and the position and boundaries are so clearly defined, that the description is copied here for the benefit of descendants who may in future desire to visit the old place:

"Given and granted unto James Rawlins, his heirs and assigns, one hundred acres of upland annex to his one lot, as so layed out and bounded, by Capt. Hall of Sargent Hanson who have bounded it as followeth: that is to say, by the water s'ed 109 rodde; upon the S. E. s'ed, 80 rodde; upon the N. W. s'ed 240 rodde, upon a S. W. and by W. line; and the S. E. s'ed is upon a S. W. and by W. line. Layed 26th of 11th mo., 1656."

Mr. Rawlins resided in that part of ancient Dover called Bloody Point (now Newington) till his death, receiving grants of land at various times. His will, dated Dover, Dec. 16, 1685, gave property to his wife Hannah, to his son Ichabod (the oldest), to Benjamin, and to his "other children," not named in the will. The will was proved July 25, 1691. Obadiah More, of Strawberry Bank, was executor.

Mr. Rawlins was one of the hardy pioneers in the settlement of the western wilderness, a plain, sturdy farmer, possessed of good common sense and practical ideas, capable of thinking and acting for himself, sometimes independently of the arbitrary enactments of the law of his time, and hospitably to the stranger, though proscribed. Thus, probably, he spent his life as contentedly as the savage foes around him would permit, cultivating his broad acres and rearing a family, who were subsequently to do their part in carrying out the undertaking of founding and establishing the new State, and at a good old age his spirit was gathered to his fathers, while his ashes, the first of his family in the New World, were mingled with the virgin soil which he aided in clearing from the "forest primeval." His children were Ichabod, Thomas, Samuel, James, Benjamin, Joseph, and Deborah.

Thomas<sup>2</sup> (James<sup>1</sup>) lived also at Bloody Point; was taxed there in 1662 and 1668, and removed to Exeter, N. H., where he remained till his death. His farm appears to have been located on the old road leading from Exeter to Hampton. We know but little of him, but one passage in his life has been preserved, which tends to show that he possessed something of his father's independence, and that his ideas of justice were something in advance of those of his neighbors. He was one of the company of Edward Gove, a member of the dissolved Assembly of New Hampshire, 1683, who were found in arms, and endeavoring to excite an insurrection for the overthrow of the arbitrary government of the royal Governor, Edward Cranfield. Rawlins was a justice of the peace in 1682. He married, about 1679, Rachel, daughter of Moses and Alice Cox, of Hampton. The precise date of his death is not known. His inventory was returned to the Probate Office, Nov. 7, 1706. His children were Thomas, Moses, Joseph, Mary, Benjamin, Aaron, Samuel, John, Alice, and Rachel. Joseph<sup>2</sup> (Thomas<sup>2</sup>, James<sup>1</sup>), residence Stratham. At the first town-meeting held in Stratham, April 10, 1716, he was appointed one of a committee of five to build a meeting-house. This was the first church, of course, in the town, and it appears by the record to have been "48 feet long, 36 feet wide, and 20 feet stud." Joseph Rawlins' will, dated March 11, 1746-47, proved Jan. 25, 1748, bequeathed to his heirs lands in Stratham, Brentwood, Nottingham, and Bow. His children were Mary, Joseph, Hannah, Elizabeth, Charity, Mercy, Rachel, Mary, and Joshua. Joshua<sup>1</sup> (Joseph<sup>1</sup>, Thomas<sup>2</sup>, James<sup>1</sup>), residence Stratham, married Mary Clark, of Stratham, 1735; died April 19, 1800. Dea. Daniel Clark, the executor of his will, was a brother of Mrs. Rollins, and grandfather of Hon. Daniel Clark, United States senator from New Hampshire, and judge of United States District Court. Their children were Hannah, Jonathan, David, Elisha, Nicholas, Sarah, Anna.

Nicholas<sup>2</sup> (Joshua<sup>1</sup>, Joseph<sup>1</sup>, Thomas<sup>2</sup>, James<sup>1</sup>) resided at Stratham, was one of the selectmen twenty-six years, and for six years represented that town in the New Hampshire Legislature; was commissioned justice of the peace by Governor Gilman in 1795. He was engaged in service of various kinds during the Revolution. In the fall of 1775 fears were entertained that Portsmouth might be attacked seaward, and the fortifications were doubly guarded. Joshua Wingate, of Stratham, was appointed colonel of the forces in the harbor, and Jonathan Moulton, of Hampton, colonel of the troops for guarding the sea-coast. Twenty-eight companies were detailed for service at different points in Portsmouth Harbor. Nicholas Rollins commanded the Tenth Company, which was stationed at Pierce's Island. In December, 1775, he served as lieutenant in one of the companies sent to reinforce Gen. Sullivan at Winter Hill. In 1777 he was captain of the Fourth Company in Col. Abraham Drake's regiment. Gen. William Whipple's brigade participated with his command in the battles of Stillwater and Saratoga, and was present at the surrender of Burgoyne. He served till January, 1778. He married Abigail, daughter of Abraham Tilton, of Stratham, 1761. Their children were Hannah, Elisha, Nicholas, Daniel, Mary, Levi, Mark, Asa, Ann, Elisha, and Abigail.

James W. Rollins, an influential farmer in Stratham, was born on the old Rollins homestead, which has been in the family several generations, in Stratham, N. H., Dec. 27, 1825. His educational advantages were confined to the common schools of his native town. He taught school ten or more years, singing school several years, and for many years was leader of the Stratham and North Hampton Choral Union. He is a Republican in politics, and as such has been selectman five years; moderator of town-meetings, representative to State Legislature in 1857 and 1858, serving on the committees of roads and bridges and agriculture. He married Ably A., daughter of L. B. Smith and Betsey Dole, of Newmarket, N. H., Oct. 14, 1874. Their children are Florence E. and James W., Jr.

Mrs. Rollins is a native of Andover, Mass. Her father was an extensive dealer in wood and lumber; was twice married,—first to Betsey Dole, and had four children, of whom Mrs. Rollins is the third. His second wife was Mary Folsom, of Laconia, by whom he had three children.

JOSIAH B. WIGGIN.

Josiah Bartlett Wiggin was born in the town of Stratham, Rockingham Co., N. H., June 1, 1811. His father was Capt. Andrew Wiggin, and his mother Dolly, daughter of David Wiggin, of Greenland, and is a lineal descendant of Thomas Wiggin, who was one of the original grantees of the Squamecot patent, and the first Governor of the provincial colony of New Hampshire. The line of descent was as follows: Thomas Wiggin was the father of Andrew, who was the father of Judge Andrew, who was the father of Bradstreet, who was the father of Andrew, whose son Andrew was the father of the subject of this sketch. Mr. Wiggin lives on the farm where he was born, and which was the property of his ancestor, Thomas Wiggin, who settled at Dover Point in 1631, and has descended from father to son through these various generations to himself, never having been conveyed out of the family.

Josiah B. Wiggin

Mr. Wiggin received a common-school education, and during a long and active life has been engaged in many callings. When seventeen years of age he left the old home and commenced his business career as clerk in a store at Exeter, where he remained one year; then had charge of the post-office there for some three years; thence to Dover, in the post-office there, one year; then to South Newmarket, where he remained several years in trade for himself, the latter part of which he was confidential clerk of George O. Hilton, agent of the South Newmarket Iron Foundry Company. For more than forty years he has been an active politician, and as early as 1836 he was the engrossing clerk of the State Legislature, in which capacity he served during the summer and fall session. He was re-elected the next year, and again in 1840, when there were also two sessions. He was assistant clerk of the State Senate in 1841, and re-elected in 1842, when there were two sessions, and elected again in 1844, when there were summer and fall sessions. He was elected register of deeds for Rockingham County in 1845, and again in 1849, and re-elected in 1850. He has been justice of the peace and quorum throughout the State, and notary public; county auditor three years; has been in the insurance and pension business, and in settling estates; was editor one year, and correspondent of several newspapers for many years, and been engaged in historical and genealogical researches, especially those relating to the Wiggin family. He was town clerk and selectman for several years of his native town, and representative to the State Legislature in 1878 and 1879, and on the last day of the session of 1878 he was presented with an elegant gold-headed ebony cane.

He has been prominent in town, county, and State affairs. In politics he is an ardent Republican, and widely known to prominent men of both political parties of the State.

Mr. Wiggin married Eleanor Hilton Smith, of Epping, April 16, 1842. Of their four children the first died in infancy; the second, Andrew C., now resides at Manchester, N. H.; the third, Clara E., married Ephraim Gordon, of Brentwood; and the fourth, Linnie B., died at three years of age.

WINDHAM.

WITHIN the narrow limits allotted to me for this article it will be impossible to give little more than a disjointed and fragmentary sketch of this old town, of its hardy first Scotch settlers, its civil, political, ecclesiastical, and other history, all of which is so interesting and so honorable. For the main annals of the town and its families, drawn out with great elaborateness and detail, desiring readers, if such there are, will find in my forthcoming "History of Windham."

Situation.—Its location is in the nave of a wheel, the Merrimac River acting as two-thirds of the circumference of this wheel. It is bounded on the north by Londonderry and Derry, on the east by Salem, on the south by Salem and Pelham, on the west by Hudson, Beaver River, or Londonderry. It is thirty-five miles northwest of Boston, Mass., thirty-three southwest of Concord, N. H., ten miles east of Nashua, twelve miles west of Haverhill, Mass., fifteen miles southeast of Manchester, and ten miles northwest of Lawrence, Mass. It is situated in latitude about forty-two degrees forty-eight minutes north, and in longitude five degrees fifty minutes east from Washington.

Gaentake or Beaver River is the principal stream, which flows out of Tsienneto (Shoneto) or Beaver Lake, in Derry, and flows through Windham in nearly a southerly direction, and empties into the Merrimac River at Lowell, Mass. There are six lakes, called ponds, namely,—Spruce Pond, Hittitity, Mitchell's, Golden's, Cobbett's, and Policy.

Cobbett's Pond is two miles in length, is the second in size, and covers one thousand acres. It lies in a basin, is beautiful for situation, and from its shores in places rise well-cultivated farms or wooded hills. Policy Pond lies partly in Salem, is the largest in area, and extends over ten hundred and seventeen acres. This is also a lovely sheet of water, and is much frequented by pleasure parties from the cities.

Causes for the Settlement.—Windham from 1719 to 1742 was a parish of Londonderry, a part and parcel of that historic town. Consequently the early history of the two towns is indissolubly connected. It will be impossible to speak of the first settlements here and the characters of the settlers without speaking of the causes which induced the emigration and settlement of our Scottish ancestors in the wilderness, and of their political and religious influences which aided so powerfully in the development and formation of their minds and characters, giving those characteristics which contributed to the success of the new settlement, to the high honor which has ever been accorded to it, to the remarkable intelligence of its people, and the great influence which has gone out from it during these succeeding generations. The causes were of a politico-religious nature, closely connected with the times in which they lived.

During the reign of King James I., of England, a large portion of the six northern counties of Ireland fell to the king, being the sequestered estates of his rebellious Irish subjects.

To hold in check the wild and turbulent spirits of his Irish subjects he induced a large emigration of his Scotch countrymen to the province of Ulster, Ireland. This was in the year 1612. In 1613 the first Presbyterian Church ever established in Ireland was established by these Scotch emigrants at Ballycorry, county of Antrim. The Scotch emigrants were stern Presbyterians; the native Irish were ignorant Roman Catholics. They were different in blood and in religion. The Scotch settled on the lands from which the Irish had been expelled, and in consequence of this fact, the unlikeness of the races in manners and customs, and of the distinctness in race and religion, a bitter feud existed between them. Marriages were not contracted by representatives of the different nationalities.

In 1641 the Catholics massacred over forty thousand Protestants. But a change soon occurred in the government; royalty fell, the protectorate was established, a man was placed at the helm who was both able and willing to protect the Protestants from their enemies.

In 1649 the strong arm of Cromwell bore an avenging sword, punished the Catholics, and brought peace to the country.

On the accession, in 1660, of Charles II. to the throne of England, his brother James (afterwards James II.) was appointed viceroy of Scotland. He was a bigoted Catholic, and the Scotch Presbyterians were the legitimate objects of his hate. The fires of persecution were rekindled; the sword was again unsheathed and bathed in the "blood of thousands of slaughtered saints."

In consequence of this persecution thousands of the Scotch fled to Ireland and joined their Protestant countrymen there, and among them were many of the fathers and the mothers of the first settlers of Windham and Londonderry.

In 1688-89 occurred the memorable siege of Londonderry, Ireland. Many Scotchmen from Scotland rallied to aid the Scotchmen of Ireland, then residents of that city. The heroic nature of the defense, celebrated in history, is hardly surpassed in the annals of any people. Many of those who were young at the time of the siege were the sturdy men who came in 1719 and afterward, and helped to found this settlement. They sought in the new world a larger degree of religious and political liberty than the old world afforded. They came in manhood's strength, prepared the rude habitations, broke the ground, scattered the grain which the rich and virgin soil would bring forth into abundant harvests. Then the old people came,—men who were stalwart and strong during the defense of the city,—and shared with them the joys as well as the perils of the new life in the wilderness. Many letters came direct from the "bonnie blue hills" of Scotland.

Such was the nationality and such the education derived in the school of trouble, war, and adversity of the early settlers, and the characteristics thus developed enabled them to triumph over all obstacles in the hard life in the wilderness. From the fact that the early residents were called Scotch-Irish, on account of a prior abode in Ireland, many have supposed that it denoted a mixture of Scotch and Irish descent, but such is not the fact. The blood of Scotia and Erin did not flow commingled in the veins of the first emigrants. "They were of Scottish lineage, pure and simple," and the terms Scotch-English or Scotch-Irish, so far as they imply a different than Scotch origin, are a perversion of truth and false to history.

First Settlements.—The first settlements in Windham were made near Cemetery Hill as early as 1720, and in the locality called Stone Dam. At the latter place, near Batten's mills, in Pelham, David Grigg and Alexander McCoy, each of Scottish blood, the former of Londonderry, Ireland, the latter from the Highlands of Scotland, settled, according to an old record, in 1721. The place was then an unbroken wilderness,—no trails or paths through the forest save as they made them by spotting trees. John Waddell, on the highest point of land near Cemetery Hill, was an early pioneer, and built the first house in town. In 1723, "Daddy" John Dinsmoor, the emigrant, located on the line between Windham and Londonderry, at what is now known as the Hopkins farm. He had been an Indian captive, but was released, and came to Londonderry. His father was a native of Crehennard, Scotland, and he himself was the ancestor of the two Governors of that name, of Robert Dinsmoor, the "Rustic Bard," and all the Dinsmoors of Windham. About 1730, Samuel Morison, son of James and grandson of John Morison, of Aberdeenshire, Scotland, located in the range. He was the ancestor of the Morisons of the town and of the writer. Thomas Morison, his cousin, settled about the same time near him. He afterward settled in Peterborough.

In 1733, Henry Campbell, born in Londonderry, Ireland, son of Daniel, of Scotland, settled in the west part of the town, and where his descendants "live unto this day." About this same time Alexander Simpson and Adam Templeton struck for settlement here.

John Cochran, also of Scotch blood, came in 1730, and upon his farm, which he hewed from the wilderness, his descendants have since lived. Alexander Park and John Armstrong appeared soon after.

These are some of the pioneer fathers: William and Robert Thompson, Joseph Waugh, Thomas Quigley, Alexander and James Dunlap, John Kyle, John Morrow, Hugh Graham, John and James Vance, Samuel and William McAdams, James Gilmore, Andrew Armour, John Hopkins, Daniel Clyde, William Thorn, John Stuart, Francis Langlie, Hugh Brown, Samuel Kinkead, Alexander Ritchie, William Jamison, Nathaniel Hemphill, James Caldwell, and others, who were here in early times, and not a single descendant of any one of whom bearing their names live in town to-day.

The First Settlers.—Immediately after the first settlement had been made in Londonderry, near what is now Derry East Meeting-house, individuals went out to work in summer upon the more distant glebes and returned to the more populous settlement in the winter. Many of the young men would thus live several years, laboring to provide a home for their future companions. Then they went or sometimes sent to Ireland for the brave lass who had consented to cross the wide ocean, braving the dangers of the deep and the perils of the wilderness to meet her stern lord in the forest home. Land was cheap, and John Hopkins bought a large tract for a web of linen cloth. Neighbors were far apart, oftentimes as much as three miles, and it was said "we were obliged to go three miles to borrow a needle, not being able to buy one."

Then there were no grist-mills nearer than Ilaverhill or Andover, Mass.; so the grain was carried upon poles which trailed from the horse's back. They broke their corn into meal by two revolving stones, being a hand mill called a corn. They lived mainly on what could be raised in the ground. They possessed but little wealth, for their lot was cast in a wintry land like their fatherland, Scotland, with a rocky soil.

Amid the trials of their lot their character stands out in bold relief. They were not illiterate people. They had received a fair education, many of them in Scotland or Ireland.

They were stern, uncompromising Presbyterians, and held to their form of worship with great tenacity. They loved intelligence, liberty, and religion. No sacrifices were too great for liberty, no sufferings too severe for their religion, no hardships too extreme to win a home for themselves and their posterity where liberty and true religion, twin sisters, might dwell together, and the domestic virtues might undisturbed shine forth with peculiar brightness.

Petitions and Act of Incorporation.—Up to this period the residents of the territory now known as Windham and nearly a third of Salem had been included in the town of Londonderry. They labored under great difficulties. They were seven miles from either church of Londonderry. In order to remedy these disadvantages, and to secure a more perfect union among themselves, forty-seven freeholders, in 1747, petitioned for the erection of a new parish to Governor Benning Wentworth and the Legislature. The act of incorporating the town of Windham was passed and assented to by the Governor Feb. 12, 1742. The bounds of the town were as follows: "Beginning at the dwelling-house of one John Hopkins of said Londonderry, yeoman, and from thence running on a due west course to Beaver brook so called, then beginning again at the said house at the place where it began before (so as to have y<sup>e</sup> said house to y<sup>e</sup> Northward) and from thence to run on a due east course till it comes to y<sup>e</sup> easterly line of said Londonderry, thence to run as said line runs till it comes to the southerly boundary of said Londonderry, thence to run to the westward as the said boundary runs till it comes to the said brook, and thence to run as the said brook runs until it comes to the place on the said brook where the said west line runs across said brook." There were excepted out of these limits the polls and estates of John Archibald, James Clark, James Morse, John Hopkins, and John Cochran, and their respective families. This exception was a fruitful cause of disorder and litigation for many years, till at last they were legislated into Windham, where they have since remained. By the provisions of the charter Robert Dinsmoor, Joseph Waugh, and Robert Thompson were authorized to call a meeting of the inhabitants March 8, 1742.

The sun which rose on the morning of Feb. 12, 1742, ushered in a new and brighter day to the people. That day Windham became a town with a legal name, clothed with individuality, possessing the same rights, enjoying the same privileges, and subject to the same burdens and responsibilities of other towns in the province. Henceforth the people of this little republic in their Congress, where every man was a member, and could and would be heard, were to manage their domestic affairs in their own time, in their own way, and for their own good.

First Town-Meeting was holden at ten o'clock, March 8, 1742. As Robert Dinsmoor's name stands first on the list of committee, he probably called the meeting to order and presided till Lieut. Samuel Morison was elected moderator. He presided in the first meeting, and in twenty-nine subsequent legal gatherings of the freeholders. First officers chosen were Robert Dinsmoor, Joseph Waugh, Robert Thompson, Samuel Morison, William Gregg, selectmen; William Thom, town clerk; Thomas Morison and John Dinsmoor were chosen inspectors of dears.

It was "voted that the selectman is to provide two staves, one for the Constable, and one for the taything man, and a town book."

In this simple, plain, direct way, Windham commenced her career as a municipality. The officers worked without pay.

In March, 1744, commenced the French and Indian war, which lasted till October, 1748. This town escaped the ravages of the merciless foe, but she shared in the general alarm, and her sons aided in defending other towns in the State from the enemy, and William Campbell, William Gregg, Jr., N. L. Smiley, and William Smiley were scouting as soldiers of Windham in the Merrimac Valley in July, 1745, and other of our soldiers did good service in the war.

The year 1752 was one of trouble. There was contention in their annual meeting, one party seceded and held another meeting, and two boards of officers were elected. The proceedings of each meeting were declared illegal by the Legislature. A new meeting was ordered, the vanquished became the victors, and so ended the dual government of the town.

This year Windham was dismembered, and about one-third of its territory was annexed to Salem.

Windham was so much weakened by this dismemberment that it could no longer support its pastor, Rev. William Johnston, who was dismissed.

The Last French and Indian War.—The treaty of peace signed between England and France October, 1748, was of short duration.

In 1754 hostilities commenced anew. It was the conflict of differing civilizations, and did not cease till French-Catholic supremacy was overthrown in Canada, that province conquered and placed under the domination of the British government. As an integral part of the British empire this town was called upon for sacrifice, to contribute her share for the prosecution of the war, so her sons left the delights of the home and fireside for the sufferings of the march, the duties and privations of the camp, and the perils of the battle-field. Among her soldiers were Samuel Thompson, William Thompson, Hugh Dunlap, Daniel Clyde, and many others too numerous to mention here.

In August, 1757, the French and Indians captured Fort William Henry on the north shore of Lake George, in New York, and three thousand troops surrendered, when an infamous massacre of prisoners took place. In a New Hampshire regiment of two hundred men, eighty were killed. Windham soldiers were there. Among them was Thomas Dunlap, who was pursued by a savage, who caught him by his queue, and was on the point of braining him with his tomahawk, when Dunlap sprang away, tearing out a large part of the hair from his head, escaped, reached the fort, and was protected by the French.

Some fifty-five different men from this, or the same unit at different times, served in the course of the "seven years' war." This was a heavy burden on the young settlement, and we can look back with pride upon this military page of our local history, which shines so brightly with self-sacrifice, heroism, and patriotism. The conflict drew to a close, and Great Britain was victorious. The struggle between the two rival powers of Europe for supremacy in America had ceased, and great was the rejoicing of the English colonists.

The world advances, is educated, and brought to a higher plane through conflict, suffering, sacrifice, and blood. This conflict had aroused the martial spirit of our people, developed their manhood, strengthened their determination and resolution, and fitted them for the greater conflict, the grander struggle of the Revolution, which was so rapidly approaching.

1770, Windham helps colonize Belfast, Me.

In 1770, a year or two previous, and for several years succeeding, citizens of Windham settled in Belfast. Among the actual settlers were John Davidson, Deacon John Tufts, and, later, Lieut. James and John Gilman, sons of Col. James Gilman. Owners and proprietors were Alexander Stuart, Robert McHvaine. At a later date John Cochran, Joseph Ladd, and A. W. Park became residents.

The crisis was now on them! The waves of that long contest, the French and Indian war, had hardly lulled themselves to rest before the ominous mutterings of another tempest were distinctly heard. The breezes of the Atlantic brought to American ears the approaching danger. This war was to prove the mettle of our people, to show the stern grit of our citizens.

Our men were soldiers by their mode of life in the new settlement. They had seen great exposure in the previous wars. They weighed the issues of the coming contest in the intellectual balances of their minds, and were prepared to meet the danger which their conclusion involved. They knew their strength, and were not afraid to use it. They were true in peace and quiet, they were steady and true in the tempest and storm.

A company of minute-men was formed, and when the swift courier brought the news of the Lexington alarm, Capt. Joseph Clyde left his field hurriedly, rallied his company, and was gone. The good housewives cooked provisions, loaded them upon the backs of horses, and sent them after the soldiers.

The following men enlisted immediately after the Lexington alarm, April 23, 1775: James Caldwell, Samuel Caldwell, John Caldwell, Nathaniel Burrows.

May 25, 1775, Lieut. John Dinsmoor was sent a delegate to the County Congress.

Committee of Safety, 1775, were George Davidson, Peter Merrill, Robert Hemphill, Samuel Morison, Joseph Smith, John Dinsmoor, James Gilman, Nehemiah Hadley, and William Campbell.

June 17, 1775, the battle of Bunker Hill was fought, the cannonading being distinctly heard in Windham. Her sons mingled in the deadly fray, and some had sealed their devotion to American liberty by their death. Tradition says five were slain, but the name of only John Collins has come down to us. John Simpson lost a part of his hand, and received a pension.

These men were in the Continental service July 8, 1775: William Duty, Charles Amis, Mark Duty, Alexander Brown, John Jameson, Abram Planet, Jacob Norly, Moses Morys, Jonathan Thompson, John Kinkead, William McHvaine.

The legislation of the town was patriotic. It was always in favor of the patriots. Their quotas of men and money were usually promptly furnished. When a few citizens wished to be excused from the soldier rates, the town always voted not to excuse them.

The following persons signed the Association Test, which was virtually a declaration of independence:

STATE OF NEW HAMPSHIRE, WINDHAM, Aug. the 26th, 1776.

To the Honoral e Committee of Safety of this State the following Request hath been punctually observed. Notwithstanding, Lieut Abram Reid, Matthew Reed, Amos Merrill, hath Refused or Neglected to sign the following Declaration.

NATHANIEL HADLEY } Selectmen.

During the whole war our men shared in the joys of the army's triumphs, or in the sadness of its defeats. Fourteen men, at least, from Windham were in the battle of Bennington, as follows: in Stark's brigade, Col. Mons Nichol's regiment, Capt. Daniel Runnell's (or Reynolds') company, who enlisted July 20, 1777, were John Campbell, Samuel Campbell, John Stuart, John Hughes. (These are incorrectly credited to Londonderry in Parker's history of that town.)

In Capt. Jesse Wilson's company, same regiment, were Ensign David Gregg (afterwards lieutenant), Samuel Morison, sergeant (grandfather of the writer), Ephraim Kyle, corporal, Alexander Morrow, David Campbell, John Kinkead, John Jameson, Jesse Davidson, James Wilson, Thomas Karr, William Bolton.

Casualties.—David Gregg had his thumb shot off. Samuel Morison suffered severely from sunstroke. James Wilson was taken prisoner by a British soldier, and he in turn took his captor captive. John Kinkead was killed. His sad fate and other incidents of the battle have been put in verse by the "Rustic Bard," Robert Dinsmoor. When our soldiers returned from the battle they were welcomed by the citizens, and the "Rustic Bard" had a poem written to commemorate the event. The nurse's voice has long been silent, and patriotic verse no longer emanates from his pen. The soldiers go no more forth to battle, nor are they troubled by war's alarms. But soldiers and poet sleep their last sleep, and gently the soles cover them.

The success at Bennington was the harbinger of a brighter day. The auspicious morning was at hand when England would be compelled to accord justice to America. The gallant sons of the old Granite State now rallied to join the northern army as men flock to a feast. The British commander was effectually "bottled up," and on the 17th of October, 1777, Burgoyne surrendered to Gen. Gates. Windham men helped to swell the ranks of the patriot army, and participated in those battles, and shared in the glories of the victory. Among them, who enlisted September 29th and discharged October 28th, were Col. Isaac Cochran, Sergt. James Davidson, Sergt. Eliphale<sup>t</sup> Ladd, Robert Dinsmoor ("Rustic Bard"), Fifer William McCoy, John Campbell, Alexander Gregg, John Cochran, John Armor, Alexander Simpson, John Dinsmoor, Daniel McHvaine, John Williams (Corp. Daniel McHvaine was incorrectly credited to Londonderry in Parker's history of that town). In Capt. Joseph Finley's company at Saratoga, which marched from Londonderry, enlisted Oct. 1, discharged Nov. 4, 1777, were Adam Dunlap, John McCoy, David Quentin, and William McKeen. These four Windham soldiers are incorrectly credited to Londonderry in Parker's history of that town.

So the record might be swelled with the names of our soldiers, their valor, and the war legislation of the town, but lack of space forbids. These will all be found in the "History of Windham," devoted to such full details; suffice to say that the record of the soldiers was valiant, the legislation of the town energetic, prompt, and patriotic, the enthusiasm and self-sacrifice of the people under all the privations the war imposed was worthy of all honor.

Members of Constitutional Conventions and Representatives, 1775 to 1882.—At the commencement of the Revolution, when royal authority was opposed, a convention was called in Exeter in 1774, and most towns in the State were represented. The second convention met in May, 1775, to consult on State affairs; the third convention December 21, and proceeded to form a temporary State government. June 2, 1775, John Dinsmoor was sent as delegate. June 22, James Bolton was sent. In October and December he was re-elected; also in 1776-77. Since that date they have been as follows:

Lieut. John Dinsmoor, 1778.

James Bolton, 1779-81.

Three conventions of 1782, Deacon Samuel Morison (3d), James Bolton (3d), Deacon John Dinsmoor.

Deacon Gain Armor, 1783.

War History from 1812-15, and during the Great Rebellion.—When the war of the Revolution was over the best of feeling did not exist between England and her late colonies. In 1795 war between the nations was averted by an unpopular treaty. There was an itching on the part of the government and a portion of the people to reduce the arrogance of Great Britain, who was mistress of the seas. War at length broke out. It was extremely unpopular in Windham, and denounced in unmeasured terms as a wicked, causeless war, and a useless sacrifice of blood and treasure. It is said that only four men in the town voted in favor of the war, and the conditions of the treaty of peace between the nations justified the views of our people. Though bitterly opposed to the war, the following persons were enlisted or drafted for the service, the most, if not all, being stationed at Portsmouth: Benjamin Blanchard, William Balch, Robert P. Dinsmoor, Samuel Dinsmoor, Thomas Nesmith, Samuel Davidson, Richard Dow, David Campbell, Alexander Gordon, John B. Hilands, Moses Sargent, Phillip K. Wilds, Rufus Patterson, Stephen E. Blaisdell, Samuel Rowell, Amos Dow, Thomas Moore, David Durrer, Phineas Danforth, James Simpson, Samuel Marshall, Aaron Senter, Solomon Corliss, John Webster, William Simpson, John Nesmith (served in a Massachusetts regiment), Woodbridge Cottle. When the treaty of peace was signed, Dec. 24, 1814, and ratified by the President, Feb. 17, 1815, there was great rejoicing by all parties. The news of peace was brought from Harbor Hill, Mass., to Windham by Samuel Armor, Esq., who rode up to the houses of people shouting, "Peace, peace, peace!" and with only a word of explanation he reined his horse into the highway and was gone to carry joy to other households.

So far as this town is concerned, peace reigned for many years. The war with Mexico did not affect us, and not a soldier is known to have gone from the town. But a storm was brewing which would shake to their centre the foundations of our national government. The slaveholders' rebellion was at hand, and the hour would call for sacrifice on the part of our people. Sumter was attacked April 19, 1861. The North sprang to arms. The following list is very nearly correct of the men furnished by the town:

Carl Albert, Joseph G. Ayers, James Baker, James Brown, C. H. Batchelder, George W. Durant, Severe L. Duplissis, Albert Fletcher, Charles E. Hanscom, George A. Jackson, Joseph F. Mingo, Elixis Marcotte, Truworthy Norris, Ephraim Plimpton, Wentworth S. Cowan, Thomas Crook, Patrick Hannan, Bernard McCam, Oliver Burns, James Murphy, Russell W. Powell, Jacques Dreux, James Brown, Charles Cole, Frederick Otis, James C. Crowell, Charles Fegan, George W. Carr, Whiting R. Richardson, Gilman Jaquitt, James Jones (colored), Harry Hancock. Seven citizens were drafted and sent substitutes. Eleven citizens voluntarily sent substitutes to the war.

So closes the war history of the town.

CHAPTER LXXXIV.

WINDHAM.—(Continued.)

ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY, ETC.

THE Scotch settlers of Windham were of a stern and rugged type, and clung to the tenets of the Presbyterian Church with an obstinacy hard to surpass. Nor is this surprising when we consider the circumstances of their lives and stock to which they belonged. They were the descendants of the Covenanters. Their fathers had resisted the onslaughts of the Roman Catholic and the English Established Church. They hated Popery, and had but little more regard for the English Church. They had struggled on through the troubled years, bearing aloft the ensign of their faith,—to them the only true faith,—and their banner the only true standard of the cross.

The story of the past was familiar to our first settlers. It was engraved upon "the red-leaved tablets" of their hearts, and that they should cling with great tenacity to the faith and form of worship of their fathers is not surprising.

The religious side of their characters was strongly developed. They were the followers of John Knox, and exhibited much of the stern, honest, plain, uncompromising spirit of that reformer.

This town has been decidedly orthodox from the beginning. Many families attended meeting at what is now East Derry. After attending to their morning duties the whole family, even women and children, would walk eight or nine miles to meeting, listen to two long sermons, and then return to their homes, not reaching them till after dark. So they prized the sanctuary, and appreciated and loved dearly the faith in which they trusted. The first religious meetings were holden in barns during the warm season for eleven years, when, in 1753, the first meeting-house was built on the high ground southeast of Cobbett's Pond. Following the custom of the dear old fatherland, the burying-ground stood beside the kirk. The dead rested near the living, worshipped where in summer days, through the opened windows which let in the sunshine and the breath of flowers, the words from the lips of the living preacher might be borne by the breezes and quietly wave the grass which grew and the flowers which bloomed on the mounds above the peaceful sleepers. This spot is now known as the cemetery on the hill, a lovely place, sacred to the associations of the past, sacred, too, to the tender memories of the present as well.

Rev. William Johnston received a call, July 12, 1742, to settle here, but was not installed till 1747. His salary was two hundred pounds and the use of the parsonage, besides three hundred pounds as a settlement. He ordained as ruling elders Nathaniel Hemphill, Samuel Kinkead, and John Kyle. By the dismemberment of Windham, in 1752, whereby about one-fourth of our territory with its people were annexed to Salem, the society was so weakened that it could not support the minister, and he was dismissed in July, 1752, having been with this people at least ten years. He was a highly-educated man, having been graduated at the University of Edinburgh, Scotland, after a seven years' course. He was of Scotch descent, was born in 1710 in Mullowmale Co., Tyrone, Ireland, and was the son of William and Elizabeth (Hoy) Johnston. Came to America previous to 1736; was then pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Worcester, Mass. After leaving town he preached at Corry's Brook, now Duaneburgh, Washington Co., N. Y. He afterwards purchased five hundred acres of land at Sidney Plains, N. Y., where his descendants live, and died at Florida, Montgomery Co., N. Y., May 10, 1782. He married while in Windham a sister of the wife of Rev. William Davidson, of Londonderry, Anna, daughter of Dr. John and Anna (Witter) Cummings. Her father was a surgeon in the British navy, and died on the coast of Africa.

Rev. John Kinkead was installed October, 1760, with a salary of £1300, old tenor, or about $216, six pounds making one dollar. The following elders were ordained by him: John Armstrong, Samuel Campbell, David Gregg, Lieut. Samuel Morison, Robert Hopkins, John Tuffts. The ministrations of Mr. Kinkead were not satisfactory, nor his deportment such as to win the love and respect of his people, and he was dismissed in April, 1765.

Rev. Simon Williams was ordained in December, 1766, with a salary of about $233.33, with a settlement of $200 and the use of the parsonage. He was pastor here for twenty-seven years, dying Nov. 10, 1793. He did a noble work, and his influence lives after him. He established a private academy, which was an important tributary of Dartmouth College. As a scholar he was eminent, and was much beloved by the people. He married Maria Floyd, who died July 28, 1805. They were born Feb. 19, 1729, the same hour, in Trim, County of Meath, Ireland, and they are buried in the cemetery on the hill, and his grave is directly beneath where the pulpit stood in the old church. He ordained as elders John Dinsmoor, Robert Park, John Anderson, William Gregg, Samuel Morrison, Robert Dinsmoor ("Rustic Bard"), Alexander McCoy.

A new church was at the centre of the town in 1798. Rev. Samuel Norris was ordained over the church Oct. 9, 1805, and continued as pastor till he was dismissed on account of failing health, in 1826. He continued to reside here till his death, Sept. 6, 1848, in the seventy-fourth year of his age. He married, April 17, 1798, Ruth Pratt, born Aug. 29, 1779, died March 22, 1869. Their son, William C. Harris, is a resident of Windham. His ministry was a successful one. David Gregg, James Davidson, William Davidson, John Davidson, Jesse Anderson, Samuel Davidson, J. P. Johnson, Eleaser Barrett, James W. Perkins, Jacob E. Evans, and David McCleary were ordained elders.

Rev. Calvin Cutter was installed over the church in April, 1828, and died Feb. 19, 1844. He had previously been settled in Lebanon, N. H., was graduated at Dartmouth College in 1819, at Andover Theological Seminary, 1823. During his ministry the present church was built (1834), and the old house is now the town-house. The latter has at different times been occupied for preaching some three months a year by the Methodists and Unitarians.

The eldership was increased by these additions: In 1833, Samuel Anderson, Jacob Harris, Silas Moore, David Campbell, Jonathan Cochran. In 1843, Theodore Dinsmoor, Joseph Park, Benjamin Blanchard, David A. Davidson, and R. Hills. One hundred and fifty-eight persons united with the church between 1830 and 1844. Mr. Cutter possessed a great deal of intellectual strength and vigor. He married, June 3, 1824, Rhoda Little, of Boscawen, N. H., who died Aug. 15, 1852. Their sons, Rev. Charles Cutter, is settled in Burton, Ohio; Rev. Carroll Cutter, D.D., is the efficient and able president of Western Reserve College, Hudson, Ohio.

In 1845, November 5th, Lorin Thayer was ordained over the church, with a salary of five hundred dollars. Like the most of his predecessors, he continued with his people till death. For over twenty years he continued their pastor, and the disease which terminated in his death, Sept. 19, 1869, was the cause of the dissolution of his pastoral relation with his people, April 25, 1866.

He died at the age of fifty-four years, and he is buried among us, as are three of his predecessors. He was thrice married, his last wife being Elizabeth C. Farley, who became closely identified with the society and interest of the people. She survived her husband till March 4, 1878. His ministry was an eminently successful one, and the memory of him and his wife are tenderly cherished by many. Samuel Campbell became an elder during his pastoral charge. Jan. 20, 1868, Joseph Lauman received a call to settle, and he was installed June 2, 1868. A parsonage was built in 1868 at an expense of over three thousand dollars. Mr. Lauman's pastorate continued till his resignation. He was dismissed Feb. 6, 1872. He now resides at Taylor's Falls, Minn.

Rev. Charles Packard was installed April 29, 1873, at a salary of eight hundred dollars and the use of the parsonage. The church was thoroughly remodelled in 1874, and dedicated Dec. 29, 1874. The outlay was two thousand six hundred dollars.

William C. Harris, Horace Anderson, and William D. Cochran became elders in the church Dec. 26, 1878.

Mr. Packard was born at Backfield, Me., Oct. 14, 1818, graduated at Bowdoin College in 1842, at Bangor Seminary in 1845. As a pastor he was faithful, as a friend he was true, as a citizen he was always upon the right side, and always had the best interests of the people in view.

He performed his pastoral duties till Jan. 29, 1881, when the disease which had been upon him culminated in entire prostration, and he died Feb. 20, 1881, and is buried in Farmington, Me. He married, in Norway, Me., Dec. 15, 1845, Hannah Holt. She resides in Farmington, Me.

Rev. Joseph Smith Cogswell was born in Boscawen, N. H., Oct. 29, 1836, and was installed over the church Dec. 21, 1881, with pleasing prospects.

The Sunday-school was commenced in 1817. The larger part of the congregation attend the school. It has a large and well-patronized library.

The people of this town have been a thinking, consequently a reading people. Their advantages in this direction have been better than in many country towns. With many, whenever an opportunity for self-culture has presented itself, it has been embraced; whenever books have come within their reach, they have been read; whenever an opportunity has occurred for establishing a library, it has been established.

Previous to 1800 some of our people were shareholders in a library in Salem, and the books were much read. The first book controlled by the town was in 1800. This was the commencement of the first public or social library, which was incorporated June 7, 1806. It had a constitution, by-laws, and a board of officers annually elected. In 1825 the number of volumes exceeded two hundred,—and valuable works.

The Sunday-school library was started in 1832, and now contains some five hundred volumes.

School District Libraries.—John Nesmitt, Esq., of Lowell, Mass., a native of Windham, and afterwards Lieutenant-Governor of Massachusetts, presented each school district with a library of fifty volumes. It was a generous gift, and admirably adapted to the end in view, and has done a good work.

A social library was founded in 1851, numbering over one hundred copies, and was destroyed by fire April 7, 1856. The third and present public library was founded by Col. Thomas Nesmitt, of Lowell, a native and former citizen. By his will he left a legacy of three thousand dollars for this purpose. Two thousand dollars was expended for books and one thousand dollars was put at interest, and the interest, sixty dollars per year, is to be perpetually paid by the town for the replenishment of the library with new works. It was established in 1871, and the board of trustees at the time were Rev. Joseph Lauman, James Cochran, Hiram S. Reynolds, William D. Cochran, Leonard A. Morrison. It was dedicated June 21, 1871, an eloquent address being delivered by Hon. John C. Park, of Boston, Mass. Within two years a fine library of eighteen hundred volumes was in successful operation, and a well-arranged printed catalogue had been put into the possession of every family in town. The library is second to no public library of its size in the State. The selection of books was made with great care, and many of the choicest and most valuable works extant are found upon its shelves. The numerical standing of the library in round numbers is two thousand four hundred.

Our Schools.—The early residents possessed considerable education, having acquired it in Scotland or in the Scotch settlements in the north of Ireland before their removal here. In accordance with the laws of the province and their own elevated views, provision was immediately made after the settlement for the education of the young. Four common schools were supported in Londonderry in 1727, of which Windsor was then a part. Of the earlier schools in town we have no record; the receding years have borne away all specific knowledge of them. The first school of which we have a positive account was in 1766, and James Aiken was the teacher. He taught a singing-school evenings, and a day-school for the children. Nicholas Sauce, a discharged British soldier, in 1760, of the French and Indian war, afterwards taught for a long time. He was a cruel teacher, as was the custom of those days, yet his scholars owed him a great debt of gratitude for the instruction received from him.

Master McKeen was the next teacher in order, and taught about the year 1776. He was a man of fine acquirements and ripe scholarship, but his mind was not upon his calling, and if he chanced to see a squirrel by the roadside he would catch that squirrel if it took "all summer."

The school-houses were but rude affairs at the best, and often unfit for school purposes, oftentimes the school in summer would be kept in shops or barns. The school-houses were wholly discarded in winter and the schools taught in private houses. Family schools were much in vogue, the elder child teaching the younger ones. In one family there were eighteen children who were thus taught.

It was the custom in former days for the scholars to teach school on New Year's day, and lock out the teacher. On one bright New Year's morning the scholars came early, became masters of the castle, and held the fort. The succeeding day was one to be remembered to their dying day by some of the scholars. It was a day of trouble, of mental darkness, of sorrow, and lamentation.

"The quality of mercy" which "droppeth as the gentle rain from heaven" found no lodgment in the teacher's breast. A will justice reigned triumphant, and those riotous, fun-loving boys received a most unmerciful flogging. Over eighty years have gone since then, teacher and pupils have passed away, but the event is still alluded to.

Williams' Academy.—This academy was the most potent influence ever exerted in town for the higher education of our youth. It was taught by Rev. Simon Williams, commencing about 1768, and terminating a short time previous to his death, in 1793. His scholarship was of the highest order, and he was a celebrated teacher while in town and previous to his coming here. Among those whom he fitted for college were Joseph McKeen, first president of Bowdoin College; Rev. Samuel Taggart, the distinguished clergyman and Congressman, of Coleraine, Mass.; Silas Bolton, M.C., of Salem; and Dr. John Park, editor and physician; Rev. John Goffe; John Dinsmoor; Silas Dinsmoor, the noted Indian agent; and the elder Governor Samuel Dinsmoor.

In the fourth class (1773), graduated at Dartmouth College, nearly one-half were fitted for college by Mr. Williams. The school often numbered forty to fifty scholars.

Since 1790 appropriations for the support of schools have been made yearly by the town, and latterly special appropriations have been made, above that required by law. There are now seven school districts, each having a good school-house in thorough repair, and usually supplied with maps and apparatuses for the successful prosecution of a school. Since 1850 a new school-house has been erected in each district, at a total expense of six thousand five hundred dollars, and their funds for different districts amounting to three thousand dollars.

The schools are now successfully managed and are wisely fostered by the citizens.

Authors, Books, and Pamphlets.—Rev. Simon Williams wrote previous to 1793 an introduction to the American edition, and published Thomas Blackwell's book on "Genuine Revealed Religion."

He also published a small book by the presbytery.

Rev. Samuel Harris printed in 1816 a sermon on the death of Miss Mary Colby, of Chester; in 1820 the "Memoir of Miss Mary Campbell," of Windham; in 1827-28 two editions of "Questions on Christian Experience and Character;" also his farewell sermon about 1826.

Rev. Loren Thayer wrote a sketch of the Windham Church for the "New Hampshire Church."

Deacon Robert Dinsmoor (the "Rustic Bard") printed a volume of his poems, 261 pages, 1828.

Leonard A. Morrison compiled in 1881, and placed in the Nesmith Library, the Thanksgiving Sermon of Rev. Calvin Cutter, 1835; Sermon by Rev. Loren Thayer on the assassination of Abraham Lincoln, May, 1865; Centennial Sermon of Rev. Charles Packard, 1876; and a complete set of printed reports of Windham. In 1880 he published 1100 copies, 470 pages, of his "History of the Morrison, or Morrison, Family." In 1882 he re-wrote and condensed this work for "The Highlander," a magazine printed at Inverness, Scotland. He published (1882) his complete "History of Windham," 1719-1882. He wrote (1882) this condensed history of Windham for the "History of Rockingham and Strafford Counties."

Bissell and Bissell's Camp.—Among the most eccentric persons who ever resided here was F. L. Bissell. The most romantic place was his camp, so famous when standing in its glory, and so well remembered since its decay. The parsonage and the place have become historic.

In May, 1823, F. L. Bissell, then nineteen years of age, came to Windham. He was an East Indian, or Malayan, a native of the Isle of Sumatra, and came to this country when very young. He acquired a good English education, and was fortunate in being the heir to a large estate, which was managed by a trustee or guardian named White, of Salem, Mass. He came to this town accompanied by Maj. Dudley, a teacher of military tactics. They selected a spot and built a camp of pine boughs, having a large stone fireplace. The camp was but little higher than the ground around it. It was quickly supplied with all kinds of the choicest liquors, and with all proper food and utensils suitable for pioneer life. Thus equipped he, with Maj. Dudley and other boon companions, was ready for fishing at Mitchell's Pond and for the pursuit of the wild game with which the woods abounded on both sides of the brook which runs from Mitchell's Pond. Then commenced the frolic, the gaiety, and their dissipation. The woods resounded with the sharp report of guns, the yell of swift-running hounds, which made music for that portion of the town. The novelty of the place, the strange occupants, and the odor of rum induced many to visit Bissell's Camp.

Evidently it was not Bissell's intention to be more than a temporary occupant when he first settled at the camp, but the notoriety he acquired, the throng of visitors by whom he was generally surrounded, the attractiveness of the place, and the abundance of game caused a change to come "over the spirit of his dream." So he made a change from what was almost a savage mode of life to one a few steps nearer civilization. The brush camp was torn away and a log house erected in its place. The latter contained two rooms, with a hall across the west end. The house was finished in the most elaborate and elegant manner, the walls painted with East India scenes, and the tall palm-tree was emblazoned in native colors. The outside of his abode was left in the roughest possible state. A stable was built and equipped with fine horses and carriages. Money was of no account with Bissell, and it was scattered freely. He took a five-dollar note to light his pipe, according to report. Once while riding out he saw a large flock of geese near the road, and raising his shot-gun he blazed away at them, killing several and wounding others. He then ordered his driver to stop, and, having found the owner, he told him what he had done and asked him his price for the shot. The price (not a small one) was paid, and Bissell went on his way rejoicing.

One day one of his men went for a pail of water; he heard the sharp crack of a gun, and looking around he saw Bissell at the door of his camp just lowering his gun from his shoulder. He was an excellent shot, and had merely put a bullet through the man's hat as he stood several rods away.

Bissell had erected summer-houses, made an artificial fish-pond, put a fine latticed house over his well, and had made of his abode a sort of fairy-land. He was a good penman, and embellished his writing by using, instead of black sand, what was apparently gold dust. So he lived some four years. But his days of glory, wealth, license, and pride were fast drawing to a close. His money was exhausted or withheld by his guardian. He contracted many debts, and his creditors were not slow in taking his possessions by due process of law, and his financial trouble caused his sudden departure from the town.

He went to Vermont, and his subsequent history is unknown. The beauty of the place quickly faded after the departure of its founder, the log cabin was demolished about 1865, the summer-houses are gone, but the latticed, circular well-house still exists, the artificial pond is still there, and there are other ruins—evidences of the places where his buildings stood, but the pomp and circumstance of its early state and beauty are gone forever.

Biographies.—Early settlers and later residents, David Gregg was one of the earliest settlers. He was born in Londonderry, Ireland, being the son of John Gregg, born 1653, in that place, and the grandson of Capt. David Gregg, who was in Argyleshire, Scotland, and was a captain in army of Cromwell in 1655, and assisted in the conquest of the rebellious subjects in Ireland, was a tanner, and received a deed of land in Ireland from Cromwell.

David Gregg, of Windham, came to Watertown, Mass., in 1712, staying nine years, then came to Windham in 1721, settling in the west part of the town. There were then few if any white inhabitants within ten miles of him, and the woods abounded with game of all sorts. He hewed his farm from the wilderness, and after the activities of life were over he found a quiet spot in which to sleep in the old cemetery on the plain. He was the ancestor of the Greggs of Windham.

John Cochran came to Londonderry in the autumn of 1729, and permanently located in East Windham in 1730, and is the ancestor of the family of that name. He was of unadulterated Scotch blood, the son of John and Elizabeth (Arwin) Cochran, of Londonderry, Ireland, born there, 1704, and his father shared in the defense of that memorable city against the Catholics in 1688-89. When young Cochran came to Windham (then Londonderry) the country was an almost unbroken wilderness, and he displayed great endurance and fortitude amid the hardships and privations of his life. The farm he occupied has since been in possession of his family, and is now occupied by his great-grandson, William D. Cochran. He married his cousin Jenny, daughter of Justice

James McKeen, of Londonderry, and died at eighty-four. Their life was long and pleasant together, and side by side they rest in the cemetery on the hill.

Alexander Simpson, ancestor of one branch of the Windham family, came to Windham about 1747, and located in the southeast part of the town. He was a weaver, and could do exceedingly fine and nice work, could weave anything "where the warp was strong enough to bear the weight of his beaver hat." He married Janet Templeton, and died Dec. 12, 1788, at sixty-nine years.

James Belton was not one of the earliest settlers, but came about 1753. He was born in Scotland in 1727 or 1728, and died March 18, 1803. He settled in the north part of the town. He became a very active, popular, and influential citizen, was well educated, and became an auctioneer, surveyor, and justice of the peace. He filled all the prominent positions in town, and was in 1777 an agent from the State of New Hampshire to the seat of the national government at Baltimore, and brought to the New England States a large amount of money with which to prosecute the Revolutionary war. He was the father of Hon. Silas Belton, at one time member of Congress from New Hampshire.

Lieut. Samuel Morison was born in Ireland, at or near Londonderry, was the son of James Morison and Mary Wallace, of that place, emigrants to Londonderry, N. H., in 1719. His grandfather was John Morison, a native of Aberdeenshire, Scotland, who died in Londonderry, N. H., 1736, at the reputed age of one hundred and eight years. Lieut. Samuel Morison came to Londonderry when a lad of fifteen years, and settled in what is now Windham about 1730. He was well educated in Ireland, and became prominent in the little settlement where his lot was cast, often held public positions, was a lieutenant in a Massachusetts regiment at Fort Cumberland, Nova Scotia, in 1760, during the French and Indian war. He married Martha Allison, the first female child born in Londonderry, and daughter of Samuel Allison, one of the first six settlers. She was born March 31, 1720, and died Dec. 3, 1761. He died Feb. 11, 1776. He is the ancestor of the Morrisons of the town.

Henry Campbell came to Windham in 1733. He was born in Londonderry, Ireland, 1697, and married Martha Black in 1717. He was the son of Daniel Campbell, a descendant of Sir John Campbell, of Scotland, Duke of Argyle. Henry Campbell located in the west part of the town, and his descendants still reside upon the ancestral acres.

John Dinsmoor, of Scotch blood, came from Londonderry, Ireland. He came to Londonderry, N. H., in 1723, and is ancestor of the Dinsmoors here. His house was in Londonderry, the front door stone being on the line between the towns. His grandson, William Dinsmoor, was a man of parts, and possessed quite a poetical gift. He was the father of Samuel Dinsmoor, of Keene, Governor of New Hampshire, 1831-33.

This sketch of Windham will be closed with a notice of Robert Dinsmoor, the "rustic bard." He was born in Windham, Oct. 7, 1757. He wrote much, and generally, when for the press, in verse. He wrote in the Scotch dialect, which was spoken by many in the Scotch settlement, and understood by all, and the Scotch brogue has not been so long extinct among the descendants of the Scotch settlers but that some of the younger members of the community have listened to it with pleasure. After he had been writing poetry several years, a friend sent him a copy of Burns' poems, which he hailed with great delight, and immediately addressed the following verses to his favorite poet:

"Fare fa' ye Robbie, cauty callan,
 * * * * *
 May never wae come near your dwellin'."

"I've read your warks wi' muckle glee;
 And lucky nature, there I see,
 Has gien ye genius like a lee,
 To suck the flowers;
 Where'er ye gang—weel met ye be—
 Eh! the be your hours."

"Let college gumpys glib Horace praise,
 Gie and blin' Homer still the lays,
 An' about Virgil mak' a phrase,
 A guid Scotch taste
 Prefers your ain untutor'd lays
 To a' their best."

"Let them like ganks and Latin speak,
 An' blather out their brack'jaw greek;
 Though you were born when hills are deuk
 And rauld winds blow,
 An' though frae buiks nae help ye see,
 Ye ding them a'!"

In writing a letter to his friend, Hon. Silas Belton, a native of Windham, then a member of Congress, and resident of Salem, he said,—

"Though Death our ancestors has cleckit,
 An' under cloas them closely stockit,
 We'll mark the place their chimneys reekit,
 Their native tongue we yet wad speak it
 We' native glib."

In a letter to his daughter he says,—

"That mine is not a longer letter,
 The cause is not for want of matter,—
 Of that there's plenty, worse or better;
 But, like a mill
 Whose stream beats back with surplis water,
 The wheel stands still."

While plowing, his mould-board turned over a sparrow's nest, which called forth from his pen a poem, in which is the following:

"Poor innocent, hapless sparrow!
 Why should my mould-board giv' thee sorrow?
 This day thou'ld chirp, an' mourn the morrow
 We' anxious breast;
 The plough has turn'd the mould'ring furrow Deep o'er thy nest."

"Just in the middle o' the hill
 Thy nest was placed with curious skill,—
 There I esp'd' thy little bill
 Beneath the shade,—
 In that sweet bower, secure frae ill,
 Thine eggs thou laid."

"Five ears of maize had there been droppit,
An' through the stalks three head them poppit;
The drawing most couldna' be stappit,
I quickly foun',
Sye frae thy cozie nest thou hoppit,
An' fluttering ran."

He was a farmer, and cultivated the paternal acres. The Quaker poet, John G. Whittier, says, "The last time I saw him he was chaffering in the market-place of my native village.<sup>1</sup> A genial, jovial, large-hearted old man, simple as a child, and betraying neither in look nor in manner that he was accustomed to "Feed on thoughts which voluntary move Harmonious numbers."

Peace to him! . . . In the ancient burial-ground of Windham, by the side of his "beloved Molly," and in view of the old meeting-house, there is a mound of earth, where every spring green grasses tremble in the wind, and the warm sunshine calls out the flowers. There, gathered like one of his own ripe sheaves, the farmer-poet sleeps with his fathers.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH.

LEONARD ALLISON MORRISON.

Robert C. Mack, Esq., of Londonderry, contributes the following biography:

Leonard Allison Morrison, son of Jeremiah and Eleanor Reed (Kimball) Morrison, was born in Windham, N. H., Feb. 21, 1843. His father was a leading citizen of Windham, and died Nov. 24, 1862, aged sixty-seven years. He is the sixth generation in descent from John Morison, a sturdy Scotchman, a native of Aberdeenshire, Scotland, who emigrated to the north of Ireland previous to 1688. At Londonderry, Ireland, he participated in the heroic defense of that city, and with his wife and children and friends shared in the sacrifices, sufferings, and horrors of the siege, and the glory of the deliverance of that city with the triumph of the Protestant cause. He emigrated to Londonderry, N. H., about 1723, and died Feb. 16, 1736. His son, Charter James Morison, had preceded him to America in 1719, and died in 1757. The latter was the father of Lieut. Samuel Morison, who settled in Windham, who was its first moderator, member of its first board of selectmen, and an honored and respected citizen, who died Feb. 11, 1776, aged seventy-two years. He was the father of Deacon Samuel Morison, the grandfather of the one whose history is here given.

The mother of Mr. Morrison, an excellent woman, was the seventh generation in descent from Richard Kimball, who emigrated to America from Ipswich, England, in 1634. His maternal grandmother was Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Read, of Uxbridge, Mass. The latter was the fifth generation in descent from John Read, who settled in Rehoboth, Mass., in 1630.

Such was the blood from which sprang the subject of this sketch. His ancestors, paternal and maternal, were very intelligent. They were hardy, respected, and influential in their day and generation.

Mr. Morrison was studious always, and at the common school and academies, which he attended, he ranked well as a scholar. He was educated in the common schools of Windham, supplemented by a few months attendance at the seminary at Tilton, N. H., and Gowanda, Cattaraugus Co., N. Y.

He occupies and cultivates the ancestral and pleasant farm where he was born. His tastes would have led him to a collegiate course, and his capacities fitted him for a successful professional life. But circumstances forced his life into a quieter channel. After leaving school his spare hours were given to reading, and he often held communion with the best writers of the language through the medium of their writings. He found continual companionship and delight in reading the best works in poetry, history, or romance. In this manner, though unknown to himself or to others, he was educating and fitting himself for the special and important work which he has done and is doing. We refer to his literary labors of the last five years.

In his town he is deeply interested, and it possesses nowhere a more loyal or loving son, or one more heartily devoted to its best interests. He mingles freely in municipal affairs; having served as selectman, and for nine successive years he presided acceptably in the annual town-meetings.

Possessing, as he does, a commanding voice, tact, quick perceptions, and decision of character, he excels as a presiding officer. He is therefore often called to preside in meetings in his own town and elsewhere. As a public speaker he never fails to interest his audience. He has the rare talent of saying the right thing at the right time, and stopping when he has done. If his early training had been in this direction, and the circumstances of his life favorable, he would have won distinction as a public speaker.

In 1871-'72 he did an important work in aiding in the establishment of the Nesmith Free Public Library of two thousand volumes. In politics he is a Republican, and is a member of the Republican State Central Committee. But the most important labor of his life, that which will be looked upon with most satisfaction, is his literary work. Since 1861 he has been an occasional contributor to the newspapers.

In 1878, '79, '80, he prepared a history of the Morison or Morrison family, an octavo volume of four hundred and seventy pages. An edition of eleven hundred copies were printed, published by A. Williams & Co., Boston, Mass. The labor of the work was immense, and it was peculiarly rich in ancient historical lore. It received many warm encomiums from the family, and was most cordially welcomed by the press, receiving many favorable reviews. Copies found their way into many of the State libraries of the country, the Historical and Genealogical Society libraries, the college libraries, and libraries of many of the larger cities and towns. Some copies found their way to Scotland and England. This brought him a request from the editor of a magazine in Inverness, Scotland, to rewrite and condense the history, making it appropriate for the Scotch readers. This work he has nearly completed. In the spring of 1880 he commenced the preparation of the History of Windham, N. H., 1719-1883. Upon this he has since labored continuously and persistently till the present. The history is now passing through the press, and estimated to contain seven hundred or eight hundred pages. He wrote the condensed history of Windham, N. H., found in the History of Rockingham and Strafford Counties. He was enumerator of the census in 1880, and was elected a member of the New Hampshire Historical Society in June, 1882.

CHAPTER LXXXV.

LONDONDERRY, 1719-1827.<sup>1</sup>

THE boundaries of Londonderry, as defined by the charter of June 21, 1722, included all the territory of the present towns of Londonderry, Derry, and Windham, and adjacent parts of Manchester, Hudson, and Salem. The history of these towns is one till division of the large tract became a necessity, thenceforward each town has its own history. As Windham was early set off, nothing pertaining to that town will be embraced in this sketch. Londonderry is the most western town in Rockingham County, is in latitude 42° 54' north, and longitude 5° 45' east from Washington. It is about twenty-five miles from Concord, N. H., twenty-five from Exeter, and forty from Boston, Mass. There are a few ponds in town. Beaver Pond, called by the Indians "Tsiemeto," is a beautiful sheet lying between Derry East village and the English Range. Northwest of this lie Upper and Lower Shield's Ponds in Derry, and Seoby's in Londonderry. Ezekiel's Pond is near the Windham line, and a part only of Island Pond lies in Derry. Beaver Brook, in the Indian tongue "Kishiomatie," is the only considerable stream. The surface of the ground, though broken, is not hilly. The highest elevation is probably Richey Hill, a little over one mile east of East Derry village. The original growth of oak, hickory, and chestnut is everywhere succeeded by pine. The town has always been mainly agricultural, although much of its early thrift was directly derived from the manufacture of linen cloth within its own borders, while much of its later prosperity is indirectly derived from the manufacture of cotton in the cities of Manchester, Lowell, and Lawrence.

At the time of the settlement of Londonderry, N. H., April 11, 1719, O. S., the people of Ireland were mainly divided into three classes: the descendants of the Celtic race, which had occupied the soil from time immemorial, and who were Roman Catholics; the descendants of the English emigration of 1612 and thenceforward, and who were attached to the forms and ceremonies of the Church of England; and the descendants of the Scotch emigration of the early part of the seventeenth century, and who held with undying tenacity to the principles of the Presbyterian Church. From the former of these, the Irish and the English, Londonderry derived its name, and to the latter is it indebted for the hardy men and women who took possession of its virgin soil, and made settlements of its wooded hill-tops, its sunny slopes, and fertile vales.

Name.—The Irish name of Derry had come down with the race through the long centuries prior to 1612, when the great London guilds in taking possession and settling the sequestered lands granted by James I. prefixed to the old name that of their famous city. It was thus that the name of Londonderry had origin, and our settlers shortly after their arrival adopted it from the mother country, although the territory they selected had for some years previous been known as a part of a very indefinite tract called "Nutfield." The latter name disappeared from the record early in 1722.

They were termed Scotch-Irishmen. New ideas and new facts demanded new names. It was necessary that a people originating in the blood of one nationality and born on alien soil should have a distinctive name. From this came the appellation of Scotch-Irish; nor is it inappropriate, barring a little long-forgotten misconception of the meaning of the term. Excepting a few of English descent and an occasional Scotchman to the "manner born," the Londonderry settlers were of Scotch lineage, born on Irish soil; and, although reared among and surrounded by the native Celt, whose origin antedated veritable history, little if anything distinctively Irish was engrained upon the Scotch character by the ancestral one hundred years' sojourn in Ireland. The antagonisms arising from the diversity of the races and widely differing religions, in connection with the unforgotten confiscations of James I., were more than sufficient to prevent any intermingling of bloods. The peculiar circumstances that surrounded the Scotch-Irish kept them as homogeneous a race as was that of their contemporaries in Scotland, who had never taken departure from their native heaths of Argyleshire. In this respect their isolation from the Catholic Irish was as complete as if an ocean rolled between them.

Cause of Emigration.—The motives that led the Scotch-Irish emigrant of 1719 to sunder all ties with his native land and make for himself a new home in the wilderness were widely different from those which impel the emigrant of to-day. The former, in the assured hope of securing freedom of conscience and religious liberty, was willing to take his chance in worldly matters. The latter reverses this order, and for the sake of worldly advantage he is willing to imperil his religious interests. Rev. James McGregor, one of the Londonderry emigrants, and their pastor the last ten years of his life, gives the following reasons for their removal to America: "1st. To avoid oppressive and cruel bondage. 2d. To shun persecution and designed ruin. 3d. To withdraw from the communion of idolaters. 4th. To have an opportunity of worshipping God according to the dictates of conscience and the rules of his inspired Word."

Emigration.—The settlers of Londonderry left their native Ireland late in the spring or early in the summer of 1718, and arrived at Boston, Mass., August 4th of that year. As they were embarking on board the ship at Belfast that was to convey them across the sea, an old lady of the kith and kin of the emigrants, too far advanced in life to encounter the perils of the deep, gave them her parting blessing: "Go, and God be wi' ye a' but Willie Humphrey, and he'll be smart enough to take care of himself."

The winter following their arrival in Boston was spent in the harbor of Falmouth, now Portland, Me., under great privations for want of shelter and food, so much so that the great and General Court of Massachusetts aided them to the amount of one hundred bushels of meal. Some late changes in the waters of Casco Bay, near the anchorage of their vessel, have revealed among other things a stone fireplace built by them and used in cooking their food during their sojourn there.

To Nutfield.—Leaving Falmouth April 1, 1719, they retraced their steps toward Boston as far as Haverhill, Mass., where they arrived the next day. Here they remained a few days awaiting the selection of land for a township by their agent, James McKean, grandfather of Joseph McKean, first president of Bowdoin College. This done and a portion of the Nutfield or Chestnut territory determined upon, a part of the resolute company on the morning of April 11, 1719, saddled their horses and struck out into the pathless wilderness in search of their future homes, taking their route over "Providence Hill," in what is now Salem, N. H. Another small company under the guidance of Rev. James McGregor, who had spent the previous winter at Drauc, Mass., engaged in teaching, left that place, and, taking their line of travel up Beaver Brook, joined, by previous arrangement, the Haverhill party near the southern shore of Beaver Pond.

Settlement.—Tying their horses at the foot of the hill, ever since known by the name of Horse Hill, they made survey of the surroundings on foot. They passed around the western end of the pond and along its northern shore, arriving at its most eastern extremity a little after noon. Here, under the spreading branches of a stately oak, one of the ancient lords of the soil, they rested their weary limbs, gratified their religious feelings, and fortified their faith by listening to a discourse from their future pastor, Rev. Mr. McGregor. Returning to their horses, they took a southerly direction to the northern side of a brook, to which they gave the name of West Running Brook. Here they kindled their first fire beside a rock on land now owned by James M. Batchelder, and encamped for the night. The following day, after a sermon by Mr. McGregor, they made their way back to Haverhill to bring on their families, leaving two young men, John Gregg, son of Capt. James Gregg, and Andrew Walker, to pre-empt the soil and guard their hastily constructed camp. They left a gun and ammunition for their protection and three days' provision for their sustenance. Some unforeseen circumstances prevented the return of the settlers at the allotted time, and the young men fell into peril for want of food. In a few days, however, sixteen men with their families arrived upon the ground, took occupancy of the soil, and the work began in earnest.

First Families.—The names of these men are as follows: James McKean, John Barnett, Archibald Clendenin, John Mitchell, James Starrett, James Anderson, Randal Alexander, Robert Weir, James Gregg, James Clark, James Nesmith, Allen Anderson, John Morrison, Samuel Allison, Thomas Steele, and John Stuart. Rev. Edward L. Parker, a careful and judicious writer, in his excellent "History of Londonderry," says,—

"These pioneers of the settlement were most of them men in middle life, robust, persevering, and adventurous, well suited to encounter the toils and endure the hard-hips of such an undertaking. Most of them attained to advanced age. They lived to see their descendants settled around them and the forest converted into a fruitful field. The average age of thirteen of the number was seventy-nine years, six attained to nearly ninety, and two surpassed it. John Morrison, the oldest of this company, lived to the advanced age of ninety-seven years."

First Land Laid out in Londonderry.—This was without doubt granted by the Massachusetts Colony to the Indian sagamore Passaconaway, of Pennacook, now Concord, N. H., upon his petition of March 8, 1662, and was surveyed March 27, 1663. It was a tract three miles square, and as it extended one mile and a half east of the Merrimac River, opposite the northern part of the town, must have included a part of Londonderry.

The second grant was by Massachusetts to the proprietors of "Old Dunstable," Oct. 16, 1673. This must have overlapped the territory afterwards Londonderry, as its most "eastern line ran within sight of Beaver Brook."

"Leverett's Farme."—This "farme" was the third grant in order of time, and was to John Leverett, Governor of the Massachusetts Colony from 1673 to 1679. It was a "Wilderness Farme" of one thousand acres, and was situated between what is now Ezekiel's Pond, in Derry, and the Dock. A bridge and the meadows there still bear his name. There is some evidence that the Governor sent parties to colonize the grant, but the enterprise failed.

Wheelwright Deed.—The deed of Col. John Wheelwright to the proprietors, Oct. 20, 1719, first gave bounds to the territory. It conveyed a tract of land not exceeding ten miles square, bounded on the north by Cheshire, on the east by Haverhill, on the south by Dracont, and on the west by Dunstable. The settlers had, however, taken possession of the soil on the principle of "squatter sovereignty" six months before, under encouragement from Governor Shute, of Massachusetts, in accordance with a numerously signed petition of the "Inhabitants of ye North of Ireland," dated March 26, 1718.

The First Crops raised by the emigrants were potatoes and flax. They had brought their seed and spinning-wheels from Ireland, and were the first to cultivate the potato and manufacture linen in New England. They appear to have cultivated land in common the summer after their arrival, as there is a tract known by the name of the "Common Field," containing about two and one-half acres, situated a few rods west of the dwelling-house of Mr. Jonathan Cate, in Derry. It was undoubtedly a clearing, and may have been an abandoned planting-ground of the Indians, who were gradually retiring to deeper shades of the wilderness in the wilds of Canada.

Allotment of Lands.—Before the settlers received the deed from Wheelwright three lots of land had been laid out: the "Common Field," April 18, 1719, only seven days from their arrival; James McKean's home lot, August, 1719; and Robert Wears' home lot of sixty acres, also August, 1719. For some reason no more land was assigned till the following year, when nearly all the one hundred and five home lots were laid out, most of them in the summer and autumn. Afterward, when the town came to receive its charter from the Legislature, several gentlemen residing in Portsmouth, N. H., then called "Strawberry Bank," were admitted as proprietors, making in all about one hundred and twenty-five grantees of the town.

The proprietors designated their different divisions of land as "Home lots, 2d, 3d, and 4th divisions, amendment land, and meadows." The former were sixty acres each, while the other lands varied very much in size.

The lots assigned to each proprietor by the committee are designated by the name of home lots second, third, and fourth divisions, addition land, amendment land, and meadows. The home lots were sixty acres each, the second divisions forty acres amendment land, "to make up to every proprietor what his Home

Lot wanted in quality to make equal with what was termed 'The Precept.'" The Precept was the home lot of John Stuart, agreed upon as a fair average of lots, and to this all others were compared. If a proprietor deemed his sixty acres of less value than John Stuart's lot, and the lot-layers concurred in this opinion, they laid out to him amendment land in quantity sufficient to equalize his interest.

The second division was made as soon as the settlers began to feel themselves "straitened for want of room." At first no reserve was made for land for roads, and this oversight was remedied by laying out tracts isolated from the home farm in lieu of land taken for highways.

The meadows were of great value, for it was from them that the settlers for a long time obtained the means of keeping their cattle and horses. Every proprietor therefore had a small piece of meadow assigned to him, and it often happened that it was located many miles from his home lot. The quantity of this sort of land allotted to each one varied from one-quarter of an acre to one and a half acres. The rule adopted was that each proprietor should have land enough to yield "three small loads of hay." These meadows must have had astonishing fertility, as many of them yield great burdens after undergoing the discipline of one hundred and sixty-three years' cropping without the smallest return.

Double Range.—From a fragmentary record in the first volume of the proprietors' books it appears that the first lots were laid out in the Double Range, situated within the present bounds of Derry, on both sides of West-Running Brook. There are about thirty lots in this range, and are one mile long north and south, and thirty rods wide. The committee began at the line, as claimed by Haverhill, on the south side of the brook, at the eastern end of the range, assigning the first lot probably to William Humphrey, and passing westerly down the brook, the third lot fell to Jonathan Tyler, the south part of which became the property of Archibald Stark shortly after, and on which Gen. John Stark was born, Aug. 28, 1728.

John Stuart's lot, "The Precept," was the most eastern one north of the brook of this range, and was situated a few rods east of the present residence of Col. George W. Lane, once known as the Prentice, or Gen. Derby place. The settlers built their cabins very near together, the north side of the range building at the south end of their lots, and the south side at the north end, the brook running between, securing in this way an advantage in case of an attack from the Indians.

Back Range.—The range known on the records as the Back Range consisted of some half a dozen lots, and in this and the northern part of the Double Range is situated the present village of East Derry, and is the place selected by the emigrants as the site of their first meeting-house.

English Range.—The English Range, of about twenty lots, lies north of Beaver Pond, the long lines running northeast from the pond, six of which abut upon its waters. This range took its name from the fact that several of the proprietors of English descent had their lands assigned in that locality. Among them were John Goffe, first town clerk, and his son, John Goffe, Jr., afterwards quite prominent in the civil, ecclesiastical, and military history of the State. The most northwestern lot of this range was laid out to James Rogers, father of Maj. Robert Rogers, the ranger, who was born here.

Aiken's Range.—The Aiken's Range, of seven lots, derived its name from the three or four families of that name that settled there. At the west end of this range John Bell, the emigrant ancestor of this honored family, had his home lot and second division laid out together, making one hundred acres in all. The South Range of a few lots adjoined the Double Range on the south near the Windham line. All these ranges are within the present town of Derry; and in the east part of this town several lots were laid out to Portsmouth proprietors, and Governor Wentworth's three-hundred-acre farm in the locality, known as "Derry Dock." James C. Taylor, Esq., is now the owner of part of this farm.

Governor Shute's charter farm of five hundred acres was laid in Windham, and other land in that town to a considerable extent was assigned to the Londonderry proprietors, but was mainly amendment or other lands than home lots. In the present town of Londonderry the Ayers' Range and the High Range were regularly laid out, the lots of the former being uniform in size and shape with those of Derry. Excepting the seven Ayers' Range lots, the greater part of the present town of Londonderry was laid out as second division amendment and highway lands in very large tracts, amounting in some instances to over four hundred acres.

As the original charter bounds of Londonderry covered considerable portions of the city of Manchester, extending a mile across Hanover Street, a range of several lots, termed Blaisdel's Range, was laid out by the Londonderry committee. This range extended from Nutt's Pond to a point about one mile northeast of the City Hall. On this land, or near it, is the site of a fort built for the protection of the settlers there. It was at the outlet of Nutt's Pond, then Swager's Pond, and called Stark's Fort in compliment to Archibald Stark, who was efficient in building and garrisoning it.

Large tracts of land were laid out for the support of the ministry. They were called "Ministerials." The land assigned to the West Parish, or that part of the town called Canada, was laid out Nov. 6, 1729, on one of the highest hills in what is now Londonderry, and contained one hundred and twenty acres.

The next year a ministerial was allotted to the old parish church, now East Derry, of fifty-four acres.

In 1744 new bounds were given to it, and six acres added. Most of this land is now owned by Hon. William H. Shepard. The ministerial land for the parish of Windham was situated near "Cobbit's Pond," and was laid out in 1744, and contained fifty-five acres.

Incorporation.—The long-pending dispute between New Hampshire and Massachusetts in reference to the lines between these States occasioned the Londonderry settlers much inconvenience. The latter State refused to incorporate the town, and it was not until June 21, 1722, more than three years after the settlement, that the New Hampshire Court granted a charter, although "humbly petitioned" to that effect as early as Sept. 23, 1719.

Probably the colonists were hindered in their attempts to secure town privileges by a misconception of their character on the part of the State governments. They were supposed to be Irish Roman Catholics.

Notwithstanding this the colony thrived. Before the first of the autumnal months had closed fifty-four families from Ireland and elsewhere, in addition to the original sixteen, "did sit down in Nutfield," and the work of settlement went rapidly on. Cabins were built, the forests were leveled, roads were marked out, and obstructions cleared away. There were no idlers in the new colony; labor, skill, and enterprise soon brought their usual reward.

Encroachers.—A large tract of land, some three or four miles wide, along the whole eastern border of the town and within its chartered limits, was claimed by Haverhill people under the old Massachusetts grant, and it was not till the settlement of the State lines in 1749-51 that the border warfare ceased. The Londonderry residents within that claim were arrested and confined in Massachusetts jails, and on the other hand many arrests were made of the "Haverhill squatters," and much litigation followed. Many charges like the following are to be found on the old Counter's books: "To Johnne Barnet six days watching prisoners 1-4-0." Nor was the comfort of these prisoners neglected. Gabriel Barr was paid for thirteen days guarding prisoners at Mudget's house and furnishing them "Board, Rhum, and Vitals." The town also suffered much annoyance from people living on its western borders, along the Litchfield and Nottingham-West lines, claiming lands under the old Dunstable grant.

Location of Proprietors.—The first lot in the English Range was laid out to David Cargill, Sr. It is now owned by Mr. Tucker. The house just taken down by him was the residence of the late Robert McMurphy. It was the third framed house built in the settlement. The second lot was assigned to Samuel Houston. Mr. Samuel Clark is now the owner. Houston was the father of Rev. John, the Bedford loyalist. No one lives on the next original lot. It was called Governor Wentworth's "home lot." His early and steadfast friendship for the settlers was appreciated, and partly repaid in recorded thanks, gifts of salmon, linen cloth, and other very large lots of land. The fourth lot was laid out to Col. John Wheelwright, the grantor of the famous deed. There has been much learned discussion relative to the validity of the Indian deed of his ancestor, dated May 17, 1629. The weight of legal evidence of late years appears to sustain the will. The next three lots successively were Edward Proctor's, Benjamin Kidder's, and John Gray's. Samuel Marshall lives on the lot of Joseph Kidder. Mr. Morill resides on John Goff's lot; Mr. Seavey on the lot of S. Graves; Mr. Nathaniel Palmer on John Combe's. Matthew Clark's and James Lindsay's lots are now the Cheever place. Mr. Sefton lives on James Lesley's lot, John Baker on John Anderson's, George Choate on James Blair's, and George W. Dickey owns the lots of John Blair, James Moor, John Shields, and James Rogers. It was on this last lot where the famous Robert Rogers, the Indian fighter, was born. The lots of Simonds, Keyes, Robie, and Senter lie northwest of Beaver Pond. Rev. E. F. Parsons resides on William Cochran's lot, and the other Cochran lots lie on the north of that. In the Aiken's Range, James Aiken's lot is now the Bradford place. William Aiken's is now the Carr place. John Folsom owns the Edward Aiken lot. John Wallace lived where the late David H. Pinkerton resided. He was a man of great prominence in the early history of the town. His lands are still held by his descendants. The lots of B. Wilson and Andrew Todd are owned by Joseph R. Clark. Col. Todd was a man of much influence in the town. His brother-in-law, John Bell, lived on the next lot west, and shared with others the honor and responsibility of organizing the new settlement. The land of the seven lots of the Ayers' Range lies mostly in Londonderry, while the settlers' houses were nearly all situated in what is now Derry. At the north side was David Morrison's lot, now Mrs. James MacMurphy's, then Samuel Morrison's, now A. McMurphy's. The last lot came near to the mill, now Horne's, and was laid out to "John McClurg, Elizabeth Wilson, and Mary, her daughter." It is a singular fact that in this family occurred the first and last death among the proprietors.

Mr. Wilson died in Boston, January, 1721, less than two years after the first settlement, and four months after his land was allotted to him. His widow, "Elizabeth (Fulton) Wilson, and Mary, her daughter," were allowed all further rights; and Mary, born, according to the record, on board a pirate ship on the passage over, July 28, 1720, lived till Feb. 13, 1814,—an interval between the death of the first and last proprietor of ninety-three years. "Ocean-born Mary" was the grandmother of Hon. George W. Patterson, of New York, and the late Capt. Thomas Patterson, of Londonderry.

William Humphrey, Jonathan Tyler, Alexander

Nichols, John Barr, all had lots near Humphrey's Hill, in Derry. James McKeon's lot was a little west of these, where Mrs. W. Hixon lives. He had large influence in the colony. Mr. W. O. Noyes resides on James Morrison's lot. He was the ancestor of Leonard A. Morrison, the historian of the Morrison family and of Windham.

Following the order of the lot-layers going west, there were in the south part of the Double Range ten lots assigned to men of whom not much is known. On the north side of this range Jonathan Cate lives, on Capt. James Gregg's lot. He was probably the most wealthy of all the emigrants. Henry Humphrey lives on a part of the Gregg lands. Miss Jennie Clark resides on the lot of her ancestor, James Clark. Mrs. Thomas Pillsbury lives on the Allen Anderson place. The lots of John Morrison, Samuel Allison, Thomas Steel, and John Stuart were united to make the Prentice estate, now Col. George W. Lane's.

Around no place in old Londonderry cluster more historic memories. The original owners were all men of note. John Morrison was the father of Jonathan, the first-born male child in Londonderry, and who in the next generation enjoyed with Capt. Samuel Allison the honor of being the best public speaker in town. John Morrison's daughter, Elizabeth, married William Smith, of Peterboro', N. H., and became mother of Hon. Jeremiah Smith, one of the most gifted of the sons of New Hampshire.

Hon. Samuel Livermore lived in a stone house on the place, just opposite the mansion of Col. Lane. Hon. John Prentice, who came after him, built the main part of the present house. Besides these several other eminent men made their homes here. Two judges of the highest court in New Hampshire were born on the place,—Arthur Livermore and Charles Doe.

John Richey settled on the Nowell place, and the widow of Calvin Morrison lives on one of the lots originally Rev. James McGregor's. It is well known that here was built the first framed house in town. The Montgomery lot is now Mr. Beede's, and Mr. Rand lives on the Alexander McNeil place. George McMurphy resides on the lot of John McMurphy, Esq., a man of much note in his day. This is one of the only two places in the old township now owned by descendants of the original proprietors and in the same name, the other being James Clark's. Robert Boyce's lot was next east from McMurphy's. His house was burned in 1733, while he was absent in Ireland seeking for a minister. Hon. W. H. Shepard owns and occupies the land of John McNeil, who removed early to Derryfield, and William Campbell resided between there and Beaver Pond. In the South Range were the Wilson lots and the lot of John More, who was born in a malt-kiln the night after the massacre of Glencoe, 1692.

Dismemberment of the Town.—The original township of Londonderry has been divided into several parts. Windham, including a part of Salem, was detached Feb. 12, 1742, and upon the incorporation of Derryfield, now Manchester, Sept. 3, 1751, a large tract along its northern border was taken off and added to that town. March 6, 1778, another part of Londonderry was cut off and united to Nottingham West, now Hudson, by act of the New Hampshire Legislature. July 2, 1827, the remaining part of the old town was divided by the incorporation of Derry.

Earthquake.—"On Tuesday, Nov. ye 18, 1755, at foure o'clock in the morning & ten minutes (there was an Extraordinary Shock of an Earthquake, & continuous afterwards with smaller shocks." It is said that bricks were thrown from the top of the chimney of the Gregg house, now Mr. Cate's.

Town and Parish Records.—Much interest appertains to these various records. All the early records of the East Parish Society, now East Derry, and the early church records of the West Parish, now Londonderry. The former were found a few years ago, and again lost; the latter were loaned during the pastorate of Rev. J. R. Adams to Rufus Choute, the eminent lawyer, and are said to have been burned with the Concord, Mass., court-house a few years ago. The books of the Congregational Church formed in East Parish after the settlement of Rev. Jonathan Bow are now at the rooms of the New Hampshire Historical Society at Concord, N. H. The following are some of the many curiosities of these records: Oct. 3, 1727. "Thomas Smith being cited doth appear, & John Morrison & John Mitchel being called doth witness that they saw him get several beaver skins of the Indians for Rum without their value." 1730. "Voted that the town hath agreed to let Hugh Wilson be prosecuted for an idler." 1730, 8th article in town warrant. "To see what the town will do with John More." Record. "Deferred by reason John More is dead."

Fisheries.—The charter of Londonderry inclosed a strip of land extending from the northwest corner of the main body of the town, one mile wide and three miles long. From that point the course was "N.N.E. three miles, then E.S.E. one mile, then S.S.W. to the S.W. angle of Chester." It extends across Hanover Street in the city of Manchester one mile northerly to the place known as the Hall Place. The bill as originally drawn for a charter gave these long lines a north-northwest direction, thus including Amoskeag Falls, but for some unexplained reason the bill was engrossed giving these lines a north-northeast course. The object of this singular addition to the territory of the town was to secure the Amoskeag fisheries at the falls, then of very great value to the people of Londonderry as a means of sustenance, hard pressed as they often were for the necessaries of life before their small clearings afforded a comfortable living. In this way Londonderry lost possession of these valuable fishing-grounds. They nevertheless asserted their rights, and were measurably successful in maintaining them.

It is an indication that the fishery was of much consequence to the people that one of the earliest roads was laid out to "Amoskeag Falls." There were a large number of rocks among the surging waters of the falls that offered favorable opportunities for catching fish. These places were highly prized, and the strifes of the bold, courageous, and athletic men contending for them, added to the foaming waters rushing around the rocks, often occasioned accidents, many of which were fatal. "Todd Gut" derived its name from the fact that John Todd, son of Col. Andrew Todd, was drowned there while fishing in company with his cousin, John Bell, of Londonderry. Before the dams were built at Lawrence, Mass., vast quantities of shad, alewives, and eels were annually caught, and often a fine salmon. This royal fish must have been abundant, as many charges are found on the town books like the following: "To John Goffe, Jr., for 98 lbs. salmon at £10 4s. 0d.;" "To Hugh Morrison, for carrying salmon to Portsmouth, £1 10s. 0d.;" If a favor was to be asked of the Governor, some prominent man was dispatched to Portsmouth on horseback with a salmon in his saddlebags for his Excellency. Large quantities of fish were taken at Thoraton's Ferry. Within the memory of living persons, many families regarded their barrel of shad of equal importance with their barrel of beef or pork. With the settler fish was a healthy and grateful change from the inevitable samp and barley broth, which was their staple diet.

Indian History.—From some cause, not fully understood, the town suffered but little in the various Indian wars that distressed the people of other towns of New Hampshire. It is not known that a single person from Londonderry lost his life at the hand of the savage tribes that carried desolation and death to many homes in the State. Parker ascribes this exemption "to the influence of the Rev. Mr. McGregor with the Marquis de Vaudreuil, the French Governor of Canada. It is said they were classmates at college, that a correspondence was maintained between them, and that at the request and representation of his former friend the Governor caused means to be used for the protection of the settlement."

Probably the Wheelwright deed had much to do in saving the settlers from harm, as the following incident from the legends of the town would indicate. Shortly after the arrival of the settlers an Indian who evidently had enough of the English language at command to be able to talk, read, and write came along from out his forest haunts and demanded by what right the Scotch-Irish had planted themselves on that spot. The reply was that all the territory then in possession of the new-comers had been bought for a consideration, and that they held a good, valid deed from the Indians, which was on record at Portsmouth. The Indian suddenly disappeared and was never seen again. The next Sunday, however, traces of a camp were found a little south of the church in the present cemetery, and it was conjectured that an ambush and a massacre had been avoided in consequence of the Indian going to Portsmouth and seeing the record above alluded to, and returning to his companions with the intelligence.

A further illustration of the friendliness of the Indian tribes is related as occurring in the family of Archibald McMurphy, Esq., who lived in the north part of the West Parish, on the farm known as the David R. Leach place. McMurphy and wife, one Sunday when two miles on their way to church, met eight Indians going to Amoskeag, and in the direction of their house, where were several small children. The mother became alarmed, and proposed to turn immediately back to protect their helpless family. The father replied that the Indians were too strong for them, and asked her what she could do. Said she, "I can die with the weans if I can't do better." On their way back they found the remains of a deer, and on their arrival home the savages were broiling and roasting the venison and giving the young McMurphys a delicious repast.

Notwithstanding all this, Londonderry furnished at different times men and means to assist in repelling the incursions of the "Indian enemy." There were three men from the town in the famous expedition of Capt. John Lovewell to the Pigwacket country in 1725.—John Goffe, Jr., subsequently Col. Goffe, Benjamin Kidder, his brother-in-law, and Edward Linkfield. Kidder was taken sick, and was left at a fort by the company at Ossipee Lake. Goffe, with several others, also remained at the fort. Linkfield alone of the three was in the fight which took place May 19th. He was one of the nine that received no considerable wound, and, with Goffe and Kidder, returned home in safety. In the summer of 1745, Capt. Peter Pattee, of Londonderry, "scouted the woods with a small company of cavalry," and the next year Capt. Samuel Barr with seventeen men performed a like service. Capt. Andrew Todd also ranged the woods in July, 1746, with twenty-two men. During the year 1755 the town furnished many men at Crown Point, and enlistments were made in 1757 and 1758. In the expedition to Canada in 1760 Londonderry was largely represented. The town furnished one company at Louisburg in 1745. It was under command of Capt. John Moor.

Garrison-Houses.—Notwithstanding Londonderry dwelt in comparative security from Indian attacks, a few garrison houses were built, to which the people could repair should danger impend. The house of Capt. James Gregg, near the mill, was a garrison, and also the house of Samuel Barr, now Mr. Thwyng's. The town paid for a "flanker" round Rev. Mr. McGregor's dwelling, and there were other garrisons in the East Parish. In the West Parish a garrison stood on the spot where now stands the house of Jonathan W. Peabody. Mr. John A. Plumer, who was born in the old house, remembers, when a boy, of looking through the holes cut in the immense timbers, through which an assailed party could thrust their guns. John Woodburn, a proprietor who died in 1780, is said to have lived in a garrison-house.

Town's stock of bullets and ammunition.

In June, 1718, the province of New Hampshire enacted a law requiring towns to keep on hand one barrel of good powder, two hundredweight of bullets, three hundred flints for every sixty listed soldiers for use in case of an Indian attack. Londonderry obeyed the law of the land and always had a full supply of the required ammunition. A few of the bullets are still kept and ready for use. There are payments recorded in the town books like the following:

"To Daniel McAfee for making bullets, £0 4s. 0d."

"To James Alexander for lead for bullets, £0 2s. 0d."

People were paid for taking charge of the town stock. By vote of the town at one time the stock of powder was stored in the attics of the meeting-houses, a pleasant and useful place in case of lightning during church services. "1745, voted to buy two barrels of gunpowder and lodge one-half in the old meeting-house and the other half in the new."

Early Grist-Mills.—Capt. James Gregg built a grist-mill in 1722, in what is now Derry village, probably on the spot where the mill of W. W. Poor now stands. This is usually regarded as the first in town. There is, however, a record on the town books indicating that the mill of David Cargill, at the eastern extremity of Beaver Pond, may have an earlier date. It is the record of the road running along north of the pond from Samuel Marshall's house to George McMurphy's, dated Feb. 13, 1720. The road crosses "the brook below Capt. Cargill's grist-mill." The Gregg mill was long kept in that family, but since it passed to other hands has had many owners.

In Londonderry the mill privilege of E. C. Kendall has been improved as such since about June 1, 1731. At that time the proprietors granted it to Benjamin Wilson, who built the first mill. It has since been known as Moor's mills and Goss' mills, and now Kendall's. Mills were first built in the northeastern part of Londonderry, where the Manter mills now are, by David McAfee.

Early Saw-Mills.—A grant of land was made by the proprietors June 17, 1719, to Robert Boyes, James Gregg, Samuel Graves, and Joseph Symonds, on condition that they should build a saw-mill upon Beaver River (Brook), to be ready some time in the month of September of that year. The "privilege of the stream was also granted to them and their heirs forever, from the foot of the falls to the upper end of Beaver pond, and James Gregg to build a grist-mill on said stream." It is not known just what time this saw-mill was built, but it must have been before Feb. 20, 1720, as the road between the two villages was laid out at that date, "beginning at the bridge below the saw-mill." William Gregg was paid in 1721 four pounds for sawing boards for the meeting-house. In 1721 a grant of the privilege of Aiken's Brook and one acre of land was made to the proprietaries in Aiken's Range, on condition that they should build a saw-mill. This mill must have stood where is now the mill of Washington Perkins. Horne's mill is on the same stream, lower down.

Highways—First Road.—The following is the record of the laying out of road between the villages: "Feb. 13, 1720. A byway laid out from the bridge below the Sawmill, from thence running sou-easterly by Mr. Gregg's hous, from thence turning more easterly, along by James Clark's new hous, & so up by James Neasmath's & so along as the old way as far as the east corner of Robert Wear's fence." There is no authority given for this, but Dec. 16, 1725, the selectmen of that year indorsed it, and added, said road to be "two rods wide & to be open & common without gates & bars." The English Range road from George W. Dickey's to Samuel Marshall's, and along the north of the pond to George McMurphy's, was laid out about the same time.

The road to "Amnasecgg Falls" was first laid out by Capt. James Gregg and William Aiken in 1721. But a small part of this road is now in use. The roads from the East Church in Derry to the pond, and that running south by the cemetery, and also the highway across the Double Range south of West Running Brook were all worked out by the selectmen June 1, 1723. The Aiken's Range road, Nov. 6, 1723, to be four rods wide across the Aiken lots, and two through the village to the mill. The Chester road was laid out Nov. 17, 1723. The highway between Derry village and the depot, and thence to William P. Nevin's land in Londonderry, three rods wide, was laid out in 1737. Many of the leading highways in Derry were laid out in 1723 and the two or three years following. The Londonderry turnpike was built in 1806. In Londonderry the laying of roads began June 19, 1730, at John Duncan's house, now William Clark's. The road running east to meet the Aiken's Range road was laid out at that time. Jan. 31, 1740, was laid out the highway by Aaron P. Hardy's house, north and south, and west by the graveyard. No roads over the old graveyard hill were laid out till 1739, although there must have been much travel there. The road from W. P. Nevin's land, running west by the house of John Gilcreast to Mason Boyd's house, three rods wide, was laid out in 1737, and the main road across Londonderry, east and west to Litchfield, in 1744 and 1745, and from Dinsmore's Corner north to the Baptist Church in 1745. The Mammoth road was built in 1831.

Some laid-out highways were never built, and many years elapsed before even the main portion of them were anything but bridle-paths. In the last hundred years great improvement has been made in both towns in widening and straightening.

Wild Animals.—The early settlers of Londonderry found the forests alive with many kinds of game. Deer and bears were abundant. A moose killed in the West Parish gave name to a hill there of five hundred feet elevation. For more than sixty years the town elected men to "prevent the killing of deer out of season." Bounties were paid on wolves' heads, and as late as the Revolution people brought their sheep to the fold every night to guard against the depredations of this fierce animal. Many stories relate encounters with bears. Probably the last one killed was in 1807. It took fifty men and three days' time to capture him. He weighed two hundred pounds dressed, and his skin afforded the party a whisky-punch and a jollification.

Domestic Animals.—Horses were common in town from the first settlement. The earliest accounts record payments similar to the following: "To Abel Merrill for money due from the town and horse hire, £0 12s. 0d. To James Nesmith for his horse £0 8s. 0d." There was constant use for horses in "going to y<sup>e</sup> Bank,"—that is, Portsmouth,—with salmon and cloth for the State officials, and in "going down for the elements of the Sacrament;" and the long distances that had to be gone over by most of the people every Sunday in attending meeting needed the services of this useful animal. Deacon James Reid, the father of Gen. George Reid, lived in the locality called Kilrea, on the extreme southern border of Derry, but was always a regular attendant at the West Parish Church. The McClary family never failed to appear at church in the East Parish, although their residence was in the west part of Londonderry, near the present site of the Baptist Church. Large numbers traveled equally as far to their places of worship, and were constant in their attendance. Just what time oxen came into general use is not known. The following extract from the records, dated March, 1722-23, would indicate that cows at least were abundant, possibly too much so: "Voted that all persons shall have the liberty to bring in cattle to the town, so as to make up the number of six with his own cattle and no more, and those that have cattle of their own have the liberty to bring the number of ten if they bring a bull with them, otherwise to bring in no more." Hogs were plenty and troublesome, and were allowed to run at large, requiring a by-law that compelled their owners to yoke them. 1722, "voted that hogs shall be yoked from the 20th of March to the last of October." The people were often called upon to entertain the Governor and other gentlemen high in office, and when salmon or venison were out of season a sheep or lamb was brought to the block.

Exempt Farms.—A few of the Londonderry settlers who were in the siege of Londonderry, Ireland, 1688-89, and who took an important part in the defense of the city, were, in common with all the soldiers engaged there, exempted from taxation by an act of the British Parliament. This exemption continued down to the Revolution, which terminated all the authority of England here. Among the exempt were Rev. Matt. Clark, John Barr, William Caldwell, Abraham Blair, and James Wilson. There were probably more, but their names are unknown. James Wilson lived on the Proctor place, now Mr. Palmer's.

Slaves.—There were a few slaves in town before the Revolution. The census of 1773 enumerated twelve male and thirteen female persons of this class. Rev. Mr. Davidson had two, mother and daughter, named "Poll and Moll." In the West Parish, Deacon James Thompson and Thomas Wallace held property of this kind. The latter owned a negro boy, for whom he had paid one hundred dollars. Toney made a raft and went for a ride on the flowed meadow of the "fourteen-acre meadow brook." The craft proving unsafe, Toney, in fear of drowning, shouted to his owner to come and help him and save his one hundred dollars.

Revolution.—Londonderry was not behind other towns of New Hampshire in carrying the burdens imposed upon them by the war of the Revolution. The town entered early into the conflict with men and means, and held resolutely on till the long and severe contest with England was terminated in the treaty of peace in 1783. Mr. Parker, in his history, says, "When the news came that Gen. Gage was marching troops into the interior, New Hampshire at once took up arms and hastened to the scene of action. Twelve hundred of her sons instantly repaired to Charlestown and Cambridge. Among these was a company from Londonderry. The tidings had no sooner reached the town than the whole community were seized with a warlike frenzy. A number of men, dropping instantly their implements of husbandry, hastened to spread the news, and in a few hours all who could bear arms were assembled on the common at the meeting-house. They were prepared to act. From the two companies of militia in town a large company of volunteers was at once formed. They started instantly on being organized, their provisions, ammunition, and whatever was necessary for their encampment and future wants being afterwards forwarded by express. The roll of this company is as follows: George Reid, captain; Abraham Reid, first lieutenant; James Anderson, second lieutenant; John Patten, quartermaster-sergeant; Daniel Miltimore, John Nesmith, Robert Burnet, John Mackey, sergeants; James McCluer, Robert Boyer, Joshua Thompson, George McMurphy, corporals; Robert Burke, drummer; Thomas Inglis, fifer; Matthew Anderson, Robert Adams, Samuel Ayers, Hugh Alexander, John Anderson, Alexander Brown, William Boyd, John Campbell, Thomas Campbell, Peter Christie, Solomon Collins, Stephen Chase, William Dickey, James Duncan, Samuel Dickey, John Ferguson, John Head, Asa Senter, Samuel Houston, Jonathan Holmes, Peter Jenkins, John Livingstone, Hugh Montgomery, John Morrison, James Morrison,

Capt. John Nesmith commanded a company raised in August, 1776, in which were thirty-nine men from Londonderry. Of these, not before named, were Samuel Cherry, ensign; Solomon Todd, sergeant; Michael George, drummer; Timothy Dustin, fifer; John McClurg, William Rogers, Robert McCluer, James Ewins, Robert Boyer, Jr., John Orr, Samuel Rowell, John Humphrey, John Cox, Edward Cox, John Anderson, Jr., Thomas White, Ephraim White, James Moor, Samuel Eayers, John Ramsey, David George, Jonathan Gregg, Abner Andrews, Alexander Craig, William Colby, Patrick Fling, William Adams, James Boyer, Jr., Jonathan George, Charity Killieut, and John Lancaster, privates. In December, 1776, the following enlistments were made, not before named: Jonathan Wallace, William Lyon, Moses Watts, Thomas McClary, Jesse Jones, Arthur Nesmith, John Todd, Benjamin Nesmith, James Hobbs, Nathan Whiting, Benjamin Robinson, David Marshall, William Burroughs.

The enlistments in 1777 and 1778 of three years' men numbered about fifty, several of whom had previously seen service. Capt. Daniel Reynolds commanded a company of seventy men at Bennington, David McClary and Adam Taylor lieutenants, John Smith, John McKeon, John Anderson, and John Robinson sergeants. Lieut. McClary was killed there, and is said to be the only man from Londonderry who lost his life in battle during the war, although according to the muster-rolls the town furnished more men than any other in New Hampshire. Twenty-five men under Capt. Joseph Finlay served for a short time at Saratoga in 1777, and the same year there were five men in Col. Henry Jackson's regiment. In 1778 the town paid bounties to twenty men for service in Rhode Island. 1779 there were seventeen enlistments; in 1780, thirteen; in 1781, thirty.

Association Test.—At the beginning of the second year of the war there were so many persons in all our towns suspected of Toryism that the New Hampshire Committee of Safety, in accordance with a recommendation of the Continental Congress, requested selectmen to circulate papers for signature affirming opposition to the British government. In Londonderry there were three hundred and seventy-two males over twenty-one who signed a declaration of independence, substantially the same as the memorable declaration of July 4, 1776, and but fifteen who refused to sign.

Tories of the Revolution.—Londonderry had perhaps her share of Tories. This offensive name was given to those persons who took sides with Great Britain in our war of independence, and was applied to those who even leaned that way. "Time's effacing fingers" have softened down the asperities of that period, and the "king's friends" are now everywhere designated by the less opprobrious name of loyalists. Considering the power of England, the feebleness of the colonies and their poverty, it is not surprising that large numbers of the people either openly favored the crown or were inclined that way. It is to be added, however, that as soon as the first blow was struck a large portion of the latter class sided with the patriotic party, and joined with them heart, hand, and purse in the unequal contest with England. Many of the loyalists were on the shady side of fifty years, and were looking towards the setting sun. The ambition and enterprise of younger days were gone, and after the severe struggles they had endured in subduing the forest and the Indian enemy that roamed through them they desired to possess their homes of peace and plenty in quiet, and pass the remainder of life undisturbed by war's alarms. But when aroused by the blood shed at Bunker Hill, many of them were ready for the fray. It is related of Samuel Campbell, of Windham, who leaned at first to the loyalist side, that when he heard from Bunker Hill he saddled "his old meer," and took provisions in his saddle-bags to his two boys, who had been in the fight, thinking, as he said, "they might be hungry." The loyalists, as a class, were men of wealth, education, and respectability, many of them holding office under the crown. It is no wonder then that large numbers hesitated to go at once into rebellion. For some reasons not known there were more loyalists in the English Range than were to be found in any other part of the town. There were a few that lived near the First Church, now East Derry. Among them Col. Stephen Holland was the most prominent. His reputation as a Tory was more than local, as the history of the times clearly proved. He was tavern-keeper and a merchant, was a man of wealth and education, and his influence, in the language of the day, is said to have "tared numbers of the people with the stick of Toryism." He was proscribed and banished by the act of Nov. 19, 1778, and his property, numbering four farms, was confiscated. The same act also proscribed and banished the following men of Londonderry: Richard Holland, John Davidson, James Fulton, Thomas Smith, and Dennis O'Hala. It does not appear that any one suffered confiscation except Col. Holland. There were perhaps some twenty men in town who were Tories, but they were not prominent enough to cause much trouble. John Clark, of the English Range, was confined for a time to his own premises, with liberty only to attend church on Sunday. He ventured to step across his lines to pick up a hawk he had shot, for which he was fined. A barn was raised on the hill where Mr. Clement lives during the height of the Tory excitement, and much apprehension was feared that trouble would ensue, as the Tories of the English Range would be there and meet the Pinkertons, the Aikens, and the Wallaces. It was feared that blows would follow political discussion, and a fight between those stalwart men would be no small affair. The parties, however, had the good sense to raise the barn, quietly drink their whisky, and depart for their homes in peace. The women of that day had their politics as well as the men. The wife of Dr. Alexander Cummings "wished that the English Range from its head to Beaver Pond ran ankle-deep in Whig blood."

Taverns.—Before May 12, 1776, John Barr, who lived on the John B. Taylor place in the East Parish, kept a tavern for the "accommodation of Man & beast." This is made certain by the following extract from the journal of John Wainwright, clerk of the Massachusetts Bay Committee, sent to lay out Pennacook, now Concord, N. H. In going from Haverhill to Pennacook, "about 11 or 12 o'clock we arrived at Nutfield, alias Londonderry, & refreshed ourselves & horses at the house of one John Barr, an Irish tavern-keeper, but we had nothing of him but 'small Beer.'" There were numbers of hostleries in Londonderry; many of them, however, were merely places where spirits in some form was sold, and they were much frequented long after the Revolution by the old soldiers of that and the previous Indian wars. They often got together of a winter's night, and after inspiring draughts of punch and flip the old-time memories would come over them, and as "the night drave on wi' sangs and clatter," they would "shoulder their crutches and show how fields were won." The loyalist colonel, Stephen Holland, kept tavern where the late David Bassett lived, and after him Capt. Samuel Allison and others. Dr. Isaac Thom, with much other business, was a hotel-keeper. In Derry lower village a public-house was kept at the Thornton place several years by John Dinsmoor and others.

In the West Parish, James Thompson, at the Hurd place, entertained the surveyors for Holland's map in 1784, and near the close of the Revolution, at the Dinsmoor corner, three hundred Hessian prisoners from Burgoyne's army, on their way to Boston, were kept for a night. Packer's tavern was on the High Range. He employed Richard H. Brinton, a deserter from the British army, to paint a sign during the excitement of the Jefferson campaign. He had Jefferson's likeness put on one side of the sign. The painter asked what he should paint upon the other. "Oh," replied Packer, "I am not particular; anything appropriate to go with Jefferson." "Well, then," said Brinton, "I will just paint the devil!" At Derry village the Danforth tavern is now the house of Dr. Crombie. A hotel has long been kept where Mr. Saunders entertains the public. Of the landlords there, Charles Redfield and Richard Melvin are the best known.

Stores.—The Londonderry fair obviated the necessity of very early stores. The precise date of the first has not been ascertained. James Ayers was a trader in 1735, and Christopher Ayers also about that time. John Duncan early had a store at the Duncan place. A part of his shop is now used as a dwelling. The Duncans were a race of merchants. At a "catechising" in answer to the question, "Who was the first Christian martyr?" Col. William Adams, when a boy, replied, under a little confusion of the term, that "he didn't know, but thought he might have been a Duncan." John Dickey, Esq., who removed to New York in 1819, was a merchant in the West Parish many years. Since then, in the present town of Londonderry the leading merchants were John N. Anderson and Arley Plumer, now both dead, and William Anderson, Esq., now a resident of Derry.

Currency.—Like all new countries, the people of Londonderry suffered great inconvenience for want of a circulating medium wherewith to transact their business. There was but little of what could be called money in the settlement during the lives of the emigrants, and yet they were not wholly destitute.

To convince the friends in Ireland that such was the fact, in 1744 a member of the Cochran family sent over a pine-tree shilling as a specimen of the money in use. The present commercial value of that shilling, could it have been made available to the early settlers, would have been more than sufficient to purchase one of their best "Home Lots," or even their "Precept." It remained in Ireland one hundred years, and in 1844 it was sent back to Londonderry, and is now in possession of the writer. Most business was done by means of barter, corn, beans, peltry, and even spinning-wheels taking the place of money. In the emergencies arising from the various Indian wars the government was compelled to issue "Bills of credit." All such bills authorized before 1742 were called "Old Tenor," and the issue of that year and subsequently till the Revolution were denominated "New Tenor." The temptation to over-issues beyond the credit of the government to respond could not be resisted, and great depreciation was the natural result, to the severe embarrassment of the people. The salary of Rev. Mr. Davidson, of the East Parish, in 1767 was fifteen hundred pounds old tenor, and the next year it was seventy-five pounds lawful money. The depreciation of the Continental money wrought financial ruin to large numbers of the people. The following table, kept by Deacon Thomas Patterson at the time, shows how rapid was the decline of the Continental bills:

	1777.	1778.	1779.	1780.	1781.

The subjoined order among the town's papers will illustrate some of the difficulties the fathers had to wrestle with in relation to their currency:

"TO MR. JESSE JONES, CONSTABLE:

"Please pay of discount with James Rogers, ten shillings in certificates, and five shillings of Indents, & three shillings and four pence out of your town list, & one shilling & eight pence in specie, & one shilling eight pence in specie orders, and one shilling eight pence out of your county list, it being for his father's pole tax, rated and paid in the same year, & it will be allowed on settlement of your lists.

"GEORGE REID, Sheriff Clerk."

"LONDONDERRY, JUL. 15, 1700."

Schools.—The settlers of Londonderry made early and as full provision as possible for the rising generation; and this good example has been followed to the present day. An early law of the province required "every fifty householders to be provided of a schoolmaster to teach children and youth to read and write, and one hundred families were required to set up a Grammar school." Accordingly the town voted in 1726 "That a Grammar school shall be sett up by David McGregor." And the same year "Voted to build a school-house 18 ft long beside the chimney, that there shall be two fire-places in one end as large as the house will allow, 7 foot in the side of logs at the meeting-house." In 1728 the wages of a schoolmaster were thirty-six pounds per annum. March 25, 1732, "Voted that there shall be two schools kept as public schools for the year; the one at the meeting-house, and at or by, as near Allen Anderson's house, or thereabouts, and Mr. John Wilson shall be the schoolmaster." Before the establishment of the present system of common schools all through the town teachers were employed, and schools were taught in private houses, and not infrequently barns were used as school-rooms. The Hon. Samuel Bell, afterwards Governor of New Hampshire, when in college taught a winter term in a dwelling-house in the West Parish. He was a strict disciplinarian even for those times, and during the first week of the term some of the mischievous boys got sundry raps over the head from a cane in the hands of the teacher. The following Sunday, at church, John Bell, the father of the college student, anxious for his success, asked Deacon Thomas Patterson how Sam was getting on in school. The deacon replied, "Very well; only I think he had better leave his cane at home to-morrow." The hint was taken, the cane was left at home, and an excellent school was the result.

The various divisions in town known as school districts were at first called "classes," and prudential committees called "heads of the class." The divisions were not numbered as at present, but designated by some local name, as the Aiken's Range Class, etc. All through the years great attention has been given to all matters pertaining to education, and large sums annually expended in support of common schools. The fact that high schools and academies were early established in town is abundant proof that the people have not been and are not behind other towns in providing for the welfare of the rising generation.

Spotted Fever of 1812.—The town has always enjoyed remarkable immunity from epidemics. But two of any account are known in its history. In 1753 a fever of great malignity, much resembling the yellow fever of later years, carried off several of the inhabitants, among whom were a few of the leading citizens. The ravages of the spotted fever of 1812 caused great excitement, and many families suffered severely. In the West Parish three children in the family of Alexander Anderson died, and three or four in the family of David Anderson. Robert Taylor, who lived in the East Parish, lost four children, and William Thompson, two. Bleeding was thought to be a means of cure, but the sickness was so general that the doctors were unable to respond to all the cases. In this emergency Christopher Thom, Abraham Morrison, and Joseph Gregg went through the town using the lancet. Physicians from abroad were employed. The writer has a bill paid by the town for one hundred and twelve dollars to Dr. Matthias Spaulding, a noted physician of Amherst, N. H.

War of 1812-15.—Soon after the declaration of war President Madison requested Governor Plumer, of New Hampshire, to order into service of the United States such a part of the State militia as he should deem necessary for the defense of Portsmouth. A company was drafted from the Third Brigade, to which Londonderry belonged, to serve six months, and Capt. John Leonard, of this town, was put in command. The following-named men went to Portsmouth: Capt. John Leonard, Moses C. Pillsbury, John Palmer, Moses Messer, John Plumer, David Wilson, John Saunders, and James Whittemore. Under Governor Gilman's order of Sept. 9, 1814, Capt. James Thom, of Londonderry, was in command of a company for a short time, but there were no privates from town in this company. Under the same order Londonderry furnished twenty-two men for the service, who were enlisted Sept. 23, 1814, for sixty days. In the same company there were ten men from Windham. The names of all the men above enumerated are on record, but the town furnished others that the muster-rolls are silent in respect to. The political sentiment of the town being largely in opposition to the war, the voluntary enlistments were few. Most of the men were drafted.

Tomatoes were first raised in town in 1822, by Madame Morrison, widow of Rev. William Morrison, she having brought the seed from her early home at Octorara, Pa.

Emigrations from Town.—No sketch of Londonderry can be perfect without mention of towns colonized therefrom. Very early several of the proprietors relinquished their "home lots" and settled in other parts of the town on second divisions, or amendment land. Among these were John Woodburn, of the Ayers Range, and John Senter, of the English Range, who removed to the lower part of the High Range in the West Parish. John Goffe, four years town clerk, took up residence in 1734 at "Goffe's Falls." Prior to 1736 a vaguely-defined strip of land, called Harrytown, extending several miles along the eastern bank of the Merrimac, opposite Amoskeag Falls, had been partly settled by the Scotch-Irish and English. Much contention arising among them relative to the fishing interest, the former thought best to strengthen their party by a reinforcement from the Scotch-Irish fighting blood of Londonderry. John McNeil, in 1735, and Archibald Stork, in 1736, and several others responded to the call. How well the imperiled settlers, struggling to maintain their claim, judged of the character of the men they summoned to their aid let Chippewa, Bunker Hill, and Bennington in a succeeding generation tell.

Cherry Valley, Otsego Co., N. Y., settled in 1740, received an important addition to its population from that part of Londonderry now Windham. Col. Samuel Campbell, Samuel Clyde, and several others were among the early settlers. Bedford, N. H., incorporated May 19, 1759, was largely represented by settlers from Londonderry. Among them were the Riddles, the Moors, the Aikens, the Walkers, the Orrs, and many others. Many of the leading families of Petersboro', N. H., incorporated Jan. 17, 1760, were from Londonderry,—the Morrisons, Smiths, Steels, Greggs, etc. In 1760 a company of Archibalds, Taylors, Fishers, and others settled in Truro, Nova Scotia. Large numbers of the early citizens of New Boston, N. H., were of Londonderry,—the Crombies, Cochrans, Clarks, Pattersons, McColloms, McAllisters, etc. Nearly all the proprietors of Henniker, N. H., were from Londonderry. Those who removed thither were most prominent in the new settlement,—the Wallaces, Campbells, and Pattersons. The first permanent settler in Antrim, N. H., was Deacon James Aiken, of Londonderry. He was succeeded by Duncans, Greggs, and others. The towns of Acworth, Merrimac, and Goffstown, N. H., claim a Londonderry origin for many of their people, also the towns of Londonderry and Windham, Vt. Belfast, Me., is indebted to this town for its most prominent settlers.

Londonderry Literature.—Several of the early colonists were said to be gifted with poetical talent, and among them were Rev. Matt. Clark and Robert Boyer, Esq. The former was an eccentric minister, and the latter was a man of talent, had great influence in town, and was often in public employment, but the specimens of their writing that have come down to us do not warrant us in giving them a very high place among the poets. Dr. Thornton is said to have left a manuscript work on some religious subject. Rev. David McGregor, Rev. Dr. Morrison, and Rev. Daniel D. Dana, among the older ministers, and Rev. E. L. Parker and Rev. L. S. Parker, of later years, all published sermons. The century sermon of Rev. E. L. Parker in 1819 is the basis of the history of the town he had got nearly ready for the press at the time of his death in 1850. The history, a work of three hundred and fifty-eight pages, was published by his son, Edward P. Parker, Esq., in 1851, and is regarded as a very valuable work, and one of the best town histories. Copies of the work are very rare, and, like all Londonderry literature, command high prices. In 1870 a compilation of the "Exercises on the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the town's settlement" was published.

Rev. Luther B. Pert, pastor of the Presbyterian Society in Londonderry, published in 1876 a valuable centennial sermon, historical of the society, church, and town.

Londonderry claims many eminent men who were either natives of the town or residents for a time. Of these may be mentioned John Bell, ancestor of three Governors of New Hampshire and three United States senators; Gen. George Reid, the trusted friend of Washington; Gen. John Stark, the hero of Bennington; Matthew Thornton, the jurist and statesman; Samuel Livermore and John Prentice, the accomplished lawyers; Rev. Dr. Joseph McKeen, first president of Bowdoin College; and many others, of whom there is no space in this sketch even to name. Very large numbers of the most prominent living men in the land "claim kindred here, and have their claims allowed." A fuller account must be reserved for a complete history of the town now in preparation.

Post-Offices and Postmasters.—On the 18th of August, 1827, soon after the division of the town, a post-office was established in the High Range, in the western part of the town, and Ebenezer Whittier appointed postmaster. Aug. 30, 1828, the office was removed two and one-half miles eastward to the store of William Anderson (3d), who was made postmaster. May 7, 1829, the Post-Office Department ordered the office back to the store of Mr. Whittier, who was again put in charge of it. It remained there until the 6th of March, 1835, when it was again removed, this time to the store of William Caldwell, on the Mammoth road. He served as postmaster till the appointment of Arley Plumer, April 6, 1836, when Mr. Plumer was relieved by Daniel H. Battefielder, Aug. 28, 1850. Mr. Plumer again received the appointment, Sept. 27, 1852. A. J. Morse succeeded him July 29, 1875, and was postmaster till May 15, 1876, when D. H. Burns took the place. Mr. Burns gave up the office June 2, 1881, to the present incumbent, W. P. Wallace.

Post-Office and Postmasters at North Londonderry.—An office was opened here May 21, 1832, with Reuben White as postmaster. Succeeding him were Dr. David Flanders, March 29, 1839; Reuben White again, May 28, 1846; Mrs. Rachel White, April 9, 1858; B. F. Garvin, April 22, 1862; S. C. Barker, July 17, 1865; Robert W. Wilson, Jan. 18, 1866; Dr. John Haynes, January, 1868; and James W. Mackey, May 5, 1873. For thirty years the office was kept in the hotel of Mr. White; afterwards for a short time at the depot of the Manchester and Lawrence Railroad; since then at the store near by. The mail was carried by stage-coaches on the Mammoth road till they were taken off in 1849, and then for a few years by special messenger to Manchester. At present it is carried by the Manchester and Lawrence Railroad.

Post-Office at Wilson's Crossing.—The office here was established June 25, 1862, and Warren Richardson appointed postmaster, who still serves in that capacity.

Mammoth Road.—This road was built in the summer of 1831, and opened to travel in the autumn of that year. It became at once a popular line between Concord, N. H., and Boston. Three lines of daily stages were put on the road, which carried vast numbers of passengers. In the winter season large quantities of country produce were carried over the road, seeking a market at Lowell and Boston. This continued till the opening of the Concord and Nashua Railroad, in 1838. The Mammoth road, so named in derision by its enemies, has always been a great convenience to the people of the town. In 1832 President Jackson and cabinet passed over it on their way from Boston to Concord, N. H., and dined at the hotel of Mr. White, in the north part of the town.

Libraries—Leach Library.—A social library was established by a few citizens in 1830. It contained several hundred volumes, and was kept at first at the store of William Anderson, now an honored resident of Derry. In 1834 the books were transferred to the house of Robert Mack, on the Mammoth road. In a few years they were sold at auction, and the avails divided among the stockholders. Feb. 23, 1858, forty individuals raised money and purchased about two hundred volumes; but having no renewal fund, the books have been donated to the Leach Library. David Rollins Leach, born in Londonderry, Aug. 8, 1806, and died at Manchester, N. H., April 1, 1878, left in his will three thousand dollars to the town to found a library. The town at its next annual meeting voted to accept the bequest, chose a board of nine trustees, and authorized the selectmen to build an addition to the town hall for a library room. The room was in readiness Jan. 1, 1880, and about one thousand books placed upon the shelves. The library went into operation Feb. 25, 1880. Since that time more books have been purchased, making in all about sixteen hundred volumes. All the religious societies in town have small libraries of excellent books, which are much read.

Cemeteries.—The oldest cemetery in town is situated upon the hill known as "Grave-yard Hill," about one mile from the Derry line, nearly opposite the site of the First Church. An acre of land was bought of Robert Wallace. The first interment was "ye learned William Wallace," who died March 27, 1733. He was born at Bush Mills, Ireland, in 1707, graduated at a college in Edinburgh, Scotland, and studied for the ministry. Although it is now a lonely place, unused for purposes of burial, it contains the remains of many of the honored dead of the olden time. Among them John Bell, the emigrant ancestor of the eminent family that has through three or four generations taken a distinguished part in the councils of the State and nation. He died July 8, 1743, aged sixty-four. A massive marble slab marks the resting-place of Maj. John Pinkerton, the founder of Pinkerton Academy. Many members of the Duncon family lie here, and there are stones "In Memoriam" of David and Margaret (Clark) Woodburn, maternal grandparents of Horace Greeley. The second cemetery in town received its first recorded burial in February, 1793,—David Patterson, son of Deacon Thomas Patterson, who died the 12th day of that month. Since that time about twelve hundred of the people of Londonderry have followed him to that place of final rest. Two ministers of the West Parish—Rev. Dr. Morrison and Rev. Amasa A. Hayes—are buried in this yard. Near the centre stands a stately and appropriate granite monument inscribed to the memory of Hon. John Bell and wife. He was born in Londonderry, Aug. 15, 1730, and died there Nov. 30, 1825, having long served faithfully the town and State in many important positions. An addition to this yard was made on the south in 1852.

The cemetery in the northwest part was originally a private yard, but now belongs to the town. There are here not far from three hundred and fifty graves.

GLENWOOD CEMETERY.—About fifty citizens of the town, in 1869, purchased three acres of land of Robert Mack, fenced it, and laid it out into lots. The first person buried here was Mrs. John Haynes. Since then about one hundred and forty interments have been made.

Rebellion, 1861-65.—The attack upon Fort Sumter, April 13, 1861, united the people of Londonderry, without distinction of party, in favor of vigorous measures by the general government to maintain the integrity of the Union. The enthusiasm of the town developed itself in the formation of two companies for purposes of military drill. Frequent meetings were held and enlistments encouraged, so that when the time came for action the town was ready to do its duty. Seven of its citizens enlisted in the first regiment sent from New Hampshire. May 11, 1861, the town voted to provide for the families of volunteers, and all through the war generous bounties were paid, the last, Jan. 2, 1865, of six hundred dollars. Drafted men received each three hundred dollars.

 credits by enlistment and draft, 108; surplus, 1.

Londonderry Grange, No. 44, was organized Jan. 18, 1875. The names of the first officers were Charles R. Frost, Master; C. O. Butterick, Overseer; E. W. Peabody, Lecturer; John C. Towns, Steward; H. C. Smith, Assistant Steward; J. W. Peabody, Chaplain; L. H. Nesmith, Treas.; Daniel G. Annis, Sec.; D. D. Smith, Gate-Keeper; Mrs. D. G. Annis, Ceres; Mrs. C. R. Frost, Pomona; Miss Nettie E. Smith, Flora; Mrs. C. O. Butterick, Lady Assistant Steward. In 1878 and 1881 the Grange held successful fairs in connection with the citizens of the town. The business agent is D. G. Annis.

Wesley B. Knight Post, No. 41, G. A. R.—This post was named for Wesley B. Knight, who enlisted as corporal in the First New Hampshire Regiment of three months' men. He again enlisted in United States service Sept. 18, 1861, and served as sergeant. He was taken prisoner at Drury's Bluff, May 16, 1864, and from there he was sent to Libby prison, and thence to Andersonville, where he arrived June 10, 1864. Leaving there Sept. 28, 1864, he was taken to Charleston, S. C., and there remained three weeks. Oct. 20, 1864, he died, just before reaching the stockade at Florence, S. C. The post was organized March 6, 1879, and now numbers forty-four active members. Orrin B. Stokes was the first Commander, and George O. Colby the present Commander.

Business at North Londonderry.—In 1878, Messrs. Daniel G. & Roswell Annis erected a large store, and commenced the sale of grain, flour, and groceries. Shortly after they built a steam grist-mill, all of which was burned Oct. 26, 1880. They rebuilt at once, larger and with sufficient power to operate a grist-mill and saw-mill. The trade of the firm is prosperous, selling at least thirty thousand dollars worth of goods annually. Like the first store, the present one has a convenient hall in which religious exercises are held on Sunday. Messrs. B. & A. D. Fessenden, from Townsend, Mass., in the spring of 1881, began the manufacture of staves and headings, renting power of Annis & Co. They do a large business, employ forty men, and use one million feet of lumber annually.

In 1868, George F. MacGregor began the manufacturing of shoes in a part of the store, near the depot of the Manchester and Lawrence Railroad. Two years after he formed a partnership with A. M. Corning. This firm had a profitable New England and Western business till the fire of July 18, 1872. Upon the dissolution of the firm Mr. Corning built the large shoe factory opposite the depot, and engaged in business there till 1875, when he sold to his brother, Nathaniel Corning, who put in steam-power, and made sewed goods. He employed a large number of hands till the business terminated by his death, in 1878. Messrs. Haskell, Woodbury & Butman, from Beverly, Mass., followed him, and carried on business one year. In the village, besides the store of D. G. & R. Annis, is that of James W. Mackey, three pump-shops, a blacksmith-shop, and the post-office. The other merchants in town are A. P. Hardy, W. Richardson, and W. P. Wallace, who have a prosperous trade. Farming, however, is the principal employment of the people, and among the many excellent farmers in town are Washington Perkins, William Clark, David W. Ela, William P. Nevins, Charles E. Young, Benjamin McAllister, Aaron P. Hardy, Mason Boyd, Montgomery Dickey, Jonathan McAllister, Walter Reed, Simon Mullins, Newell Boyce, Charles Pillsbury, and Sherburn D. Smith.

The health of the town is such that the services of only one physician are needed. Dr. Eugene Wason, a native of New Boston, N. H., having received his medical education at Harvard and Dartmouth, followed by six years' practice at Nashua, N. H., came here Sept. 14, 1875.

The number of ratable polls in Londonderry in 1828, the year following the division of the town, was 233; number in 1882, 372; valuation of the town in 1828, $245,977; valuation in 1882, $572,761; population in 1882, 1335.

West Parish, or Londonderry Presbyterian Meeting-House.—Feb. 25, 1740, the New Hampshire Legislature incorporated a second parish in Londonderry. It took the name of the West Parish, and embraced all the present town of Londonderry and a considerable part of Derry. The first meeting-house of the parish was erected near the old graveyard certainly as early as 1755, and may have been as early as March 14, 1733, as that was the date of the call to Rev. David McGregor, the first pastor. It was never fully finished, and probably only occasional services were held in it. The second house was built one mile and a half east of the former, in the Aiken's Range, now Derry, about 1737, as we find the parish voted, Sept. 7, 1736, "that they sett up their meeting-house upon that part of James Aiken's home-lot known as his sheep pasture." This house was "low in the post, with a low floor requiring descending steps to reach it." It stood on land now owned by the heirs of Thomas Bradford. The location so far to the east, in connection with some dislike of Rev. William Davidson, pastor of the "old church," occasioned dissatisfaction, which resulted in an unhappy quarrel, which lasted till the close of Rev. David McGregor's ministry, in 1777. Forty families of the West Parish attended meeting at the East Church, now Derry, and the same number from the latter society attended meeting at the West Parish.

The next and third church edifice of the West Parish was begun in 1769. It was located near Henry Campbell's tobacco-yard, a short distance from the residence of A. P. Hardy. The next year the house was finished outwardly, but the interior was not finished till 1780. Pews were made in 1787, and sold in the aggregate for £1025 5s. This house stood without much alteration till 1845, when it was taken down and removed to the centre of the town, on the Mammoth road, and fitted up for a town hall.

Some time during the winter of 1836-37 the leading men in the West Parish met at the house of Robert Mack, and took steps for the erection of a new church. Committees were chosen, subscriptions were obtained, and during the summer and fall of 1837 the present church was built. The land for a site, originally laid out to David Morrison, was the gift of Robert Mack. Capt. Samuel Dickey framed the building, and Thomas Kennedy, from Goldstown, N. H., finished it. The cost was about $4000. In 1869 a little over $2000 were expended in frescoing the house and making repairs. The bell of this church was purchased in 1856.

Ministers of the West Parish in Londonderry.—Rev. David McGregor was born in Ireland in 1719, came with his father to Londonderry in 1719, and became the first pastor over the West Parish. He early entered the ministry, receiving a call from the West Parish, March 14, 1733. He alternated Sunday services between the Hill Church and that in the Aiken's Range. His abilities and eloquence drew many people from neighboring towns in regular attendance upon his ministrations. He died May 30, 1777, having faithfully served the society forty-four years. He was a non-resident of the parish, living in a house of his own erection on land laid out to his father, where Mr. G. W. Batchelder now resides, better known as the Humphrey Choate Place, one mile from East Derry village. The "forty family quarrel" between the parishes came to an end shortly after his death, the New Hampshire Legislature aiding this result in 1778 by repealing the law allowing that singular interchange of families.

William Morrison, D.D., succeeded Mr. McGregor. He was ordained February, 1783. He was born in 1748, in the town of Auchinnes, parish of Cornerey, Perthshire, Scotland, and died March 9, 1818.

Rev. F. Clark

Rev. Daniel Dana, D.D., having resigned the presidency of Dartmouth College, was installed over the society Jan. 15, 1822. He was dismissed in April, 1826, "much to the regret of the people," as appears by a record on the West Parish books.

Rev. Amasa A. Hayes, a native of Granby, Conn., a graduate of Yale and Andover, was installed June 25, 1828, and died, greatly lamented, Oct. 23, 1830.

Rev. John R. Adams followed Mr. Hayes by ordination Oct. 5, 1831. He was dismissed in October, 1838. He was afterward settled in Brighton, Mass., and Gorham, Me.; was chaplain in the Fifth Regiment Maine Volunteers, and also of the One Hundred and Twenty-first New York Regiment. He died at Northampton, Mass., April 25, 1866.

Rev. Timothy G. Brainerd became pastor of the West Parish Nov. 6, 1840. He was dismissed April 25, 1855. He was born in Troy, N. Y., graduated at Yale and Andover, and now resides at Grinnell, Iowa.

Rev. William House was installed Oct. 7, 1857, and dismissed Feb. 26, 1873. He is now settled over a Congregational Church at Barrington, R. I. His wife is the daughter of Rev. Thomas Savage, long the eloquent pastor of Bedford, N. H.

Rev. Luther B. Pert, a native of Spencer, N. Y., and a graduate of Hamilton College, was installed Feb. 23, 1875. In early life he studied law, practiced that profession fifteen years in New York City, studied for the ministry, and was for several years settled in Raisin, Mich. His death occurred at Bergen Point, N. J., May 31, 1881. He was an able, eloquent, and scholarly man.

Rev. Ira C. Tyson, the present pastor, was born in Whitmarsh, Pa., March 3, 1839. After a preparatory course in the languages he entered Union Theological Seminary, N. Y., and graduated in 1862. He was installed over the Presbyterian Society in Londonderry June 9, 1881.

Baptist Church and Ministers.—This church was organized in 1779. Services on the Sabbath were occasionally held at the houses of the members fifty years, or till 1829, when the society erected their meeting-house. In November, 1828, a subscription paper was circulated for the object of building a house. Two sites had been in contemplation; "one near Caleb Gooden's corner," and the other "on a gore of land north of John Butterfield's house." Jan. 3, 1829, a meeting was held, the latter place selected, and the church built that year. Caleb Gooden, Stephen Moor, William Plumer, John Butterfield, and James Watts were large contributors. The following-named clergymen, among many others, have preached for the society: Rev. Ezra Wilmoth, Rev. John Upton, Rev. Stephen Pillsbury, fourteen years; Rev. J. W. Poland, two years; and Rev. Thomas W. Herbert. Rev. Joshua L. Whittemore was pastor from 1857 to 1867.

The late William Plumer, of Londonderry, left his homestead in the north part of the town to the society.

Methodist Meeting-House and Ministers.—The Methodist Episcopal Society worshiped in the town hall for two years before the erection of their church. This was built in 1855-56, and dedicated March 5, 1856. Rev. Henry Nutter was their first minister. Below are consecutively all the names of the other preachers and the dates of their pastorate: 1856-57, Rev. A. Folsom; 1857-59, Rev. J. Hayes; 1859-60, Rev. A. C. Dutton; 1860-62, G. W. T. Rogers; 1862-65, O. H. Call; 1865-66, J. Taggart; 1866-68, J. Hayes; 1868-69, E. Scott; 1869-71, A. A. Cleveland; 1871-73, J. A. Steele; 1873-74, F. D. Chandler, L. L. Eastman; 1874-75, S. Beedle; 1875-78, J. F. Spalding; 1878-79, A. R. Lunt; 1879-80, E. P. F. Dearborn; 1880-81, H. H. French; 1881 to the present, J. M. Bean.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

HON. REED PAGE CLARK.

Hon. Reed Page Clark was born in Hancock, N. H., July, 1807, being the third son of Ninian and Sally (Warner) Clark, of that town. He died at his farm home in Londonderry, April 8, 1882, thus within a few months completing his seventy-fifth year.

Robert Clark, the great-grandfather of Mr. Clark, came to this country from Londonderry, Ireland, about the year 1725, and settled upon the height of land northwest from the "beautiful Beaver Pond," now included in the town of Derry. He married Letitia Cochran before his coming, and had children,—four sons and four daughters. He united the occupations of weaver and farmer; was successful in both, and was regarded as a man of sound judgment and unusual intelligence. His services were often sought by his fellow-citizens in various ways, and he several times was chosen as their representative to the General Court of the State.

As the children of the "Old Nutfield" colonists grew up, many of them sought homes in the almost wilderness towns farther north. Thus two of the sons of this family, William and Ninian, purchased land, and settled in New Boston, and had much to do in promoting the religious and educational interests of that town. (See history of New Boston.) William, the grandfather of the subject of this sketch, married Annie Wallace, and by her had six children,—three sons and three daughters. He has been represented as "having a strong and vigorous mind, an extensive reader, and a thorough mathematician," and he became a distinguished surveyor of land. His industry must be apparent, when, besides clearing and well cultivating a large farm, he found time for various services for his townsmen at home, as well as several times representing them in the Provincial and State Legislatures. His hospitality was unbounded, and his home was always the open "halfway house" for the pioneers from the towns farther on as they traveled back and forth.

At his death, in 1808, his eldest son, Robert, became the owner of the homestead. (See history of New Boston.) His other sons, John and Ninian, about the year 1790, settled in Hancock, N. H., on two neighboring forest farms, which they in turn cleared with their own hands. They were intelligent and industrious men, and exerted a healthy influence for long years both in the town and in the church.

John married Rebecca Wallis, and had nine children,—four sons and five daughters. Of the sons, the venerable Rev. Dr. William Clark, of Amherst, now in his eighty-fourth year of age, is well and favorably known throughout New England. (See history of Hancock.)

Ninian Clark, the father of Reed P. Clark, married (1) Nancy Cochran, and (2) Sally Warner. He also had nine children,—Peter C., who became a school-teacher, and died at Hanover, N. J., in 1825; Nancy, who married Oliver Whitcomb, and died at Cambridge, Mass., in 1881, aged eighty years; Warner, who lived and died in Hancock; Reed P.; Avery Monroe, who lived for over sixty-five years on the home farm, but now resides at Peterboro'; Augustus N., who resides in Beverly, Mass.; Edwin Robert, died in California; Sarah Alnira, died young; and Mary Ann, now living in Boston.

These rough Hancock farms upon which the two brothers, William and Ninian, did a life work, and raised their large families of children, have gone into other hands, and not a single descendant now remains in that town, the children and children's children being scattered through several of the States.

Having briefly sketched the genealogy of the Clark family back to the emigration of the Scotch-Irish to Londonderry, we now speak of Reed P. Clark, one of the fourth generation, and the third son of Ninian Clark, of Hancock. He was named for Rev. Reed Page, the first minister settled in Hancock. Mr. Page recognized the compliment by the present of a "heifer calf," the product of which, when Mr. Clark became of age, amounted to quite a respectable capital. Mr. Clark was an excellent mechanic, and became skilled with tools both as a worker of iron and wood, but his tastes, like that of his ancestors, were for agriculture, and he always kept himself abreast in all improvements in that department, and did much to encourage his townsmen in new methods in agriculture.

At his majority, not feeling content to cultivate lands as rocky as the farm upon which he had been reared, he lived for a time in the State of New York and other localities, traveled through the then West, and was strongly inclined to a pioneer life in some one of the northern tiers of Western States, but finally concluded, about the year 1840, to purchase the farm in Londonderry, and upon which he lived till his death. Mr. Clark was a man of great industry and marked vitality, a man of sound judgment, intelligent, with strong will, and pronounced opinions. His knowledge of men was almost intuitive. This led him easily to detect the motives which governed the conduct of men with which he had to do. He was no doubt sometimes in error, and perhaps judged severely, but his open frankness, integrity, genial and social nature, and kindheartedness, won for him the confidence of his fellow-townsmen, and a large circle of acquaintances in the county and State.

He was often chosen to offices of trust in his own town, and several times represented it in the State Legislature. He was also for two years, 1859 and 1860, counselor, under the administration of Governor Goodwin, and did effective service for the State at the breaking out of the Rebellion. In politics he was a Republican from the start.

Mr. Clark married the only daughter of the late Deacon James Perkins, of Londonderry. She was a woman of rare excellence of character, always striving to make their home happy by constant manifestations of affection and kindness. She died greatly lamented, July, 1881.

Two sons and two daughters survive them,—Joseph R. Clark, of Derry; Marianna, wife of Prof. W. H. Seaman, of Washington, D. C.; William, who resides on the homestead in Londonderry; and Sarah Elizabeth.

HON. GEORGE W. PATTERSON.

Hon. George W. Patterson was born at Londonderry, N. H., Nov. 11, 1799, and died at Westfield, N. Y., Oct. 15, 1879. He was the son of Thomas and Elizabeth (Wallace) Patterson, and the grandson of Peter and Grisel (Wilson) Patterson, of Londonderry, to which place Peter emigrated in 1737 from Bush Mills, County Antrim, Ireland. Peter was the great-grandson of John Patterson, who came from Argyleshire, Scotland, to Bush Mills about 1612, with a colony of Scotch emigrants. He and his family were at the siege of Derry, where one of his sons died from starvation.

The homestead at Bush Mills of this John passed from father to son for six generations. Of his descendants in the third and fourth generations, many of them came to America with the Scotch-Irish emigrants.

Governor Patterson's Patterson ancestry were farmers, and most of them linen-weavers and dealers holding prominent local positions. They were Scotch-Irish Presbyterians, strong in body and mind, able to defend themselves and their opinions.

Mr. Patterson, of our sketch, was a ready speaker and writer, with a wonderful memory of facts and dates, brimful of anecdotes, ever cheerful, hoping and looking for the right to succeed. He was of commanding presence (his weight being from two hundred to two hundred and twenty-five pounds), a particularly good presiding officer, which position he held two years as speaker of the Assembly, and two years as president of the Senate of New York. His services were always in demand as a speaker at political campaign meetings.

Among the legislative measures originated by him was the free banking law of New York, the original bill of which he drew, and which passed.

The main provisions of the free banking laws of the United States, giving the people a secured currency under governmental supervision, were taken from the New York law.

He closed his congressional term in his eightieth year, the year of his death. In politics he was a Whig and a Republican. In business he was successful.

Thurlow Weed, his political and personal friend for over half a century, the eminent journalist and politician of New York, in an article in the N. Y. Tribune, writes, ". . . All the elements and qualities which elevate and adorn human life were harmoniously blended in the character of George W. Patterson. His life was not only entirely blameless, but eminently useful. To those who knew him as I did no form of eulogium will be deemed inappropriate. As a citizen, as the head of a family, and as a public servant, he was a model man. In the discharge of legislative duties he was conscientious and patriotic. He was always in his seat, and no bad, defective, equivocal, or suspicious bill ever evaded or escaped his vigilant and watchful eye. He had troops of friends, and, so far as I know or believe, was without an enemy. In private life he was exceptionally faultless. Without making a proclamation of temperance, he was always a cold-water drinker. . . ."

His wife was Hannah W., daughter of John Dickey, Esq., merchant, of the West Parish, Londonderry. The last of his school education was had at the Pinkerton Academy, Derry, the first printed catalogue of which institution showing his own and future wife's names.

He was a school-teacher at Pelham, N. H., in 1817, and in 1818 engaged in the manufacture of fanning-mills, in which business he was largely interested for twenty-six years, mostly at his shops on his farm, near Moscow, in the town of Leicester, Livingston Co., N. Y.

He resided there till 1841, when he removed to Westfield, N. Y., to take the agency of the Chautauqua land-office as successor of Governor Seward, who succeeded the agent of the Holland Land Company at the Chautauqua office.

When the lands became reduced by sales Mr. Patterson bought the residue of lands and securities of the company, and continued the sales at the Westfield office till his death, when the title to the unsold lands passed to his only son. Mr. Patterson's only male descendant's son and grandson bear his name.

Governor Patterson commenced holding public office soon after his residence began at Leicester in 1824, and from that time till his death it was the exception that he was not in public service. At no time did he ever ask for an appointment or nomination, these positions coming unsolicited. When justices of the peace became elective he was chosen to that office, which he retained by successive elections till he removed to Westfield, the majorities in his town being generally on the side opposed to him in politics.

A summary of the offices held by Mr. Patterson is as follows:

He was commissioner of highways, school commissioner, justice of the peace, brigade paymaster, and supervisor of Leicester; was a member of the State Assembly eight years, the last two of which, 1839 and 1840, he was Speaker of the House; removed to Westfield, N. Y., in 1841, to take charge of the Chautauqua land-office; was appointed basin commissioner at Albany by Governor Seward, harbor commissioner at New York by Governor Clark, and quarantine commissioner for the port of New York by Governor Morgan; was a delegate to the National Republican Convention that nominated John C. Fremont for President, and to the National Republican Convention that renominated Abraham Lincoln for a second Presidential term; has been supervisor of Westfield three years; president of Westfield Academy and president of the Board of Education of Westfield many years; represented the county of Chautauqua in the State Constitutional Convention in 1846; was elected Lieutenant-Governor of the State of New York in 1848; and in 1876 was elected to the forty-fifth Congress as a Republican, receiving 16,910 votes against 10,601 votes for James Freland, Democrat. He was a director in the Buffalo and State Line Railroad from its organization, June, 1849, till its consolidation, May, 1867, and from that date till June, 1868, a director in the Buffalo and Erie Railroad, now a part of the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Railroad.

ROBERT CLARK MACK.

Robert Clark Mack was born in Londonderry, N. H., where he now resides, Dec. 31, 1818.

He is the son of Robert and Ann Clark Mack, of Londonderry, grandson of Andrew and Elizabeth (Clark) Mack, also of Londonderry, and great-grandson of John and Isabella (Brown) Mack, who came from the north of Ireland in 1732, and settled on the farm now owned by Col. W. S. Pillsbury. Their house stood directly opposite the dwelling of Mr. Aaron P. Hardy, and a few feet easterly of Mr. Hardy's store. A fine old elm still keeps "watch and ward" over the well from which the ancestral Macks drew the crystal fluid. R. C. Mack is a descendant through both the paternal and maternal lines of Robert Clark, an early settler of the English Range, in old Londonderry. He would have been a blacksmith had he followed the calling of his Mack ancestors, as that was the family trade as far back as their history can be traced; but that royal line of labor becoming extinct in the family when his father, the late Robert Mack, Esq., left the forge for the farm, about 1838, he chose the occupation of a farmer, which he has followed thus far in life. For his early education he is indebted to the common school, a term at Brackett Academy, in Greenland, N. H., and a term or two at the academy in Pembroke, N. H. This gave him sufficient education to instruct in the district schools.

In the winter of 1839-40 he taught a term in Bedford, N. H., and subsequently one in Londonderry, two in Chatham, Mass., one at Danvers, Mass., and two terms in Beverly, Mass. He has never overestimated his capacities for public office, and preferring the home fireside and his literary labors to the noise and clamor of political life, has given his fellow-townsmen no opportunity to encourage developments in that direction. Shortly after the establishment of the Smithsonian Institution at Washington, he made daily observations of the weather for the institution, sending monthly reports for several years. Upon the breaking out of the war of the Rebellion he made the draft-enrollment of Londonderry, Derry, Windham, and Salem, N. H., under appointment from the provost-marshal of the First New Hampshire District. In 1870 he was appointed consul at Londonderry, Ireland, by Gen. Grant, but was compelled to refuse the position on account of the declining health of his father, then rapidly approaching the end of his long life. The same year he compiled a volume of one hundred and twenty-four pages upon the Londonderry celebration, entitled "Exercises on the One Hundred and Fiftieth Anniversary of the Settlement of Old Nutfield." His tastes have led him into local history, but the laborers in this field are so few that they often enjoy a reputation beyond their attainments. Yet his is worthily given. Mr. Mack is a member of the New Hampshire Historical Society, and also of a like society in Oneida County, N. Y. March 6, 1856, he married Jane Duncan Patterson, daughter of Capt. Thomas and Hannah (Duncan) Patterson, of Londonderry, N. H. In this connection it may be added that Mr. Mack has prepared a comprehensive history of the Patterson and Wallace families, which is now nearly ready for the press.

JONATHAN SAVORY.

Londonderry." Jonathan Savory, whose portrait appears on another page, was born in Londonderry, May 7, 1812. He received a common-school education, and also took a course of instruction at the academy of Derry. He spent his youth on the farm, and became manager of his father's affairs at the age of fourteen, owing to his father becoming an invalid. When he was about twenty years of age his mother died. In 1833 he commenced teaching school, and taught twelve sessions in his native town. He walked a distance of five miles and taught school at the meagre salary of one dollar per day. On the 21st of March, 1836, he married Abigail, daughter of Nathaniel and Abigail (Scribner) Coffin. She was born on the 4th of January, 1814. They began housekeeping at his father's old homestead, which is still in possession of Mrs. Savory.

He entered militia service early in life, and went through every grade of promotion from private to colonel, which commission he held when he resigned at the age of twenty-four. Col. Savory was a successful man in life. He began life poor and amassed a competence; at the same time he commanded the respect, esteem, and confidence of all who knew him. He was selectman of his town three terms, represented his town in Legislature twice, and held various other town offices and positions of trust. He connected himself with the First Presbyterian Church about or previous to 1832. He was a trustee of Derry Bank, and was a representative farmer of the town. He was remarkable for candor and truthfulness; it is said his word was never doubted. He was strong in his convictions, in his attachments and friendships. He was reticent rather than voluble, yet quite sociable and agreeable. In personal appearance he was imposing and commanding. He died Feb. 2, 1881, leaving a devoted wife and large circle of warm and sincere friends to mourn his loss.

AARON P. HARDY.

Aaron P. Hardy was born Oct. 9, 1815, in Londonderry, N. H. His father was Daniel Hardy, born in Bradford, Mass., and his mother Sarah (Conner) Hardy, born in Pembroke, N. H., and daughter of Joseph Conner, a merchant, trader, and farmer of that town. Daniel Hardy moved to Londonderry in 1802, and kept tavern several years. Aaron had but limited common-school education; his parents were poor, and he was early taught to earn a living. When only eleven years old he was hired out, first season at three dollars per month for six months, and second season at four dollars and a half a month. He continued with his father until about eighteen years old, when he went to make shoes with Joshua Austin, working six months without compensation for a knowledge of the trade. He then returned to his father's. The tools necessary to start shoemaking cost about ten dollars, while young Hardy had but one dollar and a half; but, not discouraged, he went to Haverhill, and the men for whom he had made work advanced him stock to make up, and also a few tools, such as they happened to have on hand. He also chanced to think of an unused set of tools in a neighbor's house, and succeeded in buying on credit about three dollars' worth. With this outfit he went to work with a friend, McGregor, making shoes. By working fourteen hours per day he could make three pairs. His father had given him his time, and he boarded with his father, paying his board. The first ten-dollar bill he ever owned went, six for a stove and four for a pipe; his employers had voluntarily advanced his wages one cent a pair. Upon settlement one year from the time he commenced work he found himself the possessor of fifty dollars net, and he says he was richer then than he has ever been since. This money he loaned to a neighbor at six per cent. interest, and, except when he has invested in real estate, has ever since had money at interest. He worked for this shoe-firm ten years, had an apprentice, and, with increased pay, was soon able to earn from one and a half to two dollars per day. When about twenty-one he had about four hundred dollars. There was a small farm of thirty-five acres to be sold, buildings out of repair, etc., and it was offered to Mr. Hardy for six hundred dollars. To secure a home for his parents he bought it, and during dull seasons would repair the house. He soon purchased another adjoining lot of fourteen acres woodland, and in about two years had it all paid for. He continued at work shoemaking, and putting his money at interest. A neighbor having his barn blown down by a storm, offered his farm, five acres, for sale for five hundred dollars. Mr. Hardy bought it, fitted it up, and exchanged it for a fifty-acre farm, paying seven hundred and fifty dollars' difference,—two hundred and fifty dollars cash and five hundred dollars on credit.

The next spring, May 5, 1842, he married Adelia W. Brickett, daughter of Jonathan and Lydia (Kent) Brickett, and commenced housekeeping. The year for which Mr. Hardy had contracted expired in October. Mr. Hardy had two men employed, and had left most of his funds in the hands of George T. Whittier. In September they failed, settling for twenty-five cents on the dollar. Times were dull, price dropped from twenty cents to twelve cents, and Mrs. Hardy to help her husband along braided hats at seven cents apiece, and earned fifty dollars in ten months. In the spring of 1843 he had only a side of buff leather to show for his winter's work. He then made a proposal, which was accepted, to take charge of the poor farm at the following salary: first year one hundred and seventy-five dollars for himself and wife, second year one hundred and ninety dollars, third year two hundred dollars, fourth year two hundred and twenty-five dollars, fifth year two hundred and fifty dollars, sixth and seventh years three hundred dollars per annum. He then moved back to firm one year, then selling his farm commenced making shoes again, renting a house of Esquire John N. Anderson. Soon after this his father was taken lame and unable to do his work, and Mr. Hardy removed there so as to take care of his parents and carry on farm; lived there six years, then purchased the Watts place, sixty acres, where he now resides. The buildings had all been destroyed by fire. In three years' time he had erected the buildings, with some unimportant exceptions, that now stand there, and moved to the place September, 1859. His father and mother came with him; the former only lived about six months longer, the latter about seven years. He has pursued the avocation of farmer ever since, and for some ten years past has been in trade, first as Hardy & Pillsbury, then as A. P. Hardy & Son. He has also been engaged in lumbering almost every winter, and has also dealt in real estate. In politics he is a Republican. In religion both he and wife are Presbyterians. He owns about eight hundred acres of land in Londonderry, several houses, and half of two stores at Derry Depot. They have four children,—George H., born May 24, 1851; Hattie E., now book-keeper in Pillsbury shoe manufacturing establishment at Derry Depot, born Jan. 17, 1854; John P., born Sept. 13, 1855; and Frank A., born Nov. 10, 1865.

FRANCIS MANTER.

Francis Manter, son of George Manter, was born in Londonderry, Dec. 2, 1797. His father, George Manter, was born Oct. 16, 1767, in the old town or Plymouth, Mass., where he grew up to manhood, and then removed to South Londonderry, N. H., settled on a small farm of about sixty acres, and married Mary Senter, born July 17, 1765, daughter of Samuel Senter. After a few years he removed to North Londonderry, and settled the place now occupied by Francis. His children were Francis (whose portrait appears on another page), Samuel, Alden (deceased), David (deceased), Mary (deceased), and Parnell (deceased). Mr. Manter was a farmer and mill-owner, and was quite a successful man for his day. Mrs. Manter died Feb. 22, 1860, and eight days later was followed by her husband, he dying March 1, 1860. Francis received only a common-school education, was reared to hard work on farm and in the mill, and at twenty-one years of age the management of the farm devolved upon him. He married, Feb. 3, 1820, Harriet Crowningshield, of Salem, Mass. Their children were George (born Aug. 22, 1824), who became a physician and enlisted in the army as assistant surgeon during the war of the Rebellion. He served through the war, and died July 7, 1870, leaving three children,—George F., now a dentist, and also post-master at Cape Cod; Corey, now a merchant in Providence, R. I.; and Olivia. Harriet, born Oct. 28, 1829. She married James M. Platts, and resides in sight of the old home. They have four children living.—Clarence, born June 26, 1856; Harriet, born Nov. 6, 1858; Mary, born Jan. 9, 1867; Florence, born Oct. 8, 1870. Mary F., born May 6, 1837. She married George Platts. Their children are Ida, George, Frederick, Nathaniel, and Floyd. Mrs. Manter died July 4, 1858, and he married for his second wife Elizabeth A. Smith. There were no children by this marriage.

When Francis Manter was sixteen years of age he was drafted for the war of 1812. They were sent to Portsmouth, where they remained only fifty-five days, when they were discharged, and Mr. Manter returned home. Upon the death of their father the two brothers, Francis and Samuel, divided the farm, but have continued joint owners and operators of both the saw- and grist-mills to the present time. Previous to 1844, Francis engaged in shoe manufacturing, in which he was very successful both alone and in company with his sons-in-law. He has also been eminently successful as a farmer and in lumbering. He owns much real estate in the city of Manchester, and erected a block of ten tenements at a cost of ten thousand dollars on Pearl Street in that city. Mr. Manter started in life with the small inheritance of about five thousand dollars, and by his energy, economy, and industry, coupled with a shrewd, cautious financial ability, has succeeded in amassing wealth. He has the reputation of being one of the wealthiest men in Londonderry. In politics he is a Republican. He has never sought office, though he has represented his town in the Legislature, and has held a commission as justice of the peace fifty years.

SAMUEL MANTER.

Samuel Manter, younger brother of Francis, was born March 29, 1799. Like his elder brother he received only such educational advantages as the schools of his native town afforded, and was early taught the truth of the motto "Labor Omnia Vincit." On March 27, 1823, he married Isabella Reid, daughter of David Reid, of Londonderry. She was born Jan. 14, 1798, and died Aug. 23, 1874. Their children were Mary Ann, born Jan. 6, 1824; Samuel, born Nov. 24, 1825; Isabella, David, James (triplets), born July 19, 1828; Clarissa, born Aug. 8, 1841. Of these, David died in infancy, and James died March 16, 1856. Mary Ann married William P. Emerson, of Londonderry, a carpenter and millwright. They have six surviving children, —William, John, Mary Ann, Sarah, Clarissa, and Ida.

Mr. Manter has been a very successful man as a farmer. He is now, at eighty-three years of age, spry, hale, and active, quick of perception and understanding, and in possession of all his faculties, his sense of hearing being as acute as it ever was in his younger days. He enjoys the esteem and respect of his acquaintances, and while he has never labored to accumulate vast wealth has an ample sufficiency of this world's goods to surround himself in his old age with all the comforts he may desire.

CHAS. EDWARD YOUNG.

Chas. Edward Young, son of Israel and Esther (Stevens) Young, was born in Manchester, N. H., Nov. 25, 1821. His grandfather, James Young, was also a resident of Manchester. Israel was reared a farmer, which business he followed through life. He married Esther Stevens in 1819; was a public-spirited citizen, an enterprising, honest man, and after having spent most of his life in the town of Manchester, removed, a few years prior to his death, to Londonderry, where he died May 13, 1848. Mrs. Young survived him several years, and died at the age of sixty-eight. Charles E. was reared a poor boy, and received very limited educational advantages, being hired out to work on farm during most of his boyhood years. At the age of eighteen he learned shoemaking, and worked at that trade until two or three years after his marriage, when he turned his attention exclusively to farming. He married April 13, 1848, Sarah D., daughter of David and Sarah Davis Gilcrest. She was born in Londonderry, N. H., Sept. 5, 1816. They commenced house-keeping by hiring one room in the old Gilcrest family home, where they remained about two years, when Mr. Young purchased the Deacon Fisher farm of sixty acres, and removed thither. He made this place his home for a period of seventeen years, then purchased, in conjunction with his brother, the Anderson farm, to which place he removed. After about seven years he and his brother divided the farm. He then bought the Dickey farm, to which he removed, and which has since been his home. He has always been a firm Democrat in politics, and, belonging thus to the weaker political party, has been by that means virtually barred from holding office, though his fellow-townsmen have shown their estimation and appreciation of him as a citizen by urging him to become a candidate for selectman, and giving him a very complimentary vote (ahead of the strength of his party).

Mr. Young is a quiet, unostentatious man, of sterling integrity and honest purpose, never stooping to trickery or deceit to advance his interests, but observing strictly the golden rule in his intercourse with his fellow-men. He is a man of whom it may be said, "he dares to do right." Would there were more such men!

Mrs. Young comes of an old and respectable family. The Gilcrests came originally from Dracont, Mass. Her father, David G., was a blacksmith and farmer. He continued to work at his trade until about fifty years of age, when he gave up blacksmithing, and devoted himself exclusively to farming. Mrs. Young was educated at Pinkerton Academy, at Derry. They have no children, but they have by their harmonious and united efforts succeeded in surrounding themselves in their old age with all the comforts of a pleasant home, and have a sufficiency of this world's goods to insure them a comfortable and independent old age.

STRAFFORD COUNTY, NEW HAMPSHIRE.

GEOGRAPHICAL AND DESCRIPTIVE.

STRAFFORD COUNTY lies in the southeastern part of the State, and is bounded as follows: on the north by Carroll County, on the east by York Co., Me., on the south by Rockingham County, and on the west by Rockingham and Belknap Counties.

The surface of the southern part of the county is generally level and the soil fertile, while the northern towns are rugged and better adapted to grazing. The county is watered by the Lamprey, Bellamy, Cochecho, Isinglass, and Salmon Falls Rivers, which furnish an abundance of water-power.

Organization of the County.—Strafford County was organized by an act of the Colonial Legislature, passed March 19, 1771, and embraced in addition to its present territory the present counties of Belknap and Carroll. Conway, from Grafton County, was annexed to Strafford in 1778. The county retained its original territory until Dec. 23, 1840, when Belknap and Carroll were set off, the former taking eight towns and the latter fourteen. The county consists of thirteen civil subdivisions, as follows: Barrington, Dover, Durham, Farmington, Lee, Madbury, Middleton, Milton, New Durham, Rochester, Rollinsford, Somersworth, and Strafford.

CHAPTER LXXXIX.

BENCH AND BAR.<sup>3</sup>

ONE of the earliest lawyers in Strafford County was JOHN WENTWORTH, JR., a native of Somersworth, and second son of Hon. John Wentworth. He was born July 17, 1745. He was a graduate of

Harvard College in 1768; studied the profession of the law with Judge William Parker, of Portsmouth, and settled in practice in Dover in 1771. In 1773, on the organization of Strafford County, he was appointed register of probate, and held the office as long as he lived. He was early known as a zealous Whig. In 1774 he was one of the town committee of correspondence, and in 1777-78 was a member of the State Committee of Safety. In December, 1776, he took his seat as a representative in the Legislature, and was retained in the office until 1781; from that time to December, 1783, he served in the Executive Council, and from June, 1784, to June, 1786, in the State Senate. In March, 1778, he was chosen delegate to the Continental Congress, and sat therein the greater part of the ensuing summer. On the 8th of August in that year he affixed his signature to the Articles of Confederation. He resigned his place on account of delicate health, and though he was twice re-elected to Congress, he did not again take his seat. He was a man of solid talents, and in his profession was a peace-maker. He always tried to prevent litigation and to bring parties who were at variance to an amicable adjustment of their differences. In this he was frequently successful, and saved money to others, though he gained little himself. But he had no desire for much property. He was upright and benevolent. With such a character it is not surprising that he was so constantly trusted with important public functions. He died of consumption, Jan. 10, 1787.

JONATHAN RAWSON, son of Rev. Grindall Rawson, was born in Yarmouth, Mass., in 1759. In the Revolutionary army he held some subordinate position, and afterwards studied law with Peter Greene, Esq., at Concord, and began to practice first at Nottingham, but in 1785 removed to Dover. He possessed good talents and ready wit, and acquired some professional business, but had no great fondness for the law, preferring to read poetry and fiction. While he lived at Nottingham he delivered an oration in commemoration of the capture of Burgoyne and his army, which was never printed. His taste for military matters was marked. He was an aide to President Sullivan, and in 1793 published a work entitled "A Compendium of Military Duty" in an 8vo volume. He died in Dover at the age of thirty-five years.

HENRY MELLEN, a son of Rev. John Mellen, and a brother of Chief Justice Mellen, of Maine, was born in Stirling, Mass., Oct. 24, 1757. He was brought up on a farm, but his native taste for study led him, at the age of twenty-two, to prepare himself for college, and he received his degree at Harvard in 1784. His legal studies were carried on under the eye of Peter Greene, Esq., of Concord, and in the autumn of 1786 he established himself as a practitioner in Dover. He built up an excellent professional business, though he excelled as a counselor rather than as an advocate.

But his literary taste was predominant. In 1798 he delivered an oration before the Freemasons, which was published. His facility for witty and ready versification gained him much applause, and his services in that field were much in request. One of the best of his poetical effusions, prepared for some festive political gathering, was entitled "The Embargo," and was issued on a broad sheet, with a picture of a turtle and the motto, "I'm retiring within myself." He was the wit and poet of the Federal party, as Moses L. Neal, Esq., was of the Republicans. Mr. Mellen was of a social disposition, and was a prominent member of the Masonic fraternity, whose meetings in his time partook more of a convivial character than at present. He died of a paralytic attack July 31, 1809.

WILLIAM KING ATKINSON was a son of William King, of Portsmouth, where he was born in 1764. He had his name changed to Atkinson by act of the Legislature, that being the condition of a devise to him by an uncle of a valuable estate. He graduated at Harvard College in 1783, and entered the office of Judge John Pickering, of Portsmouth, as a law student. In 1786 he opened an office in Berwick, Me., and the next year removed to Dover. In 1788 he received the appointment of register of probate, and retained the office more than thirty years. In 1789 he was commissioned solicitor of Strafford County. He enjoyed for many years a very large and lucrative law practice. In 1791 he delivered an address on the Fourth of July, which was published. In 1803 he was appointed a justice of the Superior Court, but, after holding the office about two years, he resigned it upon the ground of the inadequacy of the salary. In 1807 the Governor and Council conferred upon him the office of attorney-general, which he held until 1812.

Judge Atkinson died in Dover, September, 1820. He had fallen in his later years into lax and irregular habits, but by nature, and in early life, he was well qualified for his profession. He was of large stature and good looks, and possessed a superior share of ability; moreover, he was industrious, attentive to business, and had the capacity to accomplish a good deal of work. He argued causes with force, and had an unusual amount of professional learning.

CHARLES CLAPHAM was English by birth, and is said to have served as a midshipman on board a man-of-war. He received his legal instruction in the office of Jonathan Rawson, Esq., in Dover, and was admitted to practice in 1788, choosing Dover as his residence. He had previously taken a wife. It is probable that he formed a professional connection with Mr. Rawson, as in 1789 they were elected together as attorneys of the town. He probably lived in Dover less than ten years, and is said to have re-entered the naval service, and to have died an officer of a man-of-war.

DAVID COPP, JR., was a son of David Copp, of Wakefield, and was born about 1770. He was educated at Phillips' Exeter Academy, and received his law tuition in the office of Hon. W. K. Atkinson, of Dover, in which place he lived from about 1797 to 1804. He is said to have emigrated subsequently to New Orleans, where he assumed another name, and afterwards died.

DANIEL MESERVE DURELL was a son of Nicholas Durell, of Lee, and was there born July 29, 1769. He was a graduate of Dartmouth College, in the class of 1794, and after reading law with Henry Mellen, Esq., established himself in Dover in 1797. He was a member of Congress from 1807 to 1809, and represented Dover in the State Legislature in 1816, in which year he received the commission of chief justice of the Circuit Court of Common Pleas, which he held until 1821, and then resumed his legal practice. He also held the post of district attorney of the United States for New Hampshire from 1830 to 1834. His death occurred at Dover, April 29, 1841.

OLIVER CROSBY was born at Bellerica, Mass., March 17, 1769; his father bore the same name. He graduated from Harvard College in 1795, and went through his course of professional study under Judge William K. Atkinson's direction. He entered upon the practice of the law in Dover about 1798, and continued there near a quarter of a century. He did a handsome business in collections, etc., but could not be called eminent as a lawyer. He and Judge Atkinson being interested in lands in the new town of Atkinson, in Maine, he went there to live about the year 1821, and practically gave up his profession. He became the owner of large quantities of lands in that vicinity, and died in Atkinson July 30, 1851, much respected for his integrity and usefulness.

SAMUEL TEBBETS was the son of Maj. Ebenezer Tebbets, of Rochester, and was born in 1780. After passing through the preparatory studies at Phillips' Exeter Academy, he entered Harvard College in 1795, and graduated in course. In 1802 he began as an attorney to practice in Dover, but was destined to a short life. He died, unmarried, of consumption, in 1830.

Henry Mellen, in one of his poems, alluded to him as "courteous and neat as a newly-made glove."

MOSES HODGDON, a native of Dover, was a son of Shadrach Hodgdon. He entered Harvard College and nearly completed his course there, but never received his degree. Judge W. K. Atkinson was his law tutor, and he commenced practice in Dover not far from the year 1800. In 1801 he delivered a Fourth of July oration there, which was printed. For a short time after this he was in Exeter, but resumed his practice in Dover by 1808, and ever after remained in that place.

He was a counselor of no little learning, and of sense and sound judgment, but made no show in court. He was one of the first lawyers in this State to contribute to the literature of his profession. In 1806 he published a stout 8vo volume, with the title "The Complete Justice of the Peace, containing Extracts from Burns' 'Justice' and other Justiciary Productions," etc. The work was anonymous, but being well understood to be the production of a careful, painstaking lawyer, was in general use as a manual for professional purposes, until it was superseded by Chief Justice Richardson's "Justice."

Mr. Hodgdon is described as a very upright man, and a cautious and safe adviser. He was very nice and precise in his ways, being also a bachelor, and a little sensitive sometimes on that subject. He died Oct. 9, 1840, in Dover.

MOSES LEAVITT NEAL, a native of Hampton in 1767, was a son of John Neal. After his graduation from Harvard College, in 1785, he taught schools and academies for some years, then read law with Hon. John Prentice, of Londonderry, and in 1793 commenced practice in that town. Three years after he went to Rochester, where he stayed about ten years, and then, about 1806, took up his residence in Dover. There he taught a select school for two or three years. In 1809 he was elected clerk of the New Hampshire House of Representatives, and was annually re-elected to the office until 1828, with the exception of two years during the war of 1812. In 1816 he was appointed by the court register of deeds for the county of Strafford, and continued to hold the position by successive elections till his death, Nov. 25, 182

Mr. Neal was no advocate, and could have done but a moderate share of business in his profession. He was sometimes harassed by creditors. Like most men who have depended chiefly upon political office for support, he found it a precarious resource, which conducted neither to his happiness nor to his self-respect.

He had a ready talent of versification, which he employed much to the amusement of his own political party, and sometimes to the indignation of his opponents. He was a zealous Republican or Democrat, and Henry Mellen was as earnest a Federalist, and they were the political champions of their respective parties in those times of strong political feeling. Neal dealt in personalities far more than Mellen, and consequently made enemies at a time of life when friends were most needed.

CHARLES WOODMAN, son of Rev. Joseph Woodman, was born at Sanbornton, Jan. 9, 1792. At the age of five years he lost his right hand by an accident. In 1813 he graduated from Dartmouth College. Studying law with his brother, J. H. Woodman, Esq., and with Hon. Christopher Gove, he opened an office in Dover, in 1816. He was a representative in the Legislature in 1820, 1821, and 1822, and in the last of these years was speaker. The same year he was a candidate for Congress, with every probability of being elected had not death intervened. He died Oct. 30, 1822.

He was an industrious, persevering lawyer, shrewd, and acquainted with human nature. He had social, generous qualities also, which secured him a wide circle of friends and admirers. His early decease was regarded as a serious calamity to the community.

ASA FREEMAN was born at Hanover, Jan. 9, 1788, and was a son of Hon. Jonathan Freeman. He was a graduate of Dartmouth College in 1810, and then pursued the study of the law with his brother, Peyton R. Freeman, Esq., of Portsmouth, and with Isaac Lyman, Esq., of York, Me., and at first began practice in the latter place. Soon, however, he changed his domicile to Dover, and there resided from 1818 to the time of his decease, Dec. 8, 1867. He was a member of the New Hampshire Constitutional Convention of 1850, a United States commissioner by appointment of Judge Story, and in 1862 received the position of register of probate, which he held so long as he lived. He was a lawyer of highly respectable talents, and a worthy and estimable gentleman of the old school.

DANIEL M. CHRISTIE,<sup>1</sup> LL.D.—Daniel Miltimore Christie was born in Antrim, N. H., Oct. 15, 1790, of that Scotch-Irish race whose sturdy virtues have so distinguished that noble old town, and have been illustrated in the character and achievements of the men and women of southern New Hampshire. He labored on a farm in his earlier years, and without the aid of wealth or powerful friends, after overcoming the obstacles usually encountered by farmers' sons in that early day, he entered Dartmouth College in 1811, and was graduated there in 1815, at the head of a class of great distinction, of which he was the last surviving member.

He studied law in the office of James Walker, of Peterborough, three years, and commenced practice in York, Me. At York and South Berwick he practiced till 1823, when he removed to Dover, N. H., where he ever after resided.

Mr. Christie entered upon professional life with great zeal and energy, and rapidly rose in the estimation of the bench, the bar, and the public. He was a contemporary of Jeremiah Mason, Jeremiah Smith, Daniel Webster, Ichabod Bartlett, and George Sullivan, being about twenty-five years the junior of Smith and Mason, and but few years younger than the others. In the early years of his professional life those great men not infrequently appeared in the trial of causes in Strafford County, and the old courthouse still stands in Dover which witnessed the stirring struggles of these intellectual gladiators.

With such high examples before him and such high rivalries and contentions to stimulate him, he "must," in the language of Mr. Webster, "have been unintelligent indeed not to have learned something from the constant displays of that power which he had so much occasion to see and to feel." That he profited much from this intercourse and contention of kindred minds there is abundant evidence in his rapid and sure ascent to a high professional eminence. There are many proofs of the high respect with which all these great men, whose marvelous powers gave dignity and lustre to the bar of New Hampshire in its golden age, regarded him and his attainments. Mr. Christie continued in the full practice of the law in Dover for about fifty years, engaged in nearly every important case tried in the county up to the year 1870, many years after the great luminaries of the law—the contemporaries of his early life—had sunk below the horizon. Mr. Christie died Dec. 8, 1876, with faculties entirely unimpaired, and in the full enjoyment of the respect and veneration of the entire community. He had been successful in every respect, and acquired fame and an ample fortune. For many years before his death he was the undisputed leader of the New Hampshire bar, and his widely-known and universally-acknowledged ability, integrity, and dignity of character conferred honor upon the State and city of his residence.

He had but little relish for public life and never sought political office, although his political principles and convictions were of the most decided character, and he took a deep interest in all great public questions. He was, however, elected to the Legislature as early as 1826, and during the next forty years he was returned to that body eleven times from the town and city of Dover. This was about the full extent of his holding public office. But since he never refused the summons of the public to any duty, and was more than once a candidate for high station, it must be said that his exclusion from the higher walk of official life was mainly due to his want of accord during nearly his whole life with the political sentiments which controlled the State in which he lived. Though many regrets have been expressed that the doors of preferment were thus closed upon a man so highly fitted for public service, it is certain that this exclusion from the councils of the nation cost Mr. Christie no pang of regret, and that never for one moment did it occur to him to secure that recognition which his great abilities merited by any subserviency to sentiments and methods which his reason and conscience did not accept. It was his constant aim, never forgotten, and his rule, never violated, to preserve his personal rectitude as the richest treasure any man can possess.

Mr. Christie's faculties were unfolded and his distinction gained by unremitting diligence and labor. He did not reach his ultimate greatness as some men of phenomenal genius do, at a bound, but his was a steady growth and laborious ascent to the table-lands of the law. Through a long series of arduous exertions he "ever great and greater grew," until the leadership in the front rank of his profession was accorded to him by the universal voice of the bench and bar in New Hampshire. He was undoubtedly a man of extraordinary endowments, but these had been wonderfully cultivated, improved, and invigorated by the industry of a long life given to the law, with entire singleness of heart and purpose.

The degree of Doctor of Laws was conferred upon Mr. Christie by his Alma Mater in 1857, and his acknowledged eminence as a jurist is abundantly attested by the offer on two occasions of the chief justiceship of the Supreme Court of New Hampshire, a court which can boast that a Smith, a Richardson, a Parker, and a Perley have occupied its highest seat. But he declined judicial station, although none can doubt that he would have filled and adorned it with consummate learning, wisdom, and integrity.

Any sketch, however brief, of Mr. Christie's character would be imperfect and unjust to his memory which should omit to call attention to the high ethical tone of his professional life. He was the very embodiment of a high professional morality. He had a profound reverence for the law, and a conscientious fidelity to his client and his cause. He had also a great respect and deference for the bench, and was above the meanness of attempting to influence courts or juries improperly, or to secure approval of his views by any other means than the soundness of his argument and the justice of his cause. No man ever more scrupulously kept the oath, and every part of it, which an attorney takes when he assumes the duties of his office.

He employed his efforts and influence to raise and purify the character of the profession, to enforce justice and obedience to law, and to promote the highest interests of the community. He believed a lawyer's honor was his brightest jewel, and to be kept unsullied, even by the breath of suspicion. He was straightforward, honorable, and sincere in all his dealings. He had no covert or indirect ways. He had no arts but manly arts, and in respect to these traits was a model fit for universal imitation.

Mr. Christie's career in other spheres of business entitled him to the honor and respect of men in quite as full measure as he won them for himself in his chosen profession. He was president and director for many years in several of our largest banking and other corporations, and discharged his responsibilities in those capacities with the same industry and fidelity to his trust which actuated him elsewhere. He was in his time the master-spirit of them all, and impressed upon them all the stamp of his own sturdy integrity, solidity, and soundness.

Mr. Christie was happy in his domestic life. He married Mrs. Dorothy Dix Woodman, a daughter of John Wheeler, Esq., and widow of Hon. Charles Woodman, of Dover, who was Speaker of the New Hampshire House of Representatives, and died Oct. 31, 1822, at the age of thirty.

Mr. Christie had six daughters and no sons, viz.: Mary Spalding, who married Col. John W. Kingman, colonel of the Fifteenth New Hampshire Volunteers in the war of the Rebellion, and since United States judge of the Territory of Wyoming, and died Dec. 16, 1866, leaving five children; Sarah Jane, wife of Col. Samuel C. Fisher, of Dover, N. H.; Helen Marr, who died, unmarried, Aug. 9, 1853, at the age of twenty; Lizzie Wheeler, wife of Hon. Robert I. Burbank, of Boston; Rebecca Harris, who died, unmarried, Jan. 15, 1882, at the age of forty-three; and Emma Josephine, wife of Frank Hobbs, Esq., a very brilliant lawyer of Dover. Charles Woodman, Esq., of Dover, for many years treasurer of the Strafford County Savings-Bank, is the son of Mrs. Christie and stepson of Mr. Christie.

In the circle of home Mr. Christie was always sweet, kind, considerate, and indulgent. His family regarded him with boundless love and reverence. The private life of many a man of genius is a domain which cannot be entered with safety or prudence or delicacy. How different with Mr. Christie! Here is no forbidden ground,—and his kinsmen and friends are full of gratitude to God that here was a great and famous man, one of the very ablest ever produced in New Hampshire, upon every hour and act of whose private life and intercourse with men and women the light of noonday might be turned, with microscopic power, and find no stain or impurity. That he was upright, exemplary, and decorous before the world, all knew. But he was more. He was sound and sweet to the core. He had a singular, almost infantile, guilelessness of mind and cleanness of speech and imagination. The inevitable contact with vice and depravity, which came to him through the varied experiences of a long life spent in attending to the concerns of others, had left him pure and innocent and uncontaminated. He was like "the sun, which passeth through pollutions and itself remains as pure as before." In this respect he was fortunate above most men. Suspicion never assailed his private life, and slander fled abashed from his presence.

Mr. Christie did not retire from active practice till he was upwards of eighty years of age. His last years were happy and honorable to the last degree. The harness of his busy professional life laid off, he sat down in the evening of his days by his own fire-side, surrounded by affectionate daughters and friends, and occupied and delighted his great mind by perusing some of the enchanting English authors, whose enjoyments had been denied him by the cares and exactions of a busy career. Until almost the last hour of his long and useful life his intellectual strength, his interest in affairs, and his capacity for enjoyment had suffered no apparent abatement. Endowed by nature with a vigorous constitution, capable of great and prolonged labor, and temperate, upright, and abstemious in his habits always, he had had scarcely an hour of sickness during his entire life, and up to the very day of its fall there were no signs of dilapidation in that stately edifice. His noble presence was in our streets, and he was the venerable object of all men's respect and regard. And so, after a life of honor, of integrity, of strenuous exertion, all crowned by a renown sufficient to fill, and which did fill and satisfy a reasonable ambition, he passed away full of years and honors. In his native town and State, and especially in the city of his adoption, which was honored so much by his long residence in it, his name and memory will always be cherished and revered, as one of the greatest and purest men who has ever lived among us.

THOMAS ELLWOOD SAWYER, a son of Stephen Sawyer, was a native of Dover, his birth occurring Nov. 21, 1798. He studied law in the offices of Hon. Charles Woodman and Hon. James Bartlett, and was admitted to the bar in 1825. Prior to this time, in 1822, he had been assistant clerk in the lower branch of the New Hampshire Legislature. His residence continued in Dover throughout his long life. His political career began in 1830, when he was elected a member of the Executive Council. He was again chosen in 1831, and between the years 1833 and 1850, he was elected ten times a representative to the General Court. In 1850-51 he was a member of the convention to revise the Constitution of the State, and in 1851 and 1852 was the nominee of the Whig party for the office of Governor. In 1867 he was appointed a United States register in bankruptcy.

He was also prominent in the affairs of Dover, was moderator of its town-meetings for many years, served for half a century upon its school committee, and after the adoption of a city charter, was chosen mayor in 1857, and subsequently held the office of city solicitor for three years.

Mr. Sawyer was a man of deserved popularity. His standing was unimpeachable, and his abilities were far above the average. As an adviser in legal or political matters he stood among the wisest, but he made no display. He had a constitutional diffidence which stood in the way of his becoming an advocate or a public speaker. His judgment, ability, and fairness were such, however, that he obtained a very large share of employment as auditor and referee. He lived to be one of the oldest, as he was one of the most respected, members of his profession. His death took place in Dover, Feb. 27, 1879.

JOHN HUBBARD WHITE, son of Amos and Sarah White, was born in Dover, N. H., Nov. 30, 1802. He received his education in the public schools there and at the Wakefield (N. H.) Academy, where he was fitted for college. He graduated in Bowdoin College in 1822, and among his classmates were Hawthorne, ex-President Pierce, and William Hale, of Dover. He then studied law in the offices of Charles W. Cutter and James Bartlett, of his native town, and in 1825 was admitted to the bar of Strafford County. In 1826 he opened a law-office, and continued in the practice of his profession up to the time he was stricken by his fatal illness. In September, 1828, he was appointed postmaster of Dover, and served until May 19, 1829; was representative to the New Hampshire Legislature in 1833-34. He was member of the board of selectmen of the town of Dover in 1844; chosen register of probate in 1849, and remained in office eight years; was first judge of the Police Court of the city of Dover, being chosen April 8, 1853, and serving to June 26, 1857. He died Sept. 7, 1882.

RICHARD KIMBALL was born March 1, 1798, and was the son of Nathaniel Kimball, of North Berwick, Me. He was a student in the Phillips Exeter Academy, and went through his preparatory professional course in the office of Hon. Asa Freeman, and it is believed at the law-school in Litchfield, Conn. He was admitted to practice at about the age of thirty years, and settled in Dover, for a short time having the editorial charge of the Strafford Advertiser. He removed to Somersworth in 1829, thence to Rochester in 1835, and back to Dover in 1848. In Rochester he was the agent of a manufactory of flannels for a time.

After his return to Dover in 1857 he received the commission of judge of the Police Court, and performed the duties of the office for about ten years. He did not desire professional business at that period, but passed much of his time on his farm outside the city of Dover.

He was regarded as a sound and well-read lawyer, and an excellent citizen. The later years of his life he passed with his relatives in or about Boston, and his death occurred at Dover, March 2, 1881.

JOHN PARKER HALE<sup>1</sup> was born in Rochester, N. H., March 31, 1806. His father, John P. Hale, was a lawyer of much ability and influence and great personal popularity, who died in 1819, at the age of forty-two years, leaving a large family in limited circumstances, the subject of this sketch being then but thirteen years old. As a boy he was popular among his fellows, active, loving sport, quick to learn, courageous, kind, and free from vindictiveness, qualities which adhered to him through life, making him very popular in the community in which he lived, and in the counties where he practiced at the bar, and commanding the good will and respect of the men whom his convictions led him to oppose. After such education as was to be had in the schools of his native village he had the benefit of Phillips' Exeter Academy in his preparatory studies for college, and graduated at Bowdoin in 1827.

Mr. Hale, on leaving college, entered upon the study of the law in the office of J. H. Woodman, Esq., of Rochester, and completed his studies with Daniel M. Christie, Esq., of Dover, where he had the advantage of the instruction of one of the ablest lawyers ever at the bar in the State. He began to practice in Dover in 1830, and for about forty years was the nearest neighbor of his old instructor, who was always one of his warmest friends, although the two were generally pitted against each other in all the leading cases in court, and differed much of the time politically. They finally came together, however, the one from the stand-point of an anti-slavery Whig, and the other from that of a Democrat with anti-slavery tendencies.

Mr. Hale at once took high rank at the bar, and was noted for his tact and skill in handling witnesses, and his great power with a jury. Of all the advocates who practiced at the bar of the old county of Strafford, Ichabod Bartlett, of Portsmouth, is the only one remembered who equaled him in skill with witnesses, or possessed that wit and humor, burning indignation and touching pathos which was often brought out in his appeals to the jury. His practice rapidly extended outside his own county into Belknap, Carroll, and Rockingham. In 1834, Mr. Hale was appointed United States district attorney by Gen. Jackson, and was reappointed by President Van Buren.

In all his ideas Mr. Hale was democratic and jealous of every encroachment upon popular rights. As a lawyer he contended for the right of the jury to be judges of the law to be applied to the case, as well as of the facts, and protested against their being instructed how they must construe and apply the law by the judges, leaving them only to find a verdict on the facts. He won reputation as a lawyer outside the bar of New Hampshire in the Supreme Court at Washington, and in the celebrated fugitive slave rescue cases in Boston. When Shadrach was rescued in 1851 from the court-house in Boston by Lewis Hayden and others and sent to Canada, great excitement arose over the country, and especially in Washington, where the President issued a proclamation commanding "all officers, civil and military, and all well-disposed citizens in the vicinity of the outrage to assist in capturing the rescuers and quelling all similar combinations." The Senate took up the matter on a resolution of Mr. Clay's calling on the President for information, and a special message was received in answer, with the facts, and assurances that the law should be executed. The debate which followed was fierce and exciting, many senators participating. Mr. Hale said he thought "the President felt pretty sure he had made the administration ridiculous by his proclamation, and had sent a labored essay to vindicate what could not be vindicated." Hayden and Scott, the leaders in the rescue, were indicted and tried, but the jury failed to agree, notwithstanding the character of the testimony and the strong charge of the judge. Mr. Hale, who was the leading counsel for the defense, made one of the most notable efforts of the times, addressed to the jury and the country. When the case of Anthony Burns came up in Boston, three years later, there was still greater excitement. Theodore Parker, accidentally hearing of the arrest, with difficulty got access to the man, and with the aid of counsel, whom he notified, procured a continuance that Burns might make defense. An immense meeting was held in Faneuil Hall to consider what the crisis required. A party who were too impatient to wait for the slower plans of the Anti-man-hunting League with a stick of timber battened down the outer doors where Burns was confined. The garrison in-side made a stand in the breach, and one of the marshal's assistants, James Batchelder, was killed. The noise drew the police to the scene, and the accident of a military company marching into the court-area, returning from target practice, being mistaken for a company of marines coming to strengthen the garrison, the attacking party did not feel strong enough to follow up their first success, and the rescue failed. The President ordered the adjutant-general of the army to Boston, and the troops in New York were kept under orders to march upon call, in addition to other preparations to prevent a rescue.

Indictments were found against Theodore Parker, Wendell Phillips, Martin Stowell, Thomas Wentworth Higgins, and others, some for murder, and others for assault and riot, mainly for the speeches they made at the Faneuil Hall meeting. Mr. Hale was again secured as leading counsel for the defense, assisted by Charles M. Ellis, William L. Bart, John A. Andrew, and Henry F. Durant. The indictments broke down, and the parties were never brought to trial. Theodore Parker afterwards published the "defense" he had prepared, and dedicated it to his lawyer, John P. Hale.

From the time of his graduating Mr. Hale took great interest in political matters, and in 1832, two years after commencing the practice of law in Dover, was elected to the Legislature, at the age of twenty-six. Having identified himself with the Democratic party, he became one of its most able and eloquent supporters, and in 1843 was elected a representative to Congress, on a general ticket with Edmund Burke, Moses Norris, Jr., James H. Johnson, and John R. Reding. On the assembling of Congress in December an exciting debate arose on the report made by John Quincy Adams, chairman of the committee on rules, which left out the famous twenty-first rule, known as the gag rule, that had been adopted in 1828 by a resolution introduced by Mr. Atherton, of New Hampshire, which required that "every petition, memorial, resolution, proposition, or paper touching or relating in any way, or to any extent whatever, to slavery or the abolition thereof shall, on presentation, without any further action thereon, be laid on the table, without being debated, printed, or referred." During the debate Mr. Hale, with Hamlin, of Maine, and a few other Democrats, avowed their opposition to the longer suppression of the right of petition. The report was laid on the table, and the rule continued by a small majority. It had originally been adopted by a vote of about two to one. This was the beginning of Mr. Hale's anti-slavery action in Congress, which was destined to bring him so conspicuously before the country.

In the Presidential campaign of 1844, Mr. Hale took an active part. He distinguished himself as a political speaker, and contributed much to the success of his party. The question of the annexation of Texas had exercised a controlling interest in the South, from the necessity it saw of obtaining more slave territory if they would maintain their power in view of the growing anti-slavery sentiment in the North, which was beginning to affect the action of Democrats. Mr. Clay had lost the State of New York, and with it the election, in consequence of his hesitating position of opposition to the measure, which sent enough Whig anti-slavery votes to have elected him to Birney. Mr. Hale was known to be opposed to annexation, as were many other New Hampshire Democrats, but no opposition was made to his re-nomination to Congress, as fealty to that measure had not yet become a shibboleth of the party, as it did soon after. On the assembling of Congress, in December, 1844, the advocates of annexation at once entered upon the work for its consummation. President Tyler, in his message, called for immediate action, and during that month several schemes for annexation were submitted. In part to show the pro-slavery character of the movement, and to fix a western limit beyond which slavery should not go, Mr. Hale, on the 10th of January, moved a suspension of the rules, to enable him to introduce a proposition to divide Texas into two parts, by a line beginning at a point on the Gulf of Mexico midway between the northern and southern boundaries, and running in a northwesterly direction. In the territory south and west of that line it was provided that there should be neither slavery or involuntary servitude; and that the provision was to remain forever an inviolable contract. The motion had a majority of eleven, but failed to receive the requisite two-thirds. The necessities of the South now made it necessary to suppress all opposition to the scheme of annexation. The election had put the control of the government in the hands of its friends, and all its patronage was to be wielded to secure that result. The Legislature of New Hampshire was in session, as was then the custom, every winter of the presidential year, to provide electors in case of failure to elect by the people, and resolutions were at once introduced and pushed through favoring annexation, and instructing the delegation in Congress from the State to sustain it. "Obey or resign" had long been a Democratic doctrine in the State; and while most of the members might not so have understood it, the leaders were aiming at Mr. Hale, who had favored that doctrine. He met these resolutions with defiance. He stood by the record he had made against any further strengthening of the slave power, while mortified to see so many of his associates going down before it, among them the editor of the Democratic paper in his own town, who had expressed the desire that an impassable gulf might forever exist to prevent annexation, while another leading Democratic editor declared the whole scheme "black as ink, and bitter as hell." It was a great step to take, and a less daring spirit would not have ventured it. Poor in property, with a family to support, the most popular man in his party, with power to command and ability to adorn any position his ambition might seek on the one side, with alienation of social and political friends, ostracism in business and politics, by a party which had for sixteen years had unbroken sway and remorselessly cut down every man who dared to oppose its declared will on the other, were the alternatives. Few men have shown such greatness of soul and loyalty to convictions under such temptations. While most men would have yielded, Mr. Hale did not falter, but at once wrote his celebrated letter to the people of New Hampshire against the action of the Legislature in its resolutions, in which, after setting forth the aims and purposes of annexation, and the reasons given by the advocates and supporters of the measure, he declared them to be "eminently calculated to provoke the scorn of earth and the judgment of heaven." He said he would never consent by any agency of his to place the country in the attitude of annexing a foreign nation for the avowed purpose of sustaining and perpetuating human slavery; and if they were favorable to such a measure, they must choose another representative to carry out their wishes.

The Democratic State Committee immediately issued a call for the reassembling of the Democratic Convention at Concord on the 12th of February, 1845, and every Democratic paper which could be prevailed upon to do so opened its battery of denunciation, calling upon the convention to rebuke and silence Mr. Hale. To show what efforts were made to crush him it need only be said that such leaders of the party as Franklin Pierce, who had been his warm friend ever since they were fellow-students in college, went forth over the State to organize the opposition. At Dover he called in the leaders of the party, and the editor of the Dover Gazette, who had taken such strong ground against annexation, and under their influence the Gazette changed sides and went over to Mr. Hale's enemies. He then went to Portsmouth and brought over the leaders there, with the exception of John L. Hayes, then clerk of the United States Court. The same result followed at Exeter, with the exception of Hon. Amos Tuck. In this way the convention was prepared to throw overboard Mr. Hale, and put another name on the ticket in place of his. Expecting no other fate when he wrote his letter, Mr. Hale remained at his post in Congress, and only assisted his friends from that point, making arrangements at the same time to enter upon the practice of law in New York City upon the close of his term. But resolute friends who believed with him rose up in all parts of the State to defeat the election of John Woodbury, who had been nominated in the place of Mr. Hale.

Prominent among these in addition to those named above were Nathaniel D. Wetmore, of Rochester; John Dow, of Epping; George G. Fogg, then of Gilmanton; James M. Gates, of Claremont; James Peverly, of Concord; John Brown, of Ossipee; George W. Stevens, of Meredith; John A. Rollins, of Moultonboro'; James W. James, of Deerfield; N. P. Cram, of Hampton Falls; and Samuel B. Parsons, of Colebrook, with others of like stamp, who organized the first successful revolt against the demands of the slave power, which until then had been invincible. Through their efforts Woodbury, the nominee of the convention, failed to secure the majority over all others needed to elect him, and another election was called to fill the vacancy. Great excitement pervaded the State during the canvass, into which Mr. Hale entered with spirit, giving full play to all those characteristics which made him the foremost orator of the State before the people as he had been before juries.

The canvass opened in Concord in June, on the week for the assembling of the Legislature in the old North Church. To break the force and effect of Mr. Hale's speech there, the Democratic leaders determined that it should be answered on the spot, and selected Franklin Pierce for the work. On his way up to the church Mr. Hale saw no people in the streets, and he began to fear there might be a failure in the expected numbers in attendance, as there had been once before in the same place in 1849, when he and other leaders of the party were to address a mass-meeting, but when he reached the old church he saw why the streets were vacant,—the people had all gone early to be sure of getting in, and the house was full to overflowing. Aware that he was addressing not only the citizens of Concord and adjoining towns and members of the Legislature, but the religious, benevolent, and other organizations which always met in Concord on election week, he spoke with more than his usual calmness and dignity. He created a profound impression, and made all feel, whether agreeing with him or not, that he had acted from a high sense of public duty and conviction.

Mr. Pierce, who had few equals as a speaker, saw the marked effect of Mr. Hale's address, and spoke under great excitement. He was bitter and sarcastic in tone and matter, and domineering and arrogant in his manner, if not personally insulting. The convention was wrought up to the highest pitch of excitement when Mr. Hale rose to reply. He spoke briefly but effectively, and closed by saying,—

"I expected to be called ambitious, to have my name cast out as evil, to be traduced and misrepresented. I have not been disappointed; but if things have come to this condition, that conscience and a sacred regard for truth and duty are to be publicly held up to ridicule, and scouted without rebuke, as has just been done here, it matters little whether we are annexed to Texas or Texas is annexed to us. I may be permitted to say that the measure of my ambition will be full if when my earthly career shall be finished and my bones be laid beneath the soil of New Hampshire, when my wife and children shall repair to my grave to drop the tear of affection to my memory, they may read on my tombstone, 'He who lies beneath surrendered office, place, and power rather than bow down and worship slavery.'"

The scene which followed can be imagined but not described, as round after round of applause greeted this close. At the end of the canvass in September, with three candidates in the field, there was again no election. A second effort in November ended with a like result. No other attempt was made until the annual March election of 1846, when full tickets were placed in the field by the Democrats, Whigs, Free-Soilers, and Independent Democrats. The issue of no more slave territory was distinctly made, and a canvass such as the State had never known before, in which Mr. Hale took the leading part, resulted in a triumphant vindication of his course and the complete overthrow of the Democratic party, which was beaten at all points. Mr. Hale was elected to the House from Dover on the Independent ticket, and on the opening of the session was made Speaker of the House of Representatives, and during the session was elected United States senator for the full term of six years. During this session of the Legislature an incident took place which exhibited the independent spirit of the man. Dr. Low, a member from Dover, introduced resolutions upon the tariff, slavery, and annexation, taking the ultra-Whig view of the tariff question, and intended to bring Mr. Hale and his friends to their support as the condition upon which he could have the vote of a considerable portion of the Whig party. But instead of yielding his convictions for the consideration of their support, he and his friends declared they would submit to no shackles; they had fought successfully against the tyranny of one political organization, and no allurements of a senatorship should stifle their convictions and bind their judgment to the dictations of another. Much excitement followed, but the counsels of the liberal Whigs prevailed. The resolutions were not called up until after the senatorial election, when Mr. Hale left the Speaker's chair and offered amendments, which were adopted after a strong speech by him in their favor. He was supported by his old friend and instructor, Daniel M. Christie, of Dover, also a member of the House, who had done much to quiet the opposition and induce it to vote for Mr. Hale.

The hearts of the friends of liberty all over the country were filled with joy at the auspicious result of this first victory over the slave power after repeated, prolonged, and excited struggles both before the people and at the polls. Mr. Hale entered the Senate in 1847, and for two years stood alone with unflinching courage, battling the aggressive measures of the slave power with surpassing eloquence, keen wit, un-falling good humor, and boundless resources for any and every emergency. He drew the attention of the country during this session by the telling blows he struck for the great cause of human freedom, to which he dedicated all the noblest powers of his mature manhood. He stood fearless against every threat and all combinations. It was of his debates during his first senatorial term, after his return from Spain, broken in health, that Charles Sumner said to the writer, "Poor Hale! It is sad to see his manly form crippled and shrunken. He stood up bravely and alone before the rest of us got there to aid him, and said things on the spur of the moment that will last and be remembered when the labored efforts of the rest of us are forgotten." Chase, of Ohio, a sturdy son of New Hampshire, came to the Senate in 1849 to stand beside him, and two years later, in 1851, Sumner, of Massachusetts. They constituted a trio of great ability, but were treated as interlopers and refused positions on the committees of the Senate, for the reason, as alleged by Bright, of Indiana, that "they belonged to no healthy organization known to the country."

One of the first debates in which Mr. Hale distinguished himself after entering the Senate was on the admission of Oregon, when he proposed to add the ordinance of 1787 excluding slavery, which drew on a fierce debate. When accused of provoking a "useless and pestiferous discussion," he told them with his accustomed good-nature that he was "willing to stand where the word of God and his conscience placed him, and there bid defiance to consequences."

Early in April, 1848, the year of popular upheavings and revolutions in Europe, President Polk sent a message to Congress, announcing in glowing terms the uprising of the French people, the peaceful overthrow of the monarchy, and the establishment of a republic. Resolutions were introduced in the House of Representatives tendering their warmest sympathy with the struggling patriots, and expressing the hope "that down-trodden humanity may succeed in breaking down all forms of tyranny and oppression." Similar resolutions were introduced in the Senate. Speaking on the question in a sad strain, Mr. Hale said,—

"I have sometimes thought, in dwelling upon the history of this republic, that I have seen indications, fearful and fatal, that we were departing from the faith of our fathers; that instead of living true to the first principles of human liberty which we have proclaimed we were cutting loose from them; that the illustration we were about to give of the capability of man for self-government was to be the same as that of all other nations that have gone before us; and that after our failure the hope of freedom would indeed be extinguished forever. But in the dawning of this revolution in France I behold the sun of hope again arise, his beams of golden light streaming along the eastern horizon. I am now inspired by the hope that even if we fail here, if liberty should be driven from this her chosen asylum, the divine principle would still live and would find a sanctuary among the people of another land, and when our history shall have been written, and our tale told, with its sad moral of our faithlessness to liberty, boasting of our love of freedom while we listened unmoved to the clanking of chains and the wail of the bondmen, even then, in a continent of the Old World, light would be seen breaking out of darkness, life out of death, and hope out of despair."

There was a municipal celebration of this event in Washington, with torchlight procession and other outdoor demonstrations, the houses of the President and heads of the departments being illuminated. During these demonstrations the schooner "Pearl" came to Washington loaded with wood, and when she left took away seventy-seven slaves. Such an exodus caused great commotion, and an armed steamer was sent in hot pursuit, which overtook the schooner at the mouth of the Potomac and brought her back with her ill-fated company. The greatest excitement prevailed, and out of it came a mob, which, after partially exhausting its fury, started for the office of the National Era to destroy it, but were frustrated in their purpose. In Congress the excitement was as fierce and intense as outside. In the House the debate was especially bitter. In the Senate Mr. Hale offered a resolution, copied from the laws of Maryland, providing that any property destroyed by riotous assemblages should "be paid for by any town or county in the district where it occurs." Mr. Calhoun was "amazed that even the senator from New Hampshire should have so little regard for the Constitution of the country as to introduce such a bill as this without including in it the severest penalties against the atrocious act which had occasioned this excitement," . . . and he "would just as soon argue with a maniac from Bedlam as with the senator from New Hampshire on the subject." Foote, of Mississippi, denounced the bill "as obviously intended to cover and protect negro-stealing." Turning to Mr. Hale he said, "I invite him to visit Mississippi, and will tell him beforehand in all honesty that he could not go ten miles into the interior before he would grace one of the tallest trees of the forest with a rope around his neck, with the approbation of every honest and patriotic citizen; and that, if necessary, I should myself assist in the operation." Jefferson Davis and Butler, of South Carolina, joined in the attack upon him in the same strain, while he stood alone. Mr. Hale explained his purpose in introducing the resolution, and in replying to the assaults said, "The notes of congratulation sent across the Atlantic to the people of France on their deliverance from thralldom have hardly ceased when the supremacy of mob law and the destruction of the freedom of the press are threatened in the capital of the nation." Referring to Foote's threatened reception in Mississippi, he invited the senator to visit "the dark corners of New Hampshire, where the people in that benighted region will be very happy to listen to his arguments and engage in the intellectual conflict with him, in which the truth would be elicited." Turning to Calhoun he said, "It has long been held by you that your peculiar institution is incompatible with the right of speech; but if it is also incompatible with the safeguards of the Constitution being thrown around the property of the American citizen, let the country know it. If that is to be the principle of your action, let it be proclaimed throughout the length and breadth of the land that there is an institution so omnipotent, so almighty, that even the sacred rights of life and property must bow down before it. There could not be a better occasion than this to appeal to the country. Let the tocsin sound; let the word go forth." He further told Calhoun that it was "a novel mode of terminating a controversy by charitably throwing the mantle of a maniac irresponsibility upon one's antagonist." Adjournment closed the discussion, and the Senate refused to take it up afterwards.

In December, 1850, Mr. Foote, of Mississippi, introduced a resolution declaring it to be the duty of Congress to provide territorial government for California, Deseret, and New Mexico. Mr. Hale offered an amendment that the ordinance of 1787 should be applied. It was during the debate which followed that Mr. Webster made his 7th of March speech. During the discussion Mr. Hale occupied two days in an argument vindicating the measures and acts of the anti-slavery men. Replying to Mr. Webster, he said, "Yet the senator declares he would not re-enact the laws of God. Well, sir, I would. When he tells me that the law of God is against slavery, it is a most potent argument why we should incorporate it in a territorial bill."

In closing he said, "And firmly believing in the providences of God, we trust the day will dawn in this country when the word 'slavery' shall be a word without a meaning, . . . when any section of the Union will join hands with another in spreading abroad the principles of humanity, philosophy, and Christianity, which shall elevate every son and daughter of the human race to that liberty for which they were created and for which they were destined by God. These opinions, sir, we entertain, and these hopes we cherish; and we do not fear to avow them, here, now, always, and forever."

Mr. Hamlin and Mr. Hale presented petitions for the repeal of the Fugitive Slave Act, one of which was referred to the judiciary committee. A debate sprung up on a motion for reconsideration, which gave rise to a spirited controversy. Butler, of South Carolina, declared he "was tired of casting impediments in the stream of anti-slavery agitation; they might as well attempt to put a maniac asleep by lullabies." Mr. Hale in reply said "agitation was the great element of life. It gave birth to the Revolution and the Constitution, and none but those who hug fatal errors have anything to fear from that life-giving element, which will impart its healing as did the waters at the beautiful gate of the temple when the angel had gone down and stirred them. . . . As for myself, I glory in the name of agitator."

The period of greatest interest in Mr. Hale's senatorial career centres around his first term, when he stood alone, or almost alone, in the thick of the conflict, undaunted, and dealing blows to the oppressor on every side. There were no weak places in his armor, and neither threats, attacks, or allurements could shake his constancy. When this term expired the Democratic party had obtained control in New Hampshire; but two years later, in 1855, they lost it, and Mr. Hale was again elected for four years, to fill a vacancy occasioned by the death of Charles G. Atherton. He was again re-elected for a full term in 1858. He was conspicuous in this term for his integrity and fearless independence in exposing the maladministration and extravagance of the navy department, while acting as chairman of the naval committee of the Senate.

Mr. Hale was nominated as the Free-Soil candidate for the Presidency in 1847, but declined after the nomination of Mr. Van Buren at the Buffalo Convention in 1848. He was again nominated for President by the Free-Soil Convention in 1852, with George W. Julian for Vice-President, and received at the November election 155,850 votes.

At the close of his senatorial career, in 1865, Mr. Hale was appointed minister to Spain by President Lincoln, and was absent five years, much of the time in ill health. He came home with a broken constitution. His health, which had always been perfect up to the time of the well-remembered National Hotel sickness, was never so good afterwards.

He lived to see the full triumph of his efforts to rid the land of slavery, and the freedmen placed as citizens with the ballot under the protection of the Constitution, and died Nov. 19, 1873, bearing with him the blessing of millions who had been raised from the sorrow and degradation of human servitude, and of millions more who had admired his unselfish fidelity to the cause he had espoused, and his unwavering integrity.

CHARLES WILLIAM WOODMAN is a son of Jeremiah H. Woodman, Esq., and was born in Rochester, Dec. 7, 1809. His law studies he completed under the tuition of his father and others, having graduated at Dartmouth College in the class of 1829. He opened an office in Somersworth in 1833, but removed to Dover the next year, and has resided there ever since. He was solicitor for Strafford County from 1839 to 1844; judge of probate from 1846 to 1853; judge of the State Circuit Court of Common Pleas from 1854 to 1855, when the court was abolished. He has represented the city of Dover in the General Court in the years 1861 and 1862, and again in 1878 and 1879. He has long been a commissioner of the Circuit Court of the United States, and is still in full practice in Dover.

FRANCIS COGSWELL belonged to a family of some note in New Hampshire and Massachusetts. He was born in Atkinson, Dec. 21, 1800, and was the son of Dr. William Cogswell, an officer in the Revolution. Graduating from Dartmouth College in the class of 1822, he chose the law for his profession, and read in the office of Stephen Moody, Esq., of Gilmanton. He made his first essay in practice in Tuftonborough, then changed to Ossipee, and in 1834 went to Dover as clerk of the courts. In 1842 he quitted the law, and was agent of a manufacturing corporation in Andover, Mass. Subsequently he became cashier of a bank, and later a director of the Boston and Maine Railroad. In 1856 he was chosen president of that corporation, and administered its important affairs for twelve years with ability and prudence. He held various positions of trust, and was much esteemed and respected. He died Feb. 11, 1889, at Andover.

JOHN H. SMITH was a son of John Smith, of Rochester. He studied law in that place with J. H. Woodman, Esq., and entered the practice at Centre Harbor in 1824. Staying there but a short time he went to Conway for a while, and then returned to Rochester, where he resided until 1838, and then moved to Dover. While in Rochester in 1832 he was chosen a representative in the General Court. In 1841 he received the appointment of clerk of the courts in Strafford County, a position which he retained through his life. He was killed in the terrible railroad collision at Meredith, Oct. 7, 1852.

GEORGE THOMAS WENTWORTH, son of Isaac Wentworth, was born at Dover, Oct. 17, 1814, and was an attorney-at-law in that place for many years. He also held the office of town clerk from 1845 to 1850, and that of postmaster under Presidents Tyler and Fillmore. He died July 3, 1874.

AMASA ROBERTS, son of Ephraim Roberts, of Farmington, was born there March 2, 1814. He took his bachelor's degree at Dartmouth College in 1838, and studied the profession of the law in the office of Hon. Charles W. Woodman, of Dover. There he began practice and permanently resided. He was town clerk of Dover from 1853 to 1856, and register of probate in 1867 and 1868. He died in Dover, May 8, 1877.

LUTHER DEARBORN SAWYER, son of Timothy Sawyer, was born in Wakefield, March 7, 1803. He was educated at Phillips' Exeter Academy and Bowdoin College, from which he graduated in 1828. His profession he studied with Messrs. Sawyer & Hobbs, and he was admitted to practice in 1832. He began business in Ossipee, and remained there, with the exception of about a year that he was in Sandwich, until 1859, when he removed to Dover. There he continued about four years, and then went into Massachusetts, where he held the office of trial justice, returning afterwards to his native town of Wakefield, where he still resides.

Mr. Sawyer was postmaster of Sandwich many years; was assistant clerk of the New Hampshire Senate in 1846; solicitor of the county of Carroll from 1857 to 1862, and repeatedly by special appointment afterwards; and representative in the State Legislature in 1859 and 1860.

He is among the oldest members of the bar in the State, but is blessed with vigorous bodily and mental powers, and still practices his profession.

JOHN RILEY VARNEY was descended from a vigorous ancestry. William Verney, or Varnie, of Ipswich, Mass., the immigrant ancestor, died in Salem, Mass., in 1654. His son, Humphrey Varney, was "received an inhabitant" in Dover, N. H., Aug. 2, 1659. He married Sarah, daughter of Elder Edward and Catharine Starbuck. Their son, Peter Varney, was born in Dover, March 29, 1666-67. His son, Benjamin Varney, married Mary Hussey as early as 1720. Their son, Moses Varney, born about 1724, was married in 1750 to Esther Chick. Among their children was Moses Varney, born May 10, 1762; married, in 1782, Mercy Cloutman. Of their ten children was James Bowdoin Varney, born in Rochester, N. H., July 17, 1784; died in Dover, March 22, 1838. He married, April 14, 1812, Sarah Byles, daughter of John and Mary Riley, of Dover. The fourth of their seven children was John Riley Varney. He was born in Dover, March 26, 1819. The house where he was born stood on what is now the extension of Washington Street, opposite the new No. 3 mill. His early education was in the public schools of Dover. He then became a clerk in the store of Messrs. Alden & Morse, but soon determined that he would have a college education, and for this purpose he entered the Franklin Academy of Dover, fitted for college, went to Dartmouth, and graduated in 1843, taking the first or second position for scholarship in his class. While in college he taught school during his vacations, and after his graduation taught in the Franklin Academy for two years. He then took up the occupation of civil engineer, and continued in it for ten years. Here the very strong mathematical bent of his mind had full play in the solution of those problems which enter into the laying out of railroads. He was employed for a considerable time in surveys and measurements for a route through the great forest region of New York.

In 1856 Mr. Varney became clerk of the court for Strafford County, remaining in office four years. He was then chosen professor of mathematics in Dartmouth College, in which position he remained three years. His extraordinary capabilities in this department of science were very fully conceded. But it was with him as it was with others of like greatness in mathematical science,—as it was with Prof. Chase, of Dartmouth, and Benjamin Pierce, of Harvard,—his mind worked with great intuitive rapidity, leaping at conclusions over vast distances, which to the ordinary student in mathematics must be slowly bridged by successive stages of proof and reasoning. In 1863 he was admitted to the bar, and became the partner of Hon. John P. Hale, of Dover. He served in this town as postmaster for four years. He was a member of the Legislature in 1856 and 1857, and was secretary of the Naval Committee at Washington in 1862 and 1863. He was register of probate from the death of William C. Woodman until 1874, and two years after was reappointed to the office. He also served the city as its police judge for five years, and as a member of the Board of Education for four years. In 1868 Mr. Varney became a joint proprietor and editor of the Dover Enquirer, and subsequently of the Daily Republican. These last three positions he was filling at the time of his death. He was also deacon of the First Church.

"These are the outlines," wrote Dr. George B. Spalding, in his discourse preached at the funeral of Mr. Varney, May 5, 1882, "which mark the course through which the public life of Mr. Varney for these forty years has run, without ambition at all commensurate with his powers, or at all equal to the services which he has rendered to this community in every department of its interests, he has served on with diligence, with faithfulness, leaving a record which will shine brighter and brighter through the days to come, of a life of true manliness, consistency, and purity.

"Mr. Varney bore about with him two natures, and they were most singularly opposite. He was large in physical stature, but every nerve tingled with life. He was as active in body as any child, buoyant and bounding in step. And that other nature, his intellectual, was built on the same grand scale as was his physical, but the fires beneath it were further down and burnt slowly. It took the winds of great occasions to breathe through the slumberous mass; and when they did, no man in all the community could flame out to better effect. If you turn the leaves of the Dover Enquirer, now and then you will strike an editorial which is really masterful in the force of its logic, in the fullness of its fact and information, in the clearness and felicity of its language, and the eloquence of its appeal. Articles written for the Christmas weeks of the Enquirer's issue, in beauty of thought, in rhythmic flow of words, in tender pathos, and rejoicing faith are gems in literature. His mind was logical. His judgment was clear. His opinions were unmistakable. He had an intense zeal for any cause he represented, for he carried to an unusual degree his moral and even religious convictions into every cause he espoused. It was the moral part in him that kindled into heat and activity his intellectual forces. He believed that his party was right, hence he battled for it with an intensity that provoked personal opposition. He believed that his church was right, hence he was loyal to its every interest, to its very name, down to the core of his being. He believed that his friends were good, hence he was impatient and indignant when others spoke aught against them. And yet in all the antagonisms which he met or challenged there was no bitterness in his soul, no lingering vindictiveness in any part of his nature. He had a love for everybody, and some of the more special acts of kindness were performed for those who had sought to do him injury. He was a man of purest taste, of cleanest speech. He abhorred profanity, irreverence, and impurity of every kind. He was pitiful and charitable to an uncommon degree. In his office of police judge he had very large discretion granted him in his adjudication of criminal cases. More than the judge on a higher bench he had opportunities to mingle mercy with justice. It was not the majesty of the law that he kept so much in mind as the moral saving of the culprit. I have been told by others, who knew him in this very important sphere of our public interests, that often, when as magistrate, he sat like one inflexible, when nothing else could move him, the tale of suffering which further examination disclosed would melt his heart. How many poor sinners have found their discharge from him, as with hearty, touching tones he has said, 'Don't do it again.' His last official act, which was performed within an hour of his death, was a judicial decision in which the kindly instincts of his heart triumphed over the undue severities of the law in the case. 'Blessed are the merciful, for they shall obtain mercy.' How soon was the beatitude accomplished for him!

"There was a rare combination in him of natures which are too opposite to be often found in union,—the strong, logical reasoning and the quick sensibilities. But these were early developed in Mr. Varney, and were easily recognized by others, each distinct and superior of its kind, but most harmoniously blended. In his college days he was both the mathematician and the poet of his class.

"How much of this richness in his nature was fed by his religious faith I cannot say, but his religious faith had done much for him, and to some of us had been doing a very noticeable work during these few years past.

"Into what mellowness he was ripening! Into what childlike simplicity of spirit and faith! Christ was the central sun in all his speculations and forms of belief. He held at last no formularies of faith, or philosophies of salvation, or human systems of the indisputable facts and truths of revelation; he held none of these human theories with any great tenacity of belief. But Christ was all and in all to him, sufficient for all needs, his and the world's."

Mr. Varney at the age of sixty-two, May 2, 1882, in the full maturity of his powers and usefulness met death in an instant, under the falling walls of the Washington Street Free-Will Baptist Church, which had been burned a few hours before. The great concourse of people (every place of business in the city being closed) which attended his funeral at the First Church, three days after, was an evidence of the great respect which all classes had for him while living, and of their deep sorrow for him when dead.

CHARLES BURNHAM SHACKFORD was the son of Samuel B. Shackford, of Chelsea, Mass., and was a graduate of Bowdoin College. He pursued his law studies in the office of Hon. Samuel M. Wheeler, of Dover, and at the conclusion thereof commenced practice in that city. He was assistant clerk of the New Hampshire House of Representatives in 1864 and 1865, and clerk of the same in 1866 and 1867. In 1876 he was appointed solicitor of the county of Strafford, and under the revised Constitution was elected in 1878 and in 1880 to the same office. He died Jan. 2, 1881, at the age of forty years, having won an enviable reputation as a lawyer and a man.

JOHN SELLIVAN, son of an educated emigrant from Ireland of the same name, was born in Somersworth, Feb. 17, 1749. With the advantages of such education as his father could personally give him, he studied law with Hon. Samuel Livermore, of Portsmouth, and practiced successfully in Durham. He manifested a taste for military affairs, and, in 1772, held the commission of major in the militia. In 1774 his position pointed him out as a fit delegate to the first Continental Congress, and in December of the same year he, in co-operation with John Langdon, led a raid against Fort William and Mary, at the mouth of the Piscataqua, and carried off therefrom one hundred barrels of gunpowder, which afterwards furnished ammunition to the patriot troops at Bunker Hill. In June following he was appointed by Congress a brigadier-general in the Continental army, and after a year of service, major general. He took part in the siege of Boston; in the battle of Long Island, where he was taken prisoner; in the successes of Princeton and Trenton; in the engagements of Brandywine and Germantown; and he had the chief command in the operations in Rhode Island, and in the victorious expedition against the Indians in 1779. By reason of impaired health he then resigned his commission, and was honored with a vote of thanks by Congress. Returning to New Hampshire, and to the practice of his profession, he was in 1780, and again in 1781, returned to Congress. In 1782 he received the appointment of attorney-general of New Hampshire, and retained the office till 1786, during which time he was also a member of the State Constitutional Convention, in 1784, and Speaker of the House of Representatives and State counselor in 1785. In 1786 he was chosen president of New Hampshire, and held the office that and the succeeding year. While president, in 1786, he rendered good service to the State in quelling a "paper money mob" which threatened to subvert the government. In 1788 he was again Speaker of the House, and president of the convention which ratified the Constitution of the United States, to which his personal exertions and influence largely contributed. In 1789 he was again elected president of the State, and in September of the same year was appointed by Washington district judge of the United States, which office he held until his death, Jan. 23, 1795.

Gen. Sullivan was a prominent figure of the Revolutionary era. His influence weighed strongly in committing his native State upon the side of resistance to the encroachments of Great Britain. He was a deserving rather than a fortunate general, but he always retained the confidence of Washington, a rare judge of merit, and of the people of his own State, who knew him best. He was impulsive, brave, and patriotic, and made many sacrifices for his country. He was an able and successful lawyer, and an attorney-general sans reproche and sans peur also, as was evidenced by his intrepid conduct in sustaining the court against the insurgents in Cheshire County in 1782. In all times of trial he was found firm and unshaken. The important part that he bore in gaining our liberties and in shaping the organic law of the State and the nation, as well as in launching the government and piloting it through the perils of novelty, entitles his memory to the highest respect and gratitude of his successors.

EENEZER SMITH was a native of Durham, born in March, 1758. Gen. John Sullivan was his law-preceptor, and he established himself in practice in his native town as early as 1787. In the years 1788, 1793, 1794, and 1795, he was a member of the Executive Council of the State, and in 1798 he is said to have received and declined the appointment of associate justice of the Superior Court.

He maintained through life a highly respectable standing in his profession and as a citizen, and died at Durham, Sept. 24, 1831, at the age of seventy-three; having held for twenty years the office of president of the Strafford County bar.

JONATHAN STEELE was a son of David Steele, of Peterborough, but was born in Londonderry Sept. 3, 1760, and on the "Prentice place" it is believed, which is mentioned in the notice of Hon. John Prentice in the history of Rockingham County. He attended the town schools, and later an academy, and studied law in the office of Gen. John Sullivan. Admitted to the bar in 1787, he began to practice in Durham, and the next year married Lydia, the daughter of Gen. Sullivan. He became a lawyer of prominence, and was studious and attentive to the interests of his clients. His style of address to the court and jury was clear and energetic.

When Gen. Sullivan was appointed judge of the United States District Court, in 1789, he made Mr. Steele its clerk, and upon the judge's death his successor, Judge Pickering, continued him in the office. When the latter lost his position by impeachment

Mr. Steele was appointed district attorney, but declined the office.

In 1805 he represented Durham in the State House of Representatives, and in 1810 he was appointed by Governor Smith a justice of the Superior Court. This office he resigned in 1812 and returned to his private practice. He died in Durham Sept. 3, 1824.

Mr. Steele was a man of superior talents, and devoted himself to his professional pursuits. He was successful as a lawyer, and realized a handsome competency. But his life was not a happy one by reason of his domestic trials, which rendered him in his later years indifferent to society and to matters around him.

STEPHEN MITCHELL was a native of Peterborough, born March 29, 1780, and a son of Benjamin Mitchell. He was a graduate of Williams College in 1801, and studied law with his uncle, Hon. Jonathan Steele, of Durham. In due time he commenced practice in the same town. He was a man of talents and standing, and was esteemed a good lawyer. Besides his legal qualifications, he had considerable historical and literary tastes. He used to write communications for the newspaper press; and when Lafayette visited the State, in 1825, Mr. Mitchell was appointed by his townsmen to make him an address on his arrival at Durham, which duty he performed in a very handsome and appropriate manner. He was one of the original members of the New Hampshire Historical Society. His wife was Sally, daughter of Maj. Joseph Mills, of Deerfield, an officer in the First New Hampshire Regiment in the Revolution. Mr. Mitchell's death occurred Feb. 15, 1833.

JAMES BARTLETT, son of Dr. Joseph Bartlett, was born at Salisbury, Aug. 14, 1792. He took his bachelor's degree at Dartmouth College in 1812, and after studying law with Moses Eastman, Esq., and Parker Noyes, Esq., opened an office in Durham, but lived there but a few years before he received the appointment of register of probate for Strafford County in 1819, and removed to Dover, where he spent the remainder of his life. He was a representative from Dover in the State Legislature from 1823 to 1826, inclusive, and a member of the Senate in 1827 and 1828. He died in Dover, July 17, 1837.

Mr. Bartlett was gifted with fine talents, but lacked ambition. In the language of one of his professional brethren, he had "a good deal of latent power, but did not love work." And, like too many others well endowed by nature, he fell into irregular habits, and failed to accomplish the useful part in life of which he was capable.

RICHARD ELA was born in Lebanon, and was a son of Joseph Ela, of Portsmouth. He studied his profession under the direction of Hon. W. M. Richardson and Hon. Ichabod Bartlett, and entered the practice at Durham as early as 1820. There he continued about twelve years, when he removed to Washington, D. C. He was a man of ability, and while in practice reported the trial of Amos Fernald for murder, which was published in 1825.

JOHN ADAMS RICHARDSON was a son of Joseph Richardson, and born in Durham, Nov. 18, 1797. He was a graduate of Dartmouth College in 1819, and after teaching for a year in Haverhill, Mass., read law in the office of Hon. John Varnum, of that place, and began practice in his native town in 1823. There he remained to the end of his long life. Mr. Richardson, upon the State being carried in 1843 by a coalition of the Whig and Free-Soil parties, was chosen clerk of the Senate, but was not re-elected, as the Democrats returned to power the next year.

He maintained through life a high character for integrity and ability, though his business was never very large, and he rarely appeared in the trial of causes in court. His manners were dignified and agreeable, and he enjoyed the friendship and esteem of his brethren in the profession and of all who knew him best.

NEHEMIAH EASTMAN, a son of Ebenezer Eastman, was born in Gilmanston, June 16, 1782. He pursued his preparatory studies at Gilmanston Academy, and read law in the office of Stephen Moody, Esq., and of Hon. John C. Chamberlain. In 1807 he commenced practice in Farmington, where he ever after resided. He represented that town in the General Court in 1813, and was chosen State senator five successive years, 1819 to 1824, and in 1825 was elected a representative in the Congress of the United States, and served two years. His death took place Jan. 19, 1856.

Mr. Eastman held a good position in his profession, and for many years enjoyed a very large business. His diligence and laborious habits would hardly be credited in these degenerate days. He often was in his office by four o'clock in the morning, and did not leave it until ten o'clock at night. He made a great number of writs, most of them, of course, in cases not contested. But he did not often engage in trials in court.

LOUIS BELL, the youngest son of the Hon. Samuel Bell, of Chester, was born in that town, March 8, 1837. He was educated at Derry and Gilford Academies and at Brown University, from which he graduated at the age of eighteen. Having gone through the usual preparatory law studies, he opened an office in Farmington in 1857, and soon began to make his mark in the profession. He was appointed justice of the Police Court of Farmington in 1859, and July 2, 1861, received the commission of solicitor for the county of Strafford, and soon after changed his residence to Dover.

But before this time his services were required in another capacity. When President Lincoln's first call for seventy-five thousand men to suppress the Southern Rebellion was issued, Mr. Bell at once offered his services to the Governor of the State, and was appointed captain of Company A in the First Regiment. On his return home he received the commission of lieutenant-colonel in the Fourth Regiment, and was afterwards promoted to the colonelcy of the same. He served with much distinction in South Carolina and Florida, and afterwards in the Army of the James in Virginia. He was here assigned to the command of a brigade, and led it in the successful assault on Fort Fisher, N. C., in which he received a mortal wound. President Lincoln, in recognition of his gallant services in the field, conferred upon him the rank of brigadier-general, dating from the day of that assault.

He was a brave and patriotic soldier, a scholar of high attainments, a lawyer of thorough training and great promise, and his early death was a sad blow to his family and friends, and a public loss.

AMASA COPP lived in Milton from five to eight years, beginning in 1815, and then removed to Wakefield, where he passed the rest of his life, and died Jan. 7, 1871. He was born in Wakefield, Oct. 8, 1788, and received his degree of A. B. from Dartmouth College in 1811. After completing his studies with Hon. W. K. Atkinson and Amos Kent, Esq., he opened an office for a few months in Chester, and then removed to Milton in 1815.

He was gifted with uncommon talents, and with application to his profession would have taken a high rank both as a counselor and an advocate. But he disdained hard study and preferred to rely on the inspiration of the moment for his law, and naturally his diligent opponents outstripped him. He had a herculean frame, loved out-door sports, and became a mighty fox-hunter. He used to say jocularly that he was captain of the swamp law, as Jeremiah Mason was of the common law.

He was representative of the town of Wakefield in the New Hampshire Legislature for six years.

DAVID STEELE was born Nov. 27, 1793, a native of Peterborough, and a son of Thomas Steele. He prepared himself for college, but an accidental injury to his spine not only prevented him from obtaining a collegiate education, but affected him physically throughout his life. He studied law with his brother, Hon. Jonathan Steele, and others, and commenced practice in his native town, but shortly after, in 1826, he removed to New Durham, and there continued till 1850, when he took up his residence in Dover. He was a prominent and successful practitioner, and filled several local civil offices. For the last few years of his life he was a confirmed invalid. He died at the residence of his son in Dover, July 6, 1882.

JOSEPH CLARK, a native of Columbia, Conn., and a son of Simeon Clark, was born March 9, 1759. He served in the Revolutionary army; was taken prisoner and carried to Halifax and to England. He graduated at Dartmouth College in 1785, and pursued a course of law study under Gen. Sullivan's direction, and then settled about 1788 in Rochester, where he remained about twenty-five years. In 1798 and 1801 he represented the town in the General Court, and in 1794 delivered a Fourth of July oration, which was published.

He left Rochester about 1813 and returned to his native State, and died of apoplexy at East Hartford, Conn., Dec. 21, 1828.

JOHN PARKER HALE, a son of Samuel Hale, was born at Portsmouth, Feb. 19, 1775. His law studies he pursued in the office of John Hale, Esq., and began practice in Portsmouth about as soon as he reached his majority. A year or two later he changed his residence to Barrington, and thence about 1801 to Rochester, where the remainder of his life was passed.

He was a man of extraordinary readiness and aptitude for his profession. Without being a diligent or a learned lawyer, he had a sufficient practical knowledge of his profession, and held a leading position at the bar. His facility of apprehension and fertility of resources were so well known to his professional brethren that he was constantly applied to on occasions of emergency. He would sit down to the trial of a cause without preparation or instruction, take his facts from his associate's opening statement, and rely upon his general professional knowledge and his keen apprehension for his law, and argue the cause about as ably as any man of his time, it is said.

He lived in good style, was liberal in his dealings, and no financier, so that he was not always ready to meet the calls of his clients for money which he had collected. Sometimes they would go to him in a state of indignation, but he always received them so cordially that they went away without uttering a complaint. His tact and politeness were inexhaustible, as was his fund of entertaining anecdotes.

JEREMIAH HALL WOODMAN, born in Sanbornton, April 15, 1775, was a son of Rev. Joseph Woodman. He graduated at Dartmouth College in the class of 1794 with high honors, and after teaching an academy two years he received his law tuition in the offices of Hon. T. W. Thompson and Hon. Jeremiah Smith. Being admitted to the bar in January, 1799, he practiced successively in Warner, in Meredith, and in Rochester, where he finally established himself in 1806, and died there May 8, 1854.

He was a diligent, careful, and successful lawyer, and after bringing up his family handsomely left a comfortable estate. He was interested in the cause of education, and took pains to supply competent teachers in the public schools of his town. He was president of the board of trustees of Wolfborough Academy, which he was instrumental in founding. He was also interested in agriculture, and assisted in organizing the first agricultural society in Strafford County, acting for several years as its president. Though opposed to the majority of the citizens of his town in political opinion, he was chosen by them in 1823 and 1824 to represent them in the State Legislature.

Mr. Woodman was no promoter of litigation, but preferred to adjust the disputes of his neighbors amicably, and was highly respected and esteemed in the community where he dwelt. He died in Rochester, May 8, 1854.

DAVID BARKER, JR., was a son of Col. David Barker, of Stratham, and was born Jan. 8, 1797. Before he reached the age of eleven he entered Phillips' Academy at Exeter, and there went through the preparatory course of study, and graduated at Harvard College in 1815. He then entered the office of John P. Hale, Esq., as a student-at-law, and in 1819 set up in practice at Rochester. He early manifested an interest in political affairs, and was a representative to the Legislature from Rochester in the years 1823, 1825, and 1826; and in 1827 was elected a representative in the Congress of the United States, where he served one term. He died in Rochester, April 1, 1834, of a lingering illness.

As a lad he was precocious, and early developed the qualities which belong to maturity. His judgment and consistency of character were fully developed in his youth, and gave him the respect and confidence which is usually reserved for age. He was learned in his profession, diligent, and of integrity beyond question. It was well said of him by one who spoke from knowledge that "he was a ripe and finished scholar, and a sound, correct, and able lawyer." His early death deprived society of one of its most valued and promising members.

NOAH TEBBETS, born in Rochester, Dec. 26, 1802, was the youngest son of James Tebbets. He was a diffident boy, but fond of books. He was prepared for college in the academies of Wakefield and Saco, Me., and took his first degree from Bowdoin College in 1822. His law studies were pursued under the direction of J. H. Woodman, Esq., and when in 1825 he was admitted to the bar, he first established himself in Parsonfield, Me. There he practiced for seven years, at the end of which time he returned to Rochester and set up in business there. In 1842 he was a member of the New Hampshire House of Representatives, and in January, 1843, he was appointed a circuit justice of the Court of Common Pleas. The appointment was considered an excellent one in every respect. In point of learning, diligence, character, and judicial fairness, he was admirably adapted to a position on the trial bench.

But his career was destined to be a brief one. The confinement of his new office, especially during a tedious trial for murder, preyed upon his health, which was naturally slender, and symptoms of serious disease soon manifested themselves. He was compelled to adjourn a term of the court which he persisted in holding as long as his failing strength would permit, and to return home to a sick-bed, from which he never arose. At the early age of forty-one years his earthly career was closed, Sept. 9, 1844.

JOHN SMITH WOODMAN, born at Durham, Sept. 6, 1819, was a son of Nathan Woodman, and succeeded to a house built near two hundred years ago by his ancestor as a place of refuge from the attacks of Indians. He was a graduate of Dartmouth College in the class of 1842, and then went to Charleston, S. C., where he was engaged in teaching for four years. He then traveled a year in Europe, and on his return completed his legal studies with Hon. D. M. Christie, and was in practice for a year in Dover, and then for two years in Rollinsford. Receiving the appointment of Professor of Mathematics at his Alma Mater, he occupied that position from 1851 to 1855, and then resumed the practice of the law in Boston for a single year, after which he accepted the professorship of civil engineering in the Chandler Scientific School at Dartmouth College, which made him the chief executive officer, under the president, of that department, and to that position he gave his undivided energies so long as his physical strength enabled him to do so.

He at last felt compelled to resign the place, and returned to his ancestral home in Durham with a mortal illness which closed his life May 9, 1871.

Prof. Woodman was identified with the educational interests of the State for many years as county commissioner of schools, and secretary and chairman of the board. His acute and analytical mind would have given him distinction in the law had he given to it his undivided attention, but perhaps in no other department could he have rendered greater service to his generation than in that in which his life was spent.

TAPPAN WENTWORTH was born at Dover, Feb. 24, 1802, a son of Isaac Wentworth. He was educated chiefly in the common schools, though he was enabled to make acquaintance with Latin so far as to read two books of Virgil. He then became a clerk in a grocery-store, and occupied that position for some years; but when he was about twenty-one years of age a newspaper article of his composition attracted the notice of Hon. William Burleigh, a lawyer of South Berwick, Me., and a member of Congress, and he took young Wentworth into his office as a student. In 1826 he was admitted, and for about seven years was engaged in the practice of law at Somersworth. He then took up his residence in Lowell, Mass., carrying with him about seven thousand dollars as the fruits of his early labor. Energy, industry, and judgment like his could not fail of their reward, and in the forty and more years that he lived in Lowell his seven thousand increased to nearly three hundred thousand dollars. He became a leading member of his profession, and was chosen to both the legislative houses of Massachusetts, and a member of Congress from 1833 to 1835. He died in Lowell, June 12, 1875, leaving the bulk of his property, a magnificent legacy, to Dartmouth College.

NATHANIEL WELLS was born in Wells, Me., in 1805, and graduated at Phillips' Exeter Academy in 1826. He then went to Brunswick, Me., where he engaged in trade, and for a time edited a weekly newspaper. He came to Great Falls in 1830, and studied law in the office of Winthrop A. Marston, and after his admission to the bar became a partner of Mr. Marston. He was subsequently a partner with Hon. Charles H. Bell, later with George William Burleigh. In 1856 he formed a copartnership with the late Royal Eastman, and the firm of Wells & Eastman continued until 1873. He practiced alone some time, and then in the firm of Wells & Burleigh until his death. He was attorney for the Great Falls Manufacturing Company, and director in the Great Falls National Bank, and trustee of the Somersworth Savings-Bank. He died Aug. 16, 1878.

WINTHROP A. MARSTON was a native of Deerfield. He studied his profession under the direction of Stephen Mitchell, Esq., and entered into practice in Somersworth as early as 1830. In 1833 he was chosen clerk of the New Hampshire Senate, and in 1834 received the appointment of solicitor for the county of Strafford, which he resigned the next year. About 1842 he changed his residence to Dover, but after two or three years went back to Somersworth, where he became the partner of Royal Eastman, Esq. The firm of Marston & Eastman was a strong one, and had a good practice in and out of the courts in Strafford County and York County, Me.

Mr. Marston was a lawyer of competent learning and of sound judgment, and was an agreeable and effective advocate.

His death was sudden, on March 30, 1854, when he had reached the age of about fifty years.

ICHABOD GOODWIN JORDAN was a son of Capt. Ichabod Jordan, and was born in Saco, Me., Oct. 6, 1806. His collegiate education he received at Bowdoin, graduating in 1827. About 1830 he began the practice of the law in Somersworth, at the same time doing legal business in the adjoining county of York, Me. About the year 1864 he changed his residence to Berwick, Me., but still continued his law practice in both States. While a citizen of New Hampshire, in 1853 and 1854, he was elected a member of the State Senate, and after his removal to Maine he was chosen a member of the Legislature of that State. Mr. Jordan was gifted with solid rather than brilliant talents, but gained the confidence of a considerable clientele. He was a zealous Freemason, and was for two years the Grand Master of the order in New Hampshire. His death took place Feb. 21, 1873.

JOHN ADAMS BURLEIGH was a son of John Burleigh, and was born in Deerfield, Jan. 2, 1800. In early life he enjoyed the instruction of Dudley Leavitt, a celebrated mathematician, and the author of several educational works, as well as of the "Farmers' Almanac," which still bears his name. Young Burleigh was fitted for Yale College, but did not enter. He took up the study of the law under the direction of his brother, Hon. William Burleigh, of South Berwick, Me., and was admitted to the bar about 1824. The first eight years of his professional life he passed in South Berwick, and then removed to Somersworth. There he practiced for six years, when his industry, his remarkable business capacity, and his rare acquaintance with human nature recommended him to the directors of the Great Falls Manufacturing Company as a fit man for their resident agent. He accordingly assumed that important position, and held it to the entire acceptance of all concerned until compelled to relinquish it by failing health, shortly before his death, which occurred Aug. 22, 1860.

He was interested in everything that forwarded the interests of the place in which he lived, believing, with justice, that the more the town improved the better for the operatives under his charge, and for the company that he served. He was president of the Great Falls Bank and of the Somersworth Savings-Bank, and was forward in encouraging the building of churches and school-houses, the improvement and lighting of streets, the formation of a town library, and all like beneficial objects.

Under his management the manufacturing company was prosperous and brought into the town many useful and public-spirited citizens. Mr. Burleigh was one of the greatest benefactors of the town in which he resided, and his influence will long be felt there.

ROYAL EASTMAN, born in Falmouth, Me., June 27, 1816, was a son of Richard Eastman. He was educated in the common schools and at the Friends' school in Providence, R. I.; then was engaged for a time in teaching, and from 1842 to the date of his entering the bar, in 1844, was a law pupil of Nathaniel Wells, Esq., of Somersworth, and immediately on his admission established himself in that place. He identified himself with the interests of the flourishing village of Great Falls, and was superintendent of schools and of the public library for a series of years. In 1870 he received the appointment of postmaster, which he held until his decease, Feb. 2, 1874.

As a lawyer he was sagacious and faithful, with learning much above the average, and his clients justly reposed great confidence in him. He was, moreover, an excellent citizen, and a very staunch and true friend.

GEORGE WILLIAM BURLEIGH was born at South Berwick, Me., April 11, 1830. Two years later his parents removed to Great Falls, where his father, the late John A. Burleigh, Esq., became well known first as a successful lawyer and subsequently as the able manager of the Great Falls Manufacturing Company.

The subject of this memoir was fitted for college at Phillips' Exeter Academy, and in 1851 graduated at Dartmouth College with honors. He immediately commenced the study of law in the office of Wells & Bell, the latter being the present Governor of this State. He was admitted to the bar in 1854, and having purchased Mr. Bell's interest, became a partner with Mr. Wells in the practice of law, under the firm-name of Wells & Burleigh. He remained in active practice until 1856, when in consequence of his father being compelled to visit Europe for his health, George William took his place in the counting-room, and upon the death of his father, in 1860, he succeeded him as agent, and continued in that office until July, 1874, when he resigned and resumed the practice of his chosen profession. He at once took a prominent position at the bar, and was regarded as one of the ablest lawyers in the State. He took the keenest delight in his mental toil, and was wont to say that the time since he resumed his profession was his "golden age." The future seemed bright with hope. The Nestors of the law had predicted a brilliant future for him, and his friends were joyfully watching his proud career as a talented and distinguished man, when suddenly he was stricken down in the prime of life and in the midst of a brilliant career. He died April 25, 1878.

His position for fourteen years as agent of a large corporation, joined to his rare abilities, gave him influence in the community far above any other citizen, and his influence was always used for the public good.

Mr. Burleigh had a keen intellect, a versatile pen, fascinating conversational powers, a mind stored with learning, and a heart that beat tender and true to family and friends. He was generous in the extreme, and his house was the centre of hospitality.

Although not an active politician, he represented the town in the Legislature in 1863 and 1864, and was a member of the Senate in 1865 and 1866. He was also a member of the New Hampshire State Historical Society, and a trustee of Dartmouth College. Few sons of that institution were more loving and faithful to their Mater Mater. For many years he maintained a lectureship at his own expense, which brought the students in contact with the learned Dr. John Lord, the historian. To the faculty as well as the alumni he was a valued friend.

Mr. Burleigh was also a director of the Waumbek, Great Falls, and Newichawanick woolen companies, and for many years a director of the Portland, Saco and Portsmouth, and Conway Railroads. He was also a director in the Great Falls National Bank, and a trustee of the Somersworth Savings-Bank.

In 1854, Mr. Burleigh united in marriage with Miss Louise H. Bryant, daughter of Col. J. S. Bryant, of Haverhill, who with a son and two daughters survive him.

WILLIAM J. COPELAND is a son of Rev. William H. Copeland, a Baptist clergyman yet living, and a resident of Lebanon, Me. He was born in Albion, Kennebec Co., Me., Jan. 24, 1841, being now in his thirty-eighth year. The Copeland family trace their ancestry to Sir John Copeland, who fought at the battle of Neville's Cross, under Edward III., Oct. 17, 1346, and with his own hand captured King David of Scotland, whom he bore from the field with a company of attendants, and, proceeding to Chalais, delivered him into the hands of his royal master, then in France. For this service he was created a banneret by the king, and given a pension of five hundred pounds per annum. He was also made warden of Berwick, sheriff of Northumberland, and Keeper of Roxborough Castle. Lawrence Copeland, a lineal descendant of Sir John, from whom sprang all the Copelands in America, came to this country and settled at Mount Holliston, Mass., where he died Dec. 30, 1699, aged one hundred and ten years. Moses Copeland, a great-grandson of Lawrence, and from whom William J., the subject of our sketch, is a direct descendant in the fifth generation, went with his brother Joseph from Milton, Mass., to Warren, Me., in 1763, being among the early settlers of that place.

William J. Copeland attended the common schools in Shapleigh and Berwick, where his father was then preaching. In 1855 he attended the academy at South Berwick, and afterwards for a time the West Lebanon and Limerick Academies, earning the money to defray the necessary expenses by teaching in the winter and farm labor in the summer, teaching his first school at Shapleigh before he was sixteen years of age. Having a strong inclination toward the legal profession he entered the office of Hon. Increase S. Kimball, of Sanford, Me., at an early age, where he pursued the study of the law until he was admitted to the bar, which was before he was twenty-one years of age. He then located in Presque Isle, Aroostook Co., where he entered upon the practice of his profession, remaining there until April, 1868, when he removed to Berwick, opposite Great Falls, where he has since resided, having established his office at the latter place. Mr. Copeland also has an office in Manchester.

With powers of physical endurance greater than those with which most men are endowed, with a keen insight into human nature, and a strong love for the contests of the legal arena, he has the ability to command success in cases where others would see only failure from the start. Without any of the graces of oratory, he exercises, nevertheless, a wonderful power over the jury through his ready perception of their individual characteristics, enabling him to appeal directly to their understanding and judgment, and the earnestness with which he enters into the case, carrying as it does the appearance of a settled conviction of the justice of his cause.

Few men are able to accomplish as much professional labor as Mr. Copeland, and there are few who receive so large an income therefrom.

GEORGE C. PEAVEY, a native of Bathstead, was born in the year 1815. At the age of twenty-two he became a pupil in the Phillips' Academy at Exeter, and prepared himself for college; then entered the law office of Messrs. Bell & Tuck as a student. About the time of his admission to the bar in 1843, his eyes were affected so that his vision became seriously impaired. This trouble followed him through life, and for a great portion of his mature years he was obliged to wear a bandage over his eyes when in the light. This was of course a severe privation, but it did not damp his energy, nor prevent him from active employment.

He held the office of bank commissioner in 1856 and 1857, and that of State senator in 1869 and 1870. He practiced law first in Exeter for a few years, after which he settled in Strafford, and there built up a large and lucrative business, mercantile as well as legal. He was as methodical and prudent as he was enterprising, and few men with all their senses perfect, managed their affairs more successfully. He died in Strafford, May 5, 1876.

BARRINGTON.

Geographical—Topographical—Charter—List of Original Proprietors—Proprietors' Meeting—List of Rates, 1742—Revolutionary History—Early Settlers.

THE town of Barrington lies in the southern part of the county, and is bounded as follows: on the north by Stratford and Rochester; on the east by Rochester, Dover, Madbury, and Lee; on the south by Dover, Madbury, Lee, and Rockingham County; and on the west by Rockingham County and Stratford. The surface of the town is uneven and broken by numerous hills and ridges.

The Isinglass River flows through the northerly part, while the southerly part of the town is drained by the Bellamy River. There are eighteen ponds in this town, varying in size from three or four acres to several hundred acres.

Much of the soil is too stony for cultivation, but produces wood and lumber in large quantities, and when cut off it grows again with great rapidity. There is, however, much valuable land for cultivation, which compares favorably with that of the adjoining towns. This town furnishes many attractions to pleasure-seekers, and is becoming more and more a place of summer resort as its pure air and fine scenery are better known.

The town of Barrington was chartered by proclamation in the name of "George L. King of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith," dated May 10, 1722, and signed by Samuel Shute, Governor of the Province of New Hampshire, giving and granting to "all such of our loving subjects as are at Present Inhabitants of our Town of Portsmouth within our Province of New Hampshire, and have paid rates in said town for four years last past, to be divided among them in proportion to their respective town rates, which they paid the year last past." In addition to the territory granted to the tax-payers of Portsmouth the new town included "Also the 2-mile streak granted to the Hon. John Wentworth, Esq., George Jaffrey, Archibald Macphedris, Esq., and Mr. Robert Wilson, Proprietors of the iron-works lately started at Lamprey River, for their encouragement and accommodation."

This two-mile streak extends from Rochester to Nottingham line adjoining Madbury and Lee.

The conditions of this grant were "that they build fifty dwelling-houses and settle a family in each within seven years, and break up three acres of ground for each settlement, and plant or sow ye same within seven years;"

"That a meeting-house should be built for ye Public worship of God within ye term of seven years."

"That two hundred acres of land be reserved for a Parsonage, two hundred acres for ye first minister of ye gospel, and one hundred acres for ye benefit of a school." Provided that if an Indian war should occur during the seven years, the proprietors should have the seven years following the close of the war in which to fulfil the conditions of the charter.

"A List of the original Proprietors of the Town of Barrington with the Rate which each man Paid & by which the Quantity of Acres each man had is ascertained at the rate of two Pence pr acre & also the number of Each Lot as the Same was drawn by each Prop<sup>r</sup> or his Constituent?"

The first meeting of the proprietors was held in Portsmouth, May 28, 1722, with Robert (Richard) Wilbert as moderator and Clement Hughes clerk.

At a meeting held June 14, 1722, it was voted to give forty-two lots of forty acres each, as near the centre of the town as the land would admit, to such persons as would fulfil the conditions of the charter. Considerable difficulty was found in getting settlers to take up the land on those conditions. After sundry meetings a number of persons were found who agreed to take the forty-acre lots and settle upon them, when a committee was chosen to proceed to Barrington with the proposed settlers and lay out their lots.

This committee reported, June 27, 1727, that after having been upon the land, and having with them certain persons who had agreed to settle, "the land proving to be so extraordinary bad by reason of its being so extremely rocky and stony that none of those present would accept it, and they thought it "impracticable to settle upon it."

1 First lot, 5th range.

Other meetings followed this at different times, when it was voted, Jan. 29, 1732, "that 100 acres of land out of the town commons be given to each proprietor that shall appear in 15 days and give bond with good security to the value of one hundred pounds each, that each of them shall build a house, and perform every other article that the charter obliges a settler to do (within one year), provided the number exceed not forty-two, and the same give in their names to the clerk."

It was also voted, Aug. 7, 1732, to give to each settler of the forty-two forty-acre lots, one forty-second part of all surplus and undivided lands in town.

It appears that these last liberal offers were sufficient to secure the required number of settlers, and the proprietors came in possession of the town. In 1741 the proprietors asked for and received of the General Assembly power to raise and collect rates upon themselves the same as possessed by towns.

There appears to have been living on the Two-mile Streak in the year 1747 sixteen families and upwards of ninety inhabitants, who petitioned the Provincial Governor and General Assembly for protection against the Indians.

The first town-meeting of the settlers was called by Capt. William Cate, and held at his house, known later as the "Old Garrison," and which was taken down some twelve years ago.

It was called by authority of the General Assembly of the province, authorizing the settlers to organize a town, and was held Aug. 30, 1753. Chose Arthur Daniellson, moderator; Hugh Montgomery, clerk; William Cate, Sampson Babb, Phederice Macutchen, selectmen.

At the next annual town-meeting, held March 27, 1854, chose Capt. William Cate and Timothy Emerson a committee to petition the General Assembly for an act to "subject non-resident proprietors of land to bear part of expense of building meeting-house." Also for authority to lay out roads.

In 1762 the following petition was presented to the General Assembly and granted:

"Petition of Selectmen of Barrington, etc.

"To his Excellency, Benning Wentworth, Esq., Governor & Commander in Chief of his Majesty's Province of New Hampshire, &c., &c.

At a town-meeting called Feb. 7, 1774, to consider the infringement of the rights of the American colonies by the British government, the following resolutions were unanimously passed:

1. That liberty is the birthright of every Englishman, an essential part of which is a power, vested only in themselves or their representatives, to dispose of their property, and the inhabitants of this town are a part of his British majesties liege subjects, and have a right to all the privileges of such subjects and of Englishmen, so we apprehend we cannot be legally taxed by any power on earth but what is delegated by ourselves.

2. That the laying a duty on teas by the British Parliament, to be paid upon their being landed here, is an infringement upon the natural rights of Englishmen, and is calculated to carry into execution the plan of despotism adopted by the British ministry, has a direct tendency to subvert our happy Constitution, and to reduce us to a state a little short of African slavery.

3. That it is the duty of every honest man to exert his utmost ability in opposing every effort of the enemies of our liberties to enslave us, that by this means we may be instrumental of transmitting unimpaired (through the ravages of time) our liberties down to the latest posterity.

4. That we will not directly or indirectly purchase any of the teas sent here by the East India Company or suffer it to be used in our families, and those who dissent from this Resolve we shall esteem as enemies to their country, pests to society, and as friends to slavery, and that they ought to be treated with neglect by every true-hearted Briton.

5. That the thanks of this town be given to every community and individual that have exerted themselves in the noble and glorious cause of freedom.

The selectmen of the town took a census of the inhabitants Sept. 14, 1875, and reported twenty-five men in the army.

At a town-meeting held in April, 1777, "Voted to make the bounty to enlisted men including what the State pays 50 pounds."

Sept. 15, 1777, "voted that the men who enlist join Gen. Stark at Bennington."

April 13, 1778, "Voted twenty pounds lawful money to nine months' men in addition to the State and continental bounties."

The paper known as the Association Test, pledging the subscribers to oppose the hostile proceedings of the British fleets and armies at the risk of lives and fortunes, was circulated and obtained two hundred signatures out of the two hundred and twelve legal voters.

The population of the town of Barrington, according to the census of 1790, was two thousand four hundred and seventy. In 1800 it was two thousand seven hundred and seventy-three. In 1810 the population had increased to three thousand five hundred and sixty-four, exceeding the present population of Barrington and Strafford by more than five hundred.

According to the census of 1810, Portsmouth was the largest town in the State, Gilmanton the second, and Barrington the third. Like many other farming towns, the population for the last fifty years has been decreasing. The census of 1880 gives fourteen hundred and ninety-three inhabitants.

The town records do not show that any action was taken by the town in regard to the war of 1812.

The men who were required were drafted.

When there was a threatened invasion at Portsmouth an entire regiment was called out from Barrington, Dover, and some of the adjoining towns.

Capt. John W. Hayes' company, of this town, was called out in full. This regiment marched to Portsmouth under the command of Col. Isaac Waldron, of Barrington, and remained there fourteen days.

In 1821 the town was divided, and the northwesterly half was incorporated as Strafford. Barrington now contains a territory of about forty square miles.

It is sufficient to say of Barrington in the war of the Rebellion that its citizens volunteered promptly at the call of the President, and the voters with great unanimity appropriated money and instructed its officers to furnish the men to fill the several quotas of the town, that no citizen be compelled to go to the war against his will.

Nearly all of its soldiers were to be found in the ranks, three only going out as commissioned officers, and their record in the field will compare favorably with that of other towns, and is one of which the town has no reason to be ashamed.

Among the men who were prominent in the early settlement of the town were William Cate, Hugh Montgomery, Sampson Babb, Arthur Danielson, Paul Hayes, Eleazer Young, Mark Hunking, Francis Winkley, Samuel Brewster, Timothy Waterhouse.

At the beginning of the present century the following were active and leading citizens: Samuel Hale, justice of the Court of Common Pleas, Dr. Robert Woodbury, Thomas W. Hale, Levi Buzel, Ephraim Foss, John Pearl, Eliphalet Clondman, John Kingman, John McDaniel, William Winkley.

The following names represent families among its early settlers who have done much in developing the resources of the town and in giving character to its inhabitants: Buzzell, Cate, Caverly, Felker, Foss, Hale, Hayes, Hall, Kingman, McDaniel, Swain, Winkley, Waterhouse and Young.

There have been many other influential men and worthy families in the town since its settlement that might be mentioned if space would permit.

CHAPTER XCII.

BARRINGTON.—(Continued.)

Ecclesiastical History—Meeting-Houses and Churches—Baptists—Methodists—Friends—Emancip. Men—Civil History—Military Record.

Meeting-Houses and Churches.—At a meeting of the proprietors of Barrington, held in Portsmouth, March 31, 1731, it was voted to build a meeting-house for the worship of God, and to locate it as near the centre of the town as the land would admit, and voted to appropriate fifty pounds for that purpose.

It seems that this vote was not put in effect, for eleven years after it was again voted "that a meeting-house be built at the charge of the proprietors; also voted two hundred pounds for that purpose, and that the house be forty-four feet long and thirty-six feet wide."

A committee, consisting of Thomas Wright, Timothy Waterhouse, and William Cate, was chosen to locate and build the house. At another meeting, held June 2, 1742, it was "voted that the meeting-house be set on the Waldron lot, or upon some lot thereabouts." March 30, 1743, "Voted one hundred and twenty pounds for shingling, flooring, and underpinning the meeting-house."

This house was located and first stood at the foot of Waldron's Hill, on or near land now owned by Mrs. William C. Buzzell. This location proved to be very inconvenient for the settlers, as the most of them lived near the Cate Garrison and around Green Hill. At a meeting of the proprietors, held June 14, 1752, they "voted to grant liberty to the present inhabitants of Barrington to move the meeting-house from the present lot to land of Samuel and Nathan Foss."

The house was taken down and moved to this lot, where it stood as late as 1854, after which it was removed and converted into a dwelling.

A town-meeting was held Nov. 18, 1754, to consider the propriety of settling Rev. Joseph Prince as minister of the town. A committee was chosen to inquire into his character and qualifications. Favorable reports of him being received from ministers of the Piscataqua Association, it was voted, Feb. 22, 1755, to give him a call.

The Congregational Church of Barrington was organized June 18, 1755, at which time Rev. Mr. Prince was installed. Mr. Prince was a blind man, and served the church as pastor thirteen years.

To show that the men of that time were prompt in paying the minister's salary, and careful in doing business, the following receipt, bearing Mr. Prince's autograph, is copied from the town records:

"Received of y<sup>e</sup> Selectmen of y<sup>e</sup> town of Barrington this 11th Day of April, 1757, two hundred & fifty Pounds, old Tenor, in full, for my salary from y<sup>e</sup> Beginning of y<sup>e</sup> world to this Present Day. I say Received by me,

"JOSEPH PRINCE."

In the year 1770, John Garland and Samuel Brewster, in behalf of the church and parish, asked the General Assembly for authority to conduct the affairs independent of the town-meeting, setting forth as a reason that certain inhabitants who called themselves Quakers, and other separators from any religious body, and members of the Church of England, cause great confusion whenever a town-meeting is held to settle a minister according to the laws of the province. Their request was granted.

Rev. David Tenney was pastor from Sept. 18, 1771, to Oct. 26, 1778; Benjamin Balch was pastor from Aug. 25, 1784, till 1815, when he died, aged seventy-four years; Cephas H. Kent was pastor from Oct. 22, 1828, till May 3, 1830; Samuel H. Merrill, from Feb. 23, 1831, to Aug. 10, 1835; Samuel Nichols, from Sept. 20, 1837, to Oct. 26, 1847. The present house of worship was built in 1840. Theodore Wells was pastor from June 9, 1845, to May 10, 1859. After this the church was served by non-installed pastors, as follows: for five years and seven months by Rev. Charles Willey, to March, 1865; from June, 1865, by Rev. Josiah S. Armes; from May, 1869, by Rev. Ezra Haskell; from September, 1875, to September, 1877, by Revs. Albert Watson and James De Buchanan. From that date it has been ministered to by the present incumbent, Rev. E. F. Borchers.

Baptists.—In the year 1779 a Baptist Church was formed in the northwesterly part of Barrington. Its membership soon extended over a large part of what is now Strafford. Several active members lived in that part of Barrington called Canaan, where regular meetings of worship were held.

The first record of a church organization in that neighborhood began in 1818. At a Conference meeting held Feb. 8, 1819, those present expressed their wish to become a Church of Christ, taking the New Testament as their rule of faith and practice, and to become connected with the New Durham Quarterly Meetings, and choose George Seaward ruling elder, and Pomphret Pearg, deacon. In 1851 the church was reorganized as the Strafford and Barrington South Free Baptist Church. In 1861 a large part of its members withdrew and formed a church in Strafford. Since then its members have, for the most part, lived in Barrington, where its meetings of worship have been held, and has been known as the Canaan Free Baptist Church. Six Free Baptist ministers and one Congregational minister have grown up under the influence of this church. In 1881 a house of worship was built. Present membership, 65; A. E. Boyerton, pastor.

Through the labors of Rev. S. B. Dyer, of Nottingham, a Free Baptist Church was formed in the year 1820, in the south part of Barrington, known as the First Barrington Free Baptist Church. In 1830, Samuel Sherburne was ordained pastor, which relation was continued till his death in 1861. In addition to preaching, Mr. Sherburne taught school much of his time, and exerted a wide influence in this and adjoining towns. Their meeting-house was built in 1847. The church has since been supplied by different men, among whom were Revs. P. Chesley, U. Chase, L. Malvern, and A. C. Peaslee.

In 1821 another Free Baptist Church was formed in Barrington near Nottingham line. It kept up its organization for a few years without a pastor or house of worship.

About the year 1834 a Free Baptist Church was formed in the northwesterly part of the town, known as the Third Church. It enjoyed considerable prosperity for a few years, when it was disbanded, and its members generally joined the churches in Strafford.

Methodism.—Methodist meetings were commenced in this town about the year 1833, by Rev. Mr. Walcott, in what was then known as the Blake school-house, and a church was organized soon after. In 1835 a meeting-house was built, and the pulpit was supplied by appointments from the Conference some ten or twelve years. During this time the attendance was large and much prosperity was enjoyed. Afterwards the number of members was greatly reduced by death and removal from town. The Conference withdrew its appointments, and no meetings have been held for several years.

Friends.—A few Quaker families settled on Waldron's Hill, and built a meeting-house. It stood on land now owned by George S. Tuttle. What its dimensions were or how long it was used are not known, as it was taken away before the days of the oldest inhabitants living.

Eminent Men.—Isaac Waldron, son of Col. Isaac Waldron, of Barrington, was a prominent and successful merchant and influential citizen of Portsmouth. He was United States pension agent for some time, and although an active politician he did not seek nor accept other offices of trust. He died in 1842, aged seventy years.

John Buzzell was born in Barrington in 1780. When he was quite young his parents moved to Middleton. When he became a man he entered the ministry, and was during the remainder of his life a leading clergyman of the Free-Will Baptist Church. He traveled and preached extensively in Maine, New Hampshire, and Vermont. He was one of the founders of the Morning Star, now published in Dover.

Samuel Hale, son of Judge Hale, of Barrington, was born in 1793; graduated at Bowdoin College; represented his native town in the Legislature, after which he removed to Portsmouth, and became a merchant. In 1842 he commenced the manufacture of cloth at South Berwick, Me., which business he followed quite extensively to his death, which occurred in 1873.

Henry Winkley, of Philadelphia, son of William Winkley, of Barrington, was born in 1803. Soon after he became of age he went into business in Boston as a dealer in crockery-ware. He afterwards followed the same business in New York and Philadelphia as an importer and wholesale dealer. Mr. Winkley retired from active business nearly thirty years ago, since which he has traveled extensively in this country and Europe. He is much interested in the higher institutions of learning in New England, and has added largely to their endowment.

Col. John W. Kingman was born in Barrington some sixty years ago. He graduated at Harvard, studied law with Daniel Webster, and was law partner of Hon. D. M. Christie, of Dover, for several years. He was also colonel of the Fifteenth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteers in the late war. Some twelve years ago he removed to Wyoming Territory, and was appointed justice of the United States Court, which position he now holds.

Prof. Sylvester Waterhouse graduated from Harvard in 1852. About twenty-five years since he became connected with Washington University, St. Louis, where he now is. He has written much in the interest of his adopted State, and is widely known throughout the entire Northwest.

Hon. Frank Jones, of Portsmouth, left his native town when a boy and entered into business, in which he has been eminently successful. He is also an active politician, and among other offices of trust he has been mayor of Portsmouth and member of Congress for two terms from the First New Hampshire District.

Col. Daniel Hall, of Dover, was born in Barrington some fifty years ago. He is a graduate from Dartmouth College, and a lawyer by profession.

During the early part of the late war he served on Gen. Hooker's staff; later he was provost-marshal of First New Hampshire District. Col. Hall is naval officer for the port of Boston, to which he has lately been reappointed.

Hon. Jacob D. Young, of Madbury, judge of probate for this county, Col. A. H. Young, of Dover, late collector of internal revenue for New Hampshire, and Aaron Young, of Portsmouth, are natives and former citizens of Barrington.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

CHARLES A. FOSS.

Charles A. Foss is the sixth in direct line of descent from John Foss who settled at Rye, N. H., about 1668. The link in the chain is here broken, as the next in descent is not known. The date of settlement of John Foss is beyond question, as we find land deeded to him in 1668 at Rye. The third was Joshua Foss, who went to Strafford Corners, N. H., and soon after moved to the Garrison House in Barrington, called the "Cate Garrison," from a family of Cate's who lived there. After the close of the French war of 1745, Joshua Foss moved on to the place now occupied by Charles A. He had a family of seven children, five boys and two girls. The boys were named Thomas, Joshua, John, Moses, and Ephraim. The girls were Abigail, who married Micajah Otis, of Strafford, and Lydia, who married Simon Locke, of Hollis, Me.

In the fourth generation Ephraim was the grandfather of the subject of this sketch. He had six children, two boys and four girls,—Jacob D., Ephraim, Sallie, Mollie, Lydia, and Abigail.

Ephraim followed the wool-and-cloth-dressing business a number of years. He subsequently moved to Charlestown, Mass., and afterwards worked for the government in Norfolk, Va., on the dry-docks, where he contracted yellow fever, from the effects of which he died after being taken home. Sallie married Ephraim Locke, of Boston; Mollie married James Bodge, of Barrington; Lydia married Isaac Daniels, of Barrington; Abigail married twice, to Clement Daniels and Jacob Hale, both of Barrington.

Jacob D. Foss, the father of Charles A., was born Aug. 2, 1784; he married Sally Garland, of Northwood, N. H., about 1809, and five children were born to them: Eliza G., born Oct. 6, 1811; Charles A., born Dec. 18, 1814; Nathaniel G., died young; Lydia S., born Jan. 8, 1823; Sally L., Nov. 25, 1826. Of the family but two survive, viz., Charles A. and Lydia S.

Charles A. Foss was born Dec. 18, 1814, in the old family homestead which he still occupies. He attended the district schools of his town, and afterwards went to Gilmanston Academy, a prominent institution in its day. Prof. Edwin Sanborn, now of Hanover College, was one of the teachers there.

Jan. 28, 1841, Mr. Foss married Abiah W. Foss, a very distant relative. Five children were born to them, only one of whom survives,—Ada Sarah, who was born July 16, 1852, and is living at home. The other children died young, except one, who attained the age of eighteen.

The Foss family took part in the Revolution. The father of Mr. Foss also figured prominently in local politics, was selectman and representative a number of years, and was a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1850. He died March 9, 1871.

The subject of this sketch has always taken a prominent part in the politics of the county and town of Barrington. He was one of the delegates that brought the Republican party into existence. The convention met in Concord. He returned home, and immediately set about organizing the party in his town. He has been an ardent exponent of the principles of that party since its birth, and devoted his energies during the war to keep it in existence in his district. Mr. Foss was elected to the legislature in 1855-56, and in 1875-76 was elected a member of Governor Cheeny's Council. He enjoys the confidence and respect of his fellow-citizens in a remarkable degree, having served them honestly and faithfully in the different responsible positions to which they have elected him. He possesses a remarkably vigorous constitution, being a man of large and powerful build, has always taken good care of himself, and never used tobacco or intoxicating liquors.

He represents the fourth generation of Fosses that have occupied the same homestead, which embraces at the present time two hundred and seventy-five acres. Mr. Foss is also the possessor of two hundred and ten acres in different parts of the town.

EPHRAIM CATER.

When the land in the towns of Barrington and Strafford was put up to be drawn by lottery, John Cater drew lot No. 9, containing one hundred and fifty acres, the same now owned by David Y. Cater. Ephraim Cater is the third (on the paternal side) in descent from the John Cater mentioned above.

John Cater had five children, as follows: Sally, Betsey, Mollie, Susan, and John. John, his youngest child and only son, married Susan Holmes for his first wife, and their family consisted of the following: Joseph, Joel, Ephraim, Susan, John, Betsey, Joshua, Cyrus, and Isaac. His second wife was the widow of Mr. Grover, by whom he had one child, Hiram H. He took a third wife, Mary Leighton, of Dover. He died Oct. 2, 1863. John (his father) died Jan. 26, 1801.

Of his family but four are living, viz.: Cyrus, Isaac, Betsey, and Sally.

The subject of this sketch was born Jan. 9, 1800. He attended the district schools of his neighborhood, living with his father a portion of his time until he married. His father's family was so large and his stock of the world's goods so small that he found it difficult to maintain them. When Mr. Cater was twenty-one he married Charlotte Otis, daughter of Joshua Otis, of Strafford. She was the granddaughter of Micajah Otis, one of the founders of the Free-Will Baptist Church. To them were born eight children, six boys and two girls, as follows: Joshua O., Martha

J., Joseph L., Andrew J., Martin Van Buren, Abigail S., David Y., and George F. Of the family, Joshua O., Joseph L., Andrew, and Martin Van Buren are married, and with their families live in Minnesota; Martha J. married Israel P. Ham, of Dover; Abigail died in infancy; David Y. married Flora E. Huntoon, of Farmington; George married Almira Meader, of Rochester, N. H.

Mr. Cater is drawing a pension for service in the war of 1812. In 1830, Daniel Ham and he ran for selectmen; the first vote was a tie, and the same result followed three distinct elections on different days. It was finally settled by choosing an outsider, the adherents of each claiming that they would stay by their man until death.

The tract of land now owned by Mr. Cater and his son contains three hundred and fifty acres, including the one hundred and fifty acres mentioned above as having been drawn in a lottery. The family are noted for their longevity. In politics Mr. Cater is a Democrat, and with pride he says he cast his first vote for Gen. Jackson. He carries his great age easily, reading the finest print without the aid of glasses.

ALBERT H. DANIELS.

The oldest record we find of this family is of Peletiah Daniels, grandfather of the subject of this sketch, who settled on the present Daniels homestead. He was born in 1734, and died in 1818. He had a family of eight children, named Ruth, Bridget, Peletiah, Sarah, Mehitable, Lydia, Andrew, and Isaac. Isaac was the father of Albert H., and was born May 9, 1782. He married Rebecca Chapman, Feb. 23, 1809. They had three children,—Enoch, Albert H., and Rebecca. He died Oct. 26, 1851.

The subject of this memoir was born Feb. 9, 1816, and on Feb. 16, 1842, he married Elizabeth T., daughter of John Sherman, of Smithfield, R. I. When a young man Mr. Daniels taught school, working a farm in the meantime. He enjoyed the confidence and respect of his fellow-townsmen to a great degree, they having elected him to the office of selectman several terms; was also elected a member of the Legislature two terms. He was a captain of militia under Gen. Hoitt, of Dover, when a young man. The immediate cause of his death was paralysis, he having suffered from several slight strokes. He was attacked with a very severe one Dec. 23, 1880, from which he never rallied. He lost his speech at that time, and never regained it. He died May 5, 1882.

Five children were born to him, three of whom are now living,—John S., Rebecca B., and Elizabeth D.

A particularly sad bereavement visited them on the night of the 18th of June, 1867, when Isaac, their son, then eighteen years old, was drowned in Men-dum's Pond while boating with two companions. The boat capsized, and he went to the bottom, the others being saved by swimming to shore.

Rebecca married Horace F. Caverno, of Strafford. They have three children,—John L., Albert D., and Bernice E. Elizabeth D. married Charles F. Berry, of New Durham, now a resident of Rochester, N. H.

Dr. John L. was born Oct. 12, 1851, and his career deserves more than a passing mention. He attended the district school until he was fourteen. He, however, commenced the study of Latin when only eleven years old with the Rev. Mr. Mason, of Lee, walking three miles to recite. At fourteen he entered Northwood Academy, where he studied three years. He then entered the office of Dr. George W. Jencks, of Woonsocket, R. I., previous to entering Harvard Medical College in 1870. He remained at Harvard more than two years, and attended one course of lectures at Long Island College Hospital, of Brooklyn, N. Y., where he graduated June 24, 1875.

His father's illness necessitated his return home, as he was the only one of the family left to manage the farm. After returning home he commenced the practice of medicine, and has a large business. We will mention here that he was elected superintendent of school committee when only twenty-one. He served in that capacity one term. The next year he was elected a member of the Legislature, which position he filled for two terms, 1874 and 1876. In politics he is a Republican; his father was also. The historic Cate Garrison was located on their farm. The cellar and foundation may be seen from their parlor windows, the roof of the old garrison at the present time doing the undignified duty of covering a wagon-shed. The Daniels homestead possesses more than common interest, as being the scene of many bloody encounters during the Indian and French wars.

Interesting Ecclesiastical Document, 1723.

understanding Col. Davis & his wife are ab<sup>d</sup> to Joyn in full com<sup>o</sup> wth yo<sup>r</sup> church this is yo<sup>r</sup> by virtue of yo<sup>r</sup> communion of churches to enter my objection ag<sup>t</sup> yo<sup>r</sup> for scandalous crimes until their publick confession & reformation

1st crime ag<sup>t</sup> him is his hypocrisy in pretending he could not wth our church on acc<sup>t</sup> of Capt. ing to have so much religious discourse in his mouth & yet live so long (40 years) in hatred unto contempt of & disdain from our crucified Saviour & his honoring his sons & his wife all above the Lord of Heaven by his hearkning to them more & rather than to him I say!<sup>1</sup> 2: 29

2<sup>d</sup> crime is her profane mockery at christ's ordinance of a church meeting for discipline by her saying in a way of derision theres going to be another caball now i e a horse racing from cadallas the stary constellation or else a secret counsel for some mystery of omipity

3<sup>d</sup> crime is her being disorderly as a busy body at every one of her husbands Courts to be his advisor or intermeddler in his passing judg<sup>mt</sup> in any case as if he sh<sup>d</sup> regard her more than his outh the Law or evidence if these criminals will have these crimes to be proved at any church meeting to hear the Same wth y<sup>r</sup> reverend pastor Mr. Jona Cushing my please to appoint. Then as the Hon<sup>ble</sup> Col. Richard Waldron Esq. is one of the members of y<sup>r</sup> Church in full communion & a chief Justice of peace for the Province as a subject I desire but as an ambassad<sup>r</sup> for Christ I demand of his Hon<sup>or</sup> aforasaid a blank summons a notification seasonably as a complaint to summons evidence for the confirmation of y<sup>r</sup> premises as witnesses [two Hebrew words]<sup>1</sup> Pastor.

The woman's 4th crime is her so evidently inverting her son Thomas into so many denials of any such concert wth Soterity Thomas in all that Scandalous business. Acts 8: 13; 21: 23 until their publick Confession & amendm<sup>t</sup> of life—concerning whom therefore I must suppose in charity for y<sup>r</sup> church by the receiving such among you w<sup>d</sup> not dare to transgresse these written orders in the Apostolick Law of Christ 1 Cor. 5: 11 & Sundry other Scriptures.

About twelve years after the Hiltons settled at Dover Point a number of families found their way up a branch of the Piscataqua, and settled on what is now called Durham Point, at the mouth of Oyster River. They were included in the limit of Dover, and were called Oyster River Settlement. There are now several farms that have remained in the same family and name since their first occupation by white people for six or seven generations, during a period of more than two hundred years. Such is the Woodman place, owned by Prof. Woodman, of Dartmouth College; also the Smith place, owned by Joseph Smith, who bears in full the name of the original settler. Likewise lands owned by men bearing the names of Burnham, Bunker, Smith, Mathe's, and others have come down in the same succession. The names Mathews, Williams, Goddard, Smart, and Canny are also mentioned among the first settlers.

In 1649, Valentine Smith, a merchant from Boston, and Thomas Beard obtained a grant of the falls on Oyster River (now the site of Durham village) and erected a saw-mill. In a few years "the falls" had monopolized the business of the vicinity. Durham, being one of the frontier settlements, suffered much from the inroads of savages. But they were not molested to any considerable extent till 1694, during the "French and Indian war," when the settlement at the falls was surprised by about two hundred Indians from the Norridgewog tribe, of Maine, and the Penacooks, of Amoskeag Falls and vicinity. Twelve garrison-houses defended the settlement, but for years the people had grown careless, and many spent the nights in their unprotected dwellings, and those in the garrison-houses had but a small supply of ammunition.

Thursday evening, July 17th, the peaceful inhabitants sought their couches, thanking their Creator for their many blessings, the old man to dream of his children, the maid of her lover, little thinking of the relentless foe that only awaited the rising sun to commence their work of destruction and death.

The following morning, the signal-gun being fired, the Indians rushed from their hiding-places and commenced a general attack on the houses. Of the twelve garrison-houses, five were destroyed, viz.: Adams', Drew's, Edgerly's, Meader's, and Beard's. In Adams' they killed fourteen persons. Drew surrendered his on the promise of security, but was afterwards killed; the other three were abandoned, and the occupants escaped to the woods. The other garrisons, viz.: Woodman's (which has been an inhabited dwelling all the time since, and is now in good condition), Smith's, Davis', Jones', Bunker's, and Bickford's, were preserved by the vigorous efforts of the inmates. Bickford's house being situated by the river, he sent his family off in a boat before it was attacked, and retiring to his house, defended it by keeping up a continual fire at the enemy, changing some portion of his garments every time, and giving orders in a loud voice, as if a number of men were there. The defenseless houses were all set on fire; some of the occupants escaped to the woods, others were shot in the attempt. The French priest went to their little house of worship, and spent the time in defacing the pulpit. The wife and child of John Drew were captured and taken two miles up the river and left in care of an Indian. The Indian feeling sick, asked Mrs. Drew what was good for him. She replied, "accap<sup>e</sup>" (rum). Not disliking the remedy, he drew forth a bottle which he had stolen, took a large dose, and soon fell asleep, and Mrs. Drew and child escaped. Thomas Drew and wife, a recently-wedded couple, were taken prisoners. He was carried to Canada, she to the Indian village of Norridgewog, in Maine. Four years after they returned, and lived together until she was eighty-nine and he ninety years of age. After her captivity she was the mother of fourteen children.

An interesting story comes down to us from those old colonial times, which we will relate. It was customary in those days for those living back from the settlement to collect on the Sabbath and, for protection, proceed in a body to the settlement to worship. Thomas Chesley, a young man, was betrothed to a Miss Randall, residing in what is now Lee. As the people were returning from church one Sabbath, the old people on horseback, the younger ones afoot, Chesley and the young lady loitered behind. As they were talking of their future prospects in life, an arrow from the bow of some lurking Indian pierced the neck of the girl, and she fell back a corpse into the arms of her lover. A shout from Chesley brought the others back, and they bore the dead girl to the nearest house. As they entered some blood fell to the door-stone, and to this day the stone is pointed out, with the blood-marks of two hundred years ago still visible. From that time young Chesley swore vengeance against the Indians, and ended his days fighting them. It is asserted that at one time, meeting twelve skinning a heifer, he killed eleven of them.

In 1704 another Indian war broke out, in which the Oyster River settlement suffered more than any of the neighboring colonies. More than fifty persons were killed, and as many more were taken prisoners. Nathaniel Meader, Edward Taylor, William Tasker, John Wheeler, his wife and two children, and Capt. Chesley were among the killed.

The 15th of May, 1732, Oyster River settlement, including Lee, was taken from Dover, and incorporated as the town of Durham, from a town by that name in England. Lee was taken from Durham and incorporated Jan. 17, 1766, and a part of Madbury in 1768.

From the close of the Indian war till the breaking out of the Revolution, we look back and see the settlement growing in importance and strength; we see old men, who have lived through trial and affliction, pass away to join their fathers; we see the young lawyer, Sullivan, appear on the scene, and by his many noble qualities win his way into the confidence of the people and to places of trust. The scene changes. A black cloud approaches from the east, a storm that is to shake the whole New World, from east to west, from north to south, gathers over the land. A cry of "To arms!" awakes the people from their peaceful occupations. We see the mothers of Durham, with tears in their eyes, bid their sons go and defend their liberties. At the council-board we see the forms of Ebenezer Thompson and Judge Frost, while in the field are Maj.-Gen. Sullivan and Col. Adams, with over fifty of their brave townsmen, twenty of whom found a grave on the battle-field. Years after we see the town of Durham losing its commercial importance, and gradually pushing forward until it stands a leading agricultural town of the county.

Of the many distinguished men who have had their homes in Durham, perhaps none are held in more grateful remembrance than Maj.-Gen. Sullivan, of Revolutionary notoriety.

Ecclesiastical History.—The people of Oyster River, after a severe struggle with those of Dover, obtained a meeting-house of their own in 1651, and agreed to pay a minister fifty pounds. Previously, through mud and snow, over hill and stream, unless prevented by sickness, they had been obliged to attend meeting at Dover Neck. Men, women, and children would gather on the Sabbath, and through the crooked, intricate paths find their way to the banks of the Bellamy River, and crossing in canoes, climb to the little meeting-house on the hill.

The first minister that preached in Durham, Rev. Mr. Fletcher, was procured in 1655, but he left the following year. In 1662 or 1663, Rev. Mr. Hall was there, but only remained a short time. Dissensions in ecclesiastical affairs occurred until the establishment of the Oyster River parish in Dover by the General Court of Massachusetts in 1675. From near that date John Buss, a physician, was the preacher for more than thirty years. He had his valuable library burned by the Indians in July, 1694. He is said to have died in 1736, aged one hundred and eight years.

The Congregational Church was organized March 26, 1718, under the ministry of Rev. Hugh Adams, which continued till 1739.

Rev. Nicholas Gilman, from Exeter, was the second pastor, from 1741 till his death in 1748. He was greatly beloved by the people.

The third pastor was Rev. John Adams, a nephew of the first. His ministry continued nearly thirty years, and ended in 1778. He had a lively imagination, was a writer of ability, and at times, it is said, was very eloquent.

Rev. Curtis Coe was ordained pastor in 1780, and dismissed in 1806, a good man, but not greatly successful.

Till this time the pastor of the Congregational Church was the minister of the town, and supported by tax. But this continued no longer.

The next pastor, after an interval of eleven years, was Rev. Federal Burt, ordained June 18, 1817. The church was very small and weak, but was much increased during his ministry of nearly eleven years. He died Feb. 9, 1828.

Rev. Robert Page was the pastor from Dec. 3, 1828, to March 31, 1831, a short, useful, but not quiet ministry.

Rev. Alvan Tobey began to preach here on the first Sabbath in October, 1831, and was ordained pastor Nov. 20, 1833. He died Sept. 20, 1874. The present neat and commodious house of worship was dedicated Sept. 13, 1849.

For about seventy years past there has been a Baptist Church of the class called Christians, under the ministry of Elder William Demeritt and others since his death in 1841. It is now called "The Church of the Disciples."

Hon. Ebenezer Thompson was a native of this town, and for many years one of the most prominent of her citizens. He was representative, clerk of the House and Senate, Secretary of State, councilor, commissioner to New Haven in 1777, a member of the Committee of Safety, justice of Superior Court, delegate to Congress, etc. He died in August, 1802, aged sixty-five.

The town of Farmington lies north of the centre of the county, and is bounded as follows: on the north by New Durham, Milton, and Middleton; on the east by Milton and Rochester; on the south by Rochester and Strafford, and on the west by Strafford and New Durham.

The surface of the town is broken and hilly.

The early history of Farmington will be found principally in the history of Rochester, of which this town originally formed a part. The early record history, Revolutionary, names of early settlers, etc., are incorporated in the history of the mother-town.

The surface is uneven and hilly, in some instances arriving at the dignity of mountains. Blue Job Mountain, one of the range of the Blue Hills, is situated in the south-western part of the town. Its summit affords a very extensive view. Ships can be seen off Portsmouth Harbor with the naked eye, while to the north and west the White Mountains and the Monadnocks, with many smaller mountains, meet the eye. The town is well supplied with streams and rivers, among which are the Cochecho, Mad, Ela, and Waldron. These afford manufacturing facilities which are a never-failing source of profit to the inhabitants.

The names of its mountains are from parties who owned them at an early date. Job Allard owned the mountains now called Blue Job, which belongs to the Blue Hills range, hence the name Blue Job. Mad River derives its name from its freshets or floods, to which the country along its banks is subject. It has been known to rise after a heavy storm of one or two hours' duration a number of feet, flooding the country along its border, sweeping property and everything before it; rocks weighing tons have been moved from their resting-places by its impetuosity and carried quite a distance down the stream. One of the floods occurred in 1869, causing great destruction of property, and endangering the lives of the people. In some instances they were rescued from their houses in boats.

Among the first who settled in this section were Benjamin, Samuel, and Richard Furber, Samuel Jones, Benjamin Chesley, and Paul Demerit, who located near Merrill's Corners from 1770 to 1783. On the Ten-Rod road Joseph and Levi Leighton were located; on Chestnut Hill, Moses Horne, Caleb Varney, Judge Wingate, and others in various parts of the town, which, owing to the difficulty in getting name and dates, we are obliged to omit. Among the men from this town who have held public positions in the State and United States legislative halls, now deceased, are Nehemiah Eastman, Esq., who held a distinguished position at the bar for many years. He was elected to the State Senate, and also a member of the Nineteenth Congress. He died Jan. 19, 1856. Dr. Joseph Hammond was a member of the State Legislature, and also of the Twenty-first and Twenty-second Congresses. He died March 28, 1836.<sup>1</sup> Among those now living is George L. Whitehouse, who was a deputy sheriff six years, a judge of the Court of Common Pleas for the county of Strafford for fourteen years, also a member of the House of Representatives three years. Judge Whitehouse has also been extensively engaged in railroad surveys in this and other counties. Jeremiah Dame, John D. Lyman, George M. Herring, and Alonzo Nute were members of the State Senate; Thomas T. Edgerly and Josiah B. Edgerly were registers of deeds.

Jeremiah Jones was the first man born in the town that was elected to the State Legislature. He was elected for six successive terms and nominated for the seventh, but refused to run. His majority at his first election was one, at the last one hundred and fifty-eight. The late Hon. Henry Wilson, United States senator from Massachusetts, was born on a farm about two miles south of Farmington village.

The first meeting-house was built on Robert's Hill, about two miles south of Farmington village. The first school-house was built at Morrill's Corners, in the southern part of the town, about the year 1791.

Early Merchants.—One of the first merchants in Farmington was Jonas C. March, who came here from Portsmouth in about the year 1780, and built a store in what is now the lower end of the village, on premises now owned by G. N. Eastman. Mr. March subsequently removed to Rochester, and was succeeded as the "trader" of the town by John Googin, whose stock in trade consisted chiefly of molasses, tea, spice-berries, pepper-corns, tobacco, rum, etc.

Mr. Googin, however, soon had an energetic competitor in the person of Joseph Smith, of Dover, who erected a large two-story building on the site of the present brick church and engaged in trade, adding dry-goods to the usual stock of groceries. He had a faithful old clerk named Joseph Sherburne, who had charge of the store here, while Smith remained at Dover.

Other early merchants were Jeremy Wingate and Gilbert Harney.

In 1830, Nehemiah Eastman was the lawyer here, and Joseph Hammond the doctor. Peter and Levi Pearl were at the head of the militia, and J. H. Edgerly called the roll of names, among whom were the Nutes, Burnham and Isaac, George R. Dame, Samuel Bunker, Hiram French, etc. At that time "Jerry" Wingate was postmaster.

Farmington "Dock."—The name of Farmington Dock is said to have originated as follows: Long years ago, when Farmington was a part of Rochester, the people living on what was called the "Plains" were in the habit of cutting logs in the winter and depositing them on a little hill on the banks of the Cochecho, near what was called Knight's Brook, ready to be rolled into the river when the spring freshets came and floated them to the "Plains." From the manner of depositing, or "docking," as it was called, came the name. Another theory, however, is that the name Farmington Dock (or the Dock) originated from a growth of large yellow dock growing on the border of Knight's Brook, about one-half mile south of the village, where it crosses the road. People were in the habit of watering their horses at this place, and the growth of said plant was so thick that it became of public notoriety. The word first appears in the town records in 1792.

The village of Farmington is situated on what was formerly known as the "Old John Ham farm." The first dwelling was a log house, occupied by one Berry. The first frame house was erected in 1781 or 1782 by John Roberts, and here he reared a numerous family. The second frame house was built by Jonas C. March previous to 1792.

The town of Farmington was incorporated Dec. 1, 1798, the notification for the first town-meeting being dated Feb. 23, 1799, and signed by Aaron Wingate.

The First Town-Meeting was held March 11, 1799, at the house of Simon Dame, "at ten of the Clock in the forenoon," when the following officers were chosen: Moderator, Aaron Wingate; Town Clerk, Jonas C. March; Selectmen, Ichabod Hayes, Ephraim Kimball, and David Roberts; Auditors, Capt. Samuel Furbur and James Roberts; Assessors, Thomas Canney and Paul Demeritt; Surveyors of Highways, James Roberts, James Leighton, Joseph Thompson, Jr., Paul Demerett, Benjamin Furbur, Joseph Emerson, Daniel Canney, Jonathan French, Edward Knight, Samuel Jonas, Jr., Thomas Davis, John Downs, and George Leighton; Surveyors of Lumber, Jonathan French and David French; Hogs-reeves, Richard Furbur, Joseph Holmes, Aaron Wingate, Jonas C. March, Ephraim Perkins, John Murray, Ichabod Pearl, Ichabod Hayes, and Paul Demeritt; Tithingmen, Edward Varney, Anthony Peavey, James Nutter, Ezekiel Ricker, Samuel Varney, Alexander Berry, and Richard Rundlet; Fence-Viewers, John Walker, Ezekiel Ricker, Joseph Holmes, Elijah Meder, and David French; Field-Drovers, James French, Benjamin Runnals, Joseph Thompson, Jr., Moses Whitehouse, Paul Twombly, Moses Varney, and Samuel Drowne.

At this meeting it was voted "that the privilege of being a constable in said town of Farmington the present year shall be sold at vendue to the highest bidder, and the purchaser to give bonds to the satisfaction of the selectmen for the faithful performance of his duty."

The "constable birth," as it was called, was bid off by Ensign Samuel Knowles for twenty-one dollars and twenty-five cents. At this meeting John Taylor Gilman received one hundred and thirty-three votes for Governor. Richard Furbur was the town's first representative to the General Court.

In 1799 licenses to retail "foreign distilled spirituous liquors" were granted to the following persons: Joseph Holmes, Lakeman & Marsh, Benjamin Rundels, and Eleazar Pearl.

The following tavern licenses were granted: Joseph Holmes, Col. Richard Furbur, Samuel Knowles, Edward Knight, and Ephraim Perkins.

Ear-Marks.—The following are specimens of ear-marks used in the early days to distinguish cattle and sheep: Daniel Hayes, Jr.'s, mark was a "hole pounded through the right ear, and a piece out of the left ear;" and Simon Dame's mark was the "top cut off the right ear and the left ear split, and the underside cut off, or what is called a half take."

First Congregational Church.—The First Congregational Church of Farmington was organized Sept. 15, 1819, with the following members: Benjamin Furber, Peter Akerman, Noah Ham, Mary Furber, Mehitable Hayes, Mary Furber, Mehitable Furber, Elizabeth Roberts.

It was organized by Rev. James Walker, under the auspices of the New Hampshire Missionary Society.

The following is the list of pastors from the organization to the present time:

James Walker, 1819-26; Clement Parker, 1827-29; Timothy Morgan, 1840-42; Joseph Lane, 1844-46; Benjamin G. Wiley, 1847-50; Roger M. Sargent, 1851-52; D. D. Tappan, 1852-58; Roger M. Sargent, 1860-69; W. S. Kimball, 1869-71; Eugene H. Titus, 1872-74; Paul H. Pitkin, 1875-77; Walter E. Darling, 1877, present pastor.

Between 1829 and 1840 the church was usually supplied by students from Andover Theological Seminary, also by Elders Nutter, Simeon Sweet, Hiram Stephens, Enos George, and Dr. Blake, now of Gilmanton, N. H. One of the Andover students, Rev. Mr. Fiske, was instrumental during the year 1833 in obtaining the first Sunday-school library.

The present house of worship is a neat and substantial brick edifice.

The First Free-Will Baptist Church.—The society known as the First Free-Will Baptist Society of Farmington, N. H., was organized Oct. 21, 1854. The church existing in connection with the society was organized November 8th of the same year, with a membership of thirteen, five men and eight women. One of this number was the Rev. Dexter Waterman, who became the first pastor of the church. The meetings at this time were held in the old Peavey meeting-house, situated about three-quarters of a mile from the village. Under Mr. Waterman's labors the membership of the little church grew from thirteen to thirty-two. In the month of July, 1856, Mr. Waterman resigned, and was succeeded the following November by the Rev. J. M. L. Babcock. At a meeting of the society held March 2, 1857, a new plan for building a meeting-house was adopted, and four trustees were elected to superintend the undertaking. These trustees were Jacob P. Buzzell, John C. White, Reuben H. Copp, and Thomas C. Scruton. At the same time the pastor, Mr. Babcock, was chosen soliciting and building agent for the society. Among other things he was instructed to take a deed, in the name of the society, of the lot which was selected to be the site of the new house. This second effort for a church within the village was successful. On the 28th of October, 1857, the new meeting-house was dedicated with appropriate services, the dedicatory sermon being preached by the Rev. Ransom Dunn. Mr. Babcock's pastorate closed early in May, 1858. He was immediately succeeded by the Rev. Daniel P. Cilley. After a service extending through nearly three and a half years, during which period the country was plunged into the strife of the great Rebellion, Mr. Cilley, in the fall of 1861, having accepted an appointment as chaplain in the Eighth Regiment of New Hampshire Volunteers, terminated his pastoral relations with the church. During this pastorate twenty-three were added to the church, eleven of them by baptism. The Rev. Ezekiel True was the next pastor. His service extended from November, 1861, to the 1st of March, 1866. At a meeting occurring the 17th of March following, Mr. True having accepted a call to another field, it was voted to invite the Rev. D. P. Cilley, who had returned to Farmington, to assume charge of the church. A more formal call was subsequently given him, which he accepted. Such was his state of health, however, that the ensuing fall he was obliged to discontinue preaching, and the Rev. S. N. Tufts was engaged by the society to fill the pulpit. May 2, 1867, Mr. Cilley requested and obtained dismission as pastor of the church, and Mr. Tufts at once succeeded him in the pastorate. Mr. Tufts' labors ended Oct. 1, 1870. His successor was the Rev. George M. Park, whose pastorate began Nov. 1, 1870. During the ensuing fall and winter the religious interest deepened rapidly, and the congregations became so crowded that the society was led to take measures for enlarging the meeting-house.

After some necessary preliminary steps at a meeting of the society held June 5, 1871, a building committee was chosen, consisting of J. A. Roberts, S. B. Flanders, and Levi Pearl. On the 26th of the next December this committee reported the addition completed according to the plan, and their report was accepted. The following year, 1872, the church edifice was further enlarged and adorned by the construction of a new bell-tower and spire. Mr. Park's pastorate continued until Nov. 1, 1874, at which time the society was nearly if not quite out of debt. He received ninety-two persons to the church, seventy-four by baptism. The Rev. David H. Adams having accepted a call to the church, began his labors at once. During the first year of his stay the enlarged church vestry was finished, and apparatus put into the church for heating the whole building by steam. The next year the parsonage was built. The pastorate of Mr. Adams terminated Oct. 31, 1878. He was immediately succeeded by Rev. C. A. Bickford.

The society is in prosperous circumstances. Since its organization in 1854 the church has had a total membership of two hundred and fifty-three.

The church was without a pastor from Oct. 31, 1880, till Jan. 1, 1881, when Rev. David H. Adams,

RESIDENCE OF J. F. GLOUTMAN, FARMINGTON, N. H.

who had been preaching in Newmarket, N. H., for the last two years, was recalled to the church. Going back to his old field of labor, he has been pastor of the church since. Soon after his return, Jan. 1, 1881, a glorious work of grace broke out in the church and continued for a year. During 1881 Rev. Mr. Adams received forty-five into the church, thirty-four by baptism.

Farmington Village is a station on the Dover and Winnipisogee Railroad, a branch of the Boston and Maine, and is one of the most enterprising villages in the State. The principal industry is the manufacture of shoes, which is extensively carried on. In addition to the extensive factories are numerous mercantile establishments. The village also has two banks, national and savings; a newspaper, the Farmington News; an excellent hotel, the Wilson House; and one of the best town halls and opera-houses in the State. The latter was erected at a cost of about twenty thousand dollars, and is complete in all its appointments.

The present lawyers are George N. Eastman, George E. Cochran, and Frank Emerson.

The Farmington News, the pioneer newspaper published in this town, was established March 14, 1879, by J. E. Fernald & Son. It was originally a six-column sheet, but has since been enlarged to seven columns. It is an excellent local journal, and justly merits its present prosperity.

Lodges.—There are nine lodges in the village, viz.:

Fraternai Lodge, No. 71, F. and A. M.; Columbian Chapter, No. 18, R. A. M.; Woodbine Lodge, No. 41, I. O. O. F.; Mad River Encampment, No. 22, I. O. O. F.; Minnehaha Lodge, No. 11, Daughters of Rebekah; Harmony Lodge, No. 11, K. of P.; Security Lodge, No. 264, K. of H.; Subordinate Association, No. 17, Providence Mutual Relief; Eureka Council, No. 2, Royal Templars of Temperance.

The fire department is organized as follows:

Engineers, Eugene P. Nute, E. T. Willson, J. G. L. Smith. Hercules Fire Association, Sewell H. Parker, foreman, C. H. Pitman, clerk. Hook-and-Ladder Company, Jonathan R. Hayes, foreman, E. N. Dame, clerk.

Physicians.—David T. Parker, M.D., commenced practice here in 1837. He is a native of Bradford, Vt., and graduated from Bowdoin Medical School. He has remained in Farmington since his first settlement, and has enjoyed an extensive and lucrative practice. He has been president of the Strafford District and State Medical Societies.

David W. Edgerly, D.D.S., was in practice in Dover, N. H., and Bangor, Me., previous to coming to Farmington. He had an army experience as hospital steward of the Second Regiment Maine Volunteers for nearly two years. He located in Farmington in 1863. He is a graduate of the Boston Dental College, and has been president of the New Hampshire Dental Society.

Rufus B. Foss, M.D., came to Farmington in 1867 from Laconia, N. H. He had an army experience as acting assistant surgeon, and graduated at Bowdoin Medical School.

Orrin B. Hanson, M.D., commenced practice in Farmington in 1879, and is a graduate of Bellevue College Medical Hospital, New York.

Jerre S. Elkins, M.D., came to Farmington in 1881, and is a graduate of Bowdoin Medical School.

H. P. Wheatly, M.D., came to Farmington in 1882, and is a graduate of Burlington, Vt., Medical School.

Dr. Albert Garland, dentist, came from Rochester, N. H., to Farmington in 1880; is a member of the New Hampshire Dental Society. (Firm: Emerson & Garland, apothecaries.)

Farmington Shoe Interest.<sup>1</sup>—In 1836, Elijah H. Badger came to Farmington and commenced the manufacture of shoes known at that time as Natick sale work, Natick at this time being the banner town in the country for the manufacture of this peculiar grade of goods, brogans. He continued in business about one year, when he became financially embarrassed, and left town not to return again. About this time Martin L. Hayes commenced in a small way the manufacture of shoes. He continued increasing his business until he was regarded the largest manufacturer of shoes in the State, and from the time he commenced business he continued it almost without interruption through life. Mr. Hayes was a native of Farmington, and he always manifested a lively interest in the welfare of his town. To Mr. Hayes more than to any one else we are indebted for the beautiful shade-trees in our village. He set the example by setting fruit- and shade-trees on his own grounds, and the example was followed so generally that the village was very soon ornamented with beautiful shade-trees. Mr. Hayes always encouraged others to settle in Farmington, and instead of being selfish he did all possible to aid others to establish themselves in business in our town. About 1838 or 1840, George M. Hening came and settled in our town. He came from Natick, Mass. He immediately commenced manufacturing shoes, and continued in the business through his life. He took a lively interest in public affairs, both religious and political, and contributed much to advance what he thought beneficial to the community in which he lived. Much credit is due Mr. Hening for the enterprise and energy which characterized him through life. It soon became apparent to business men that Farmington was a good locality for manufacturing shoes, and Boston merchants did not long hesitate to invest their capital in the new enterprise in our town. Mr. J. F. Roberts soon came to the front, and having interested a house in Boston who had plenty of means, he soon came alongside his neighbors in the shoe business.

Mr. Roberts was a man much respected both for his energy and honesty. He continued but a short time, for his health failed him, and he, too, was soon numbered among those whose business history was short and honorable. Mr. Roberts was succeeded by his two brothers, George E. and Henry L. Roberts, who remained together a few years, when they dissolved, and each continued by himself. Henry L. is still doing business in town, while George E. has for the last eight or ten years been retired. About the same time that Mr. J. F. Roberts commenced manufacturing, Messrs. Alonzo and J. O. Nute commenced and continued together a few years, when J. O. withdrew. Alonzo remained in business, and has been continually engaged since, except a brief period in which he was in the army of the Union. Mr. Nute is one of those enterprising men who may always be found at the front in any enterprise he believes to be for the interests of his town. He still continues under the name and firm of A. Nute & Sons. They are among the largest, if not the largest, manufacturers in town. Among others who were early identified in the business of our town were Luther Wentworth, H. B. Edgerly, and Israel Hays. Mr. Wentworth continued a short time, but failing health compelled him to retire from active business, and disease soon took him from our midst. H. B. Edgerly still continues, and has been continually identified with the business for the past thirty years. Mr. James B. Edgerly, the present very efficient cashier of the Farmington National Bank, was associated with Mr. H. B. Edgerly for a few years. The name of the firm under which Mr. Edgerly does business at present is H. B. Edgerly & Son. Mr. Israel Hays is still in the manufacture, and his firm is I. Hays & Son. Mr. William Johnson was one of the early comers to our town to engage in manufacturing. He has since moved to the West, where he is engaged in shoe business, but not manufacturing.

Mr. N. T. Kimball and John L. Platts were also among those who were early identified with the shoe interest here. Mr. Platts removed to Dover, N. H., where he still resides, but he is not now doing shoe business. Mr. Kimball moved to Rochester, N. H., where he continued in business until his decease. Mr. John H. Hurd, now of Dover, N. H., is a native of Farmington. Mr. Hurd commenced and continued manufacturing in Farmington for many years, when he moved to Dover, N. H. Mr. Hurd is still doing business, and the name of his firm is John H. Hurd & Son. C. W. Thurston, of Dover, formerly did business in Farmington, and continued here until the great fire of 1875, which consumed his factory, together with a great deal of other property in our town. Mr. E. F. Jones manufactured shoes a number of years in town, at first in company with George A. Jones, who still continues. George A. Jones does a nice business, and has been actively engaged since he began. Mr. Daniel W. Kimball and John M. Berry were the active manufacturers for C. W. Thurston before his factory was destroyed. Since then Mr. Kimball has been manufacturing for a Boston house, and is doing a nice business. Mr. Berry has been actively engaged in business since he commenced some twelve years ago, and his factory now is one of the largest in town. Mr. Berry is the only manufacturer in town who makes long leg, crimped, and treed boots. He manufactures shoes in the winter and boots in the summer. Mr. E. C. Kinnear was one of the largest manufacturers in town for a number of years. He continued here for some ten or twelve years, when he moved to Dover, and continued the manufacture until recently, when he moved to Rockland, Mass. Mr. A. E. Putnam commenced manufacturing in our town some four years ago, and is still actively at work. He manufactures for a Boston house. J. F. Cloutman commenced in 1854, and has continued actively engaged in business ever since. He commenced the manufacturing of brogans, and continued in that branch of manufacture for nine years. Since that time he has made a different class of goods, and for the last eleven years has manufactured women's, misses', and children's light sewed goods, made of grains, glove, kid, calf, goat, and kid, lastings, etc. The value of the product of J. F. Cloutman's factory in 1882 will no doubt reach nearly one-half million dollars.

J. F. Cloutman brought the first wax-thread sewing-machine ever used for shoe work in the State into Farmington, about 1855. He is the senior partner of the firm of Cloutman & Bingham, 147 Summer Street, Boston, Mass. When manufacturing shoes commenced in our town there was no machinery used at all. Soles were cut from the sides of leather by hand, using a straight edge and pattern to mark the size of the sole. The heel lifts were cut out with knife and pattern. The inner soles were pegged on to the last, and made to fit the last by hand and the use of a knife. Upper patterns were made of pine wood generally, and bound with flat zinc about three-eighths of an inch wide. The uppers, after being cut, were sent into the country to be closed and made ready for the bottomer. The closing was done on the old-fashioned clamp, and the thread was prepared in the old-fashioned way, putting two or three threads together and waxing with the old-fashioned ball of wax by hand. The bottomer did all of his work by hand, and in fact from the beginning the shoe was made entirely by hand, without the aid of machinery. To-day the methods are entirely changed. Machinery is used to cut the soles; it is used to prepare the heels; it is used to mould the soles that they may the better fit the shape of the last; it is used by many to last the shoe; it is used to tack the outer sole on the shoe after lasting it; it is used in pegging, sewing, or nailing; it is used in leveling the bottom; it is used in putting the heel on; it is used in smoothing or shaving the heel; it is used in trimming the front edge of the shoe; it is used to set or burnish the front edge and heel; it is used to buff or scour the bottom preparatory to finishing it; and in fitting or stitching the upper it is used from the beginning to the finish. Even the button-holes are worked in silk by machinery, and one operator can make from two thousand five hundred to four thousand button-holes per day. Machinery has made it possible to produce a much nicer boot or shoe, for a much less price, and in many cases one-half the cost, than under the old methods. Thirty years ago it was considered a fair business for one manufacturer to manufacture ten cases per week, or six hundred pairs per week, and twenty cases, twelve hundred pairs per week, was considered a great business. Today there are a great many factories that produce from two to three thousand pairs each per day. The manufacturers of our town manufactured in 1881 about fifty thousand cases, or about one million five hundred thousand pairs, the value of which is probably about two million dollars. Farmington has always been the largest shoe manufacturing town in the State, and continues so to-day. This short sketch, although so incomplete, will enable the reader to realize the changes the business has undergone the past thirty years. The shoe manufacturers of Farmington probably pay out annually in cash for labor five hundred thousand dollars, and furnish employment for from one thousand to twelve hundred people.

The Farmington Savings-Bank was chartered in June, 1868, and organized the same year by the choice of George M. Herring, president; Thomas F. Cooke, treasurer; G. M. Herring, A. Nute, Hiram Barker, George N. Eastman, David T. Parker, H. B. Edgerly, John Barker, John G. Johnson, Daniel Pearl, C. W. Wingate, John H. Stevens, Levi Pearl, and Elijah Jenkins, trustees.

Mr. Herring held the office of president until his death, in 1875. Jan. 14, 1876, Hon. John F. Cloutman was elected president, and held the office until May, 1881, when he was succeeded by C. W. Wingate, Esq.

Mr. Cooke held the office of treasurer until his death, Nov. 11, 1880, and was succeeded in office by William Yeaton.

The present organization of the bank is as follows: C. W. Wingate, Esq., president; George N. Eastman, Esq., vice-president; William Yeaton, treasurer; Charles W. Wingate, George N. Eastman, Levi Pearl, H. B. Edgerly, William W. Hayes, John F. Cloutman, Hiram Barker, Jonathan R. Hayes, David S. Parker, A. Nute, Josiah B. Edgerly, John Tuttle, John H. Barker, D. W. Edgerly, G. E. Cochrane, E. P. Nute, trustees.

May 1, 1882, it had deposits, $212,552.83; guaranty fund, $6000; surplus, $10,863.46.

The Farmington National Bank was organized in July, 1872, with the following board of directors: George M. Herring, J. F. Cloutman, John H. Barker, H. B. Edgerly, Alonzo Nute, C. W. Thurston, Charles W. Talpey, Martin L. Hayes, Edwin Wallace. First president, G. M. Herring; first cashier, Thomas F. Cooke. Present president, J. F. Cloutman; present cashier, James B. Edgerly. Capital, $100,000; surplus, $2500; undivided profits, $4786.

Incorporation of Town.—Farmington was incorporated in 1799.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

JUDGE GEO. L. WHITEHOUSE.

Prominent among the older ones in Farmington who have had much to do in forming public opinion on all the various subjects of the day, and who has been honored with the suffrages of the people and called to positions of trust and responsibility, and who has discharged those obligations with credit to himself and satisfaction to his constituents, is Judge George L. Whitehouse. He is of Welsh extraction. Tradition has it that three brothers came from Wales in the early settlement of this country, and settled in different parts of New England, and from these three have descended all who now bear the name.

Turner Whitehouse, grandfather of the subject of this sketch, was a native of Dover, and settled in Rochester, Strafford Co., N. H., soon after he had married a Miss Hanson, who also belonged to an old New England family. He followed the business of tanning and shoemaking. He had a large and intelligent family of eleven children,—ten sons and one daughter,—of whom Nathaniel Whitehouse was the second son. He died in Rochester.

Nathaniel Whitehouse was born in Rochester, October, 1767, and died in Farmington, N. H., in 1850, aged eighty-three years. He settled in the town of Middleton, N. H., after his marriage, and followed the occupation of a farmer. Before his marriage to Anna Leighton, daughter of Samuel Leighton, of Farmington, about 1795, he had been in Farmington and worked on the farm by the month at six dollars per month. Mrs. Nathaniel (Leighton) Whitehouse was born Dec. 4, 1775, and died October, 1864, nearly ninety years of age. Of this union, one son, George L., was born Jan. 6, 1797, in Middleton, N. H.

George L. Whitehouse's advantages for an education were limited to twenty months of school, six weeks of which were spent at Gilmanton Academy. Mr. Whitehouse has been a constant reader of the periodicals and news of the day, and of history, and thus has a fund of useful knowledge which has been used to the good of humanity. Very early in life he manifested a strong desire for mechanics. He remained at home on the farm till he was eighteen years of age, during which time he was somewhat engaged in surveying. At sixteen he commenced teaching school, and taught several terms. Hired money at twelve per cent. interest, which he subsequently repaid in full, so as to obtain the necessary means to go to school. In 1815 he entered as an apprentice the cotton-factory of James Hardy, of Union Village, Wakefield, and was with him two summer seasons, teaching winters. He then was engaged in farming till 1824 in Middleton with his father; then came to Farmington and began business as a grocer, and was thus employed three years.

In April, 1827, he was appointed deputy sheriff of old Strafford County, and served six years, or till May, 1833. March, 1833, was elected register of deeds, and served till August, 1839. In the fall of 1839 returned to Farmington, and built a canal on the head-waters of the Cocheo River, three-quarters of a mile long, on which he erected a saw- and grist-mill for himself, which was subsequently changed to a cotton-factory. This enterprise did not prove successful. After a few years he went to Dover, and was then engaged as assistant engineer on the Cochecho Railroad, one and a half years, in the construction of the road from Dover to Farmington. In 1851 he began the preliminary survey of the Portsmouth, Great Falls and Conway Railroad, Rochester and Nashua Railroad, from Rochester to Nashua, the South Berwick Branch Railroad, and the Wolfborough Branch Railroad, Exeter Railroad, from Epping to Salisbury, Mass., and was thus engaged till 1871. A portion of this time, however, he was chief engineer. It will thus be seen that Judge Whitehouse has been constantly engaged in some public way all through a long and useful life, having been land surveyor for sixty years, civil engineer for forty years, justice of the peace and quorum throughout the State, and notary public for the States of New Hampshire and Illinois, judge of the Court of Common Pleas from 1841 to 1855, deputy sheriff for six years, crier of court three years, recorder of deeds six years, captain in the New Hampshire militia, and served in the war of 1812, for which service he now draws a pension. As pension agent he obtained one hundred and fifty land warrants and fifty pensions.

In politics he has been a lifelong Democrat of the old school, casting his first vote for James Monroe for President, and voting at every Presidential election since. He has held all the important town offices in Middleton and Farmington. He was a member of the State Legislature from Farmington in 1830; again in 1856-57, serving on the Railroad and Judiciary Committees.

He was appointed associate justice of the Court of Common Pleas in 1841, and served till 1855, or till that law was abolished. During a portion of this time he had Hon. Hiram A. Roberts, of Rollingsford, and Hon. J. H. Ederly, of Rochester, as his associates.

He married Liberty N., daughter of Paul Dame, of Rochester, June, 1822. Of this union four children were born,—three sons and one daughter.

The oldest, a boy, George W. Whitehouse, was married, and died of consumption, leaving a widow, now living, and a daughter, who has since died. The second, Charles C., was a sailor. He was married. His wife died, leaving one son, Charles Walter, who is now with his grandparents. Charles C. Whitehouse sailed as first mate on a ship from New York for Valparaiso. Three days out of Richmond the vessel was wrecked. The captain drowned. The crew were taken from the wreck by a Spanish ship; carried into Cadiz. Charles was delirious of fever, died aboard the Spanish ship, and was buried in the "ocean which he loved so well." The daughter, Laura Ann, married James E. Fernald, Esq., of Farmington, and has one son, George W., who is an engineer and editor of the Farmington News. The youngest, a son, Walter Scott, was a very bright boy, died young.

JOHN F. CLOUTMAN.

John F. Cloutman was born in New Durham, N. H., Dec. 27, 1831. He is of Scotch descent, his paternal ancestor having come from the Highlands of Scotland somewhere about 1650, and settled near Portsmouth, at New Castle, N. H. His maternal ancestors were of English extraction, and were among the early settlers of New Hampshire. He was some town official for more than thirty years. One of the name settled at Wakefield, N. H., and one at Conway, N. H.

John Cloutman, grandfather of John F., the subject of this sketch, was probably born at Wakefield, N. H., where he followed the occupation of a carpenter. He had children,—Mary, John F., Ann, Gilman, Alfred, Hersey, and Jeremiah A.,—all of whom were born at Wakefield. John Cloutman died at the advanced age of more than eighty years.

John F. Cloutman, son of John, was a carpenter by trade and farmer by occupation. He married Patience T., daughter of Andrew Ederly, and had nine children, three of whom died in youth, and six grew to maturity, viz.: Erastus F., who was a soldier in the Mexican war, had his name changed by Legislative enactment to Ralph Carlton. He was captain in Company E, Third New Hampshire Volunteer Regiment, and was killed at James Island during the great civil war; Martha (Mrs. James Davis); John F.; Horatio G.; James A.; and Ellen F. (Mrs. Edward D. Seymour). John F. Cloutman, Sr., died at Memphis, Tenn., at forty-eight years of age.

John F. Cloutman, Jr., whose portrait accompanies this sketch, received very limited advantages of an education, but he has obtained by reading and reflection a good practical business education, and is thoroughly posted on all the important questions of the day. He remained at home, working on the farm till he was some thirteen years of age, when he began to learn the manufacture of shoes. Having worked in the various departments of the business till he was twenty-two years of age, he went to Boston, April 22, 1853, and arranged to do work for Joseph Whitney & Co.; accordingly, he returned to Farmington and manufactured shoes on his own account for the above firm, and was thus employed for nine years.

In 1862 he began the manufacture of shoes at Farmington, with the Wallace Bros., of Rochester, N. H., and was associated with them some two years, and the following six or seven years manufactured on his own account. In 1871 he was engaged by Wallace, Elliott & Co., as superintendent of their manufacturing interest at Farmington, and has continued as such ever since. Besides this, he was interested from 1875 to 1879 in the manufacture of shoes with the Wallace Bros., under the firm-name of Wallace & Cloutman, John M. Berry, superintendent. Since 1879 it has been Cloutman & Bingham, the Wallace Bros. having a special interest. John M. Berry still continues as superintendent.

Their house in Boston is 147 Summer Street. In 1877 Mr. Cloutman built his present fine brick building, which is occupied by Wallace, Elliott & Co.'s manufacturing interest. It is forty by one hundred and fifty feet exclusive of the boiler- and engine-room, and four stories above the basement. They employ some three hundred hands, manufacture some three hundred and seventy-five thousand pairs of ladies' misses', and children's shoes every year, made from kid, goat, etc. It cost more than $500 per day for the labor, and the proceeds amount to more than $450,000 yearly. He has always been a Democrat in politics.

In 1862 and 1863 he represented Farmington in the State Legislature, when the town was strongly Republican. In 1876 and 1877 was elected State senator from his district (Sixth), serving on the "Banking Committee" and "Manufacturing Committee." He has been town auditor and town treasurer, and was a member of the committee that built, in 1881 and 1882, the fine town hall which now (1882) stands as a monument to the intelligence and public spirit of the good people of Farmington.

At the organization of the Farmington National Bank, in 1872, he was elected its vice-president, and upon the death, in 1875, of its president, George M. Herring, he was elected president, which position he still continues to hold. He has also been vice-president and president of Farmington Savings-Bank till the spring of 1881, when he declined longer to serve. He still remains one of its trustees. He is a member of St. Paul Commandery, Knights Templar, of Dover, N. H., and has been Junior and Senior Warden of his own lodge, in Farmington, N. H., and Master five years. He has been District Deputy Grand Master of First Masonic District in New Hampshire two years, and filled honorable positions in Columbian Chapter, in Farmington.

He has been twice married,—first to Amanda M., daughter of Eleazer Davis, of Alton, N. H., March 4, 1854; she died June 4, 1868. He married his second wife, Ellen E., daughter of Samuel A. Kimball, July 3, 1869. Of this union two children have been born,—Nellie A. and John F.

HIRAM BARKER.

Hiram Barker is a lineal descendant of the first Barker, who came from England and settled in the town of Stratham, Rockingham Co., N. H., at a very early day. (For a more complete history of his ancestry, see biography of Ezra Barker, Stratham, N. H.) His grandfather was John Barker, a native of Stratham. He was a carpenter and joiner by trade, also cabinet-maker. He went to Epping probably about the time he married, as all his children were born there. He continued to reside in Epping till his death, which occurred in advanced life. He owned a farm also, and was considered successful for those days. He was twice married, and had one son, John, and four daughters by his first marriage, and one daughter by his second marriage.

John Barker, son of John, was born in Epping, Rockingham Co., N. H., July 28, 1762, and died in New Durham, July 9, 1830. He married Sally, daughter of Eleazer Davis, of Alton, N. H. She was born May 16, 1780, and died June 19, 1870.

He was a carpenter and joiner by trade, and a farmer by occupation. During the earlier part of his life he was a successful school-teacher, and among his pupils was Governor William Plumer, of Epping. He was a resident of Epping, N. H., where all his children, except the two youngest, were born. About 1813 he went to New Durham, and followed his business till his death. Both Mr. and Mrs. John Barker were religious people, and reared their children to habits of industry and economy, most of whom became wealthy and respected in their various places of abode. Mr. Barker came to his death suddenly by falling from a barn. A fine monument, erected by his sons John and Hiram, in the Farmington Cemetery, marks the last resting-place of himself and wife. They were industrious, God-fearing people, and left the record of a good name as a precious legacy to their children.

Their children are (1) Mercy (deceased), Mrs. Ephraim Mallard, of Laconia, (2) John, (3) Dudley (deceased), (4) Eleazer D. (deceased), (5) Sarah D. (deceased), Mrs. Gilman Cooper, of Wolfborough, (6) an infant, (7) Hiram, and (8) Eleazer D. (2d).

Hiram Barker, the immediate subject of our sketch, was born in Alton, old Strafford Co. (now Belknap Co.), Dec. 21, 1815. He remained at home working on his father's farm till he was sixteen years of age. His advantages for an education were limited, yet by that same indomitable energy which has been one of his chief characteristics through a long and successful business career he has obtained by reading and reflection a practical education, and a fund of knowledge which he uses to good advantage. In the spring of 1831, at sixteen years of age, he went to Portsmouth, where he was engaged as a clerk, but not liking that, went to Wolfborough, N. H., subsequently to Alton and Dover, remaining but a short time at each place. During the years 1833 and 1834 he was engaged in peddling tin-ware and clocks in New Hampshire and Maine. In the spring of 1835 he began mercantile business at Alton, and after remaining there one year sold out and came to Farmington, where he was engaged in trade till 1880. During those years he was extensively engaged in the real estate and lumber business. He also owns large tracts of land in Nebraska, on which roam hundreds of sheep and cattle, and large real estate interests in Chicago, Iowa, Kansas, and Minnesota. He has large interests in stocks of various kinds, and was president of the old Farmington State Bank for more than fifteen years, or during its existence. In politics he is a firm believer in those principles of government as taught by the father of the Democratic party, Jefferson, and exemplified by Gen. Jackson. He has held all the important town offices, such as selectman, etc. He was a member of the State Legislature in 1849-50, and a member of the Constitutional Convention in the winter of 1850-51, serving on the Judiciary Committee. He has been a candidate for the State Senate from his district, and though defeated ran far ahead of his ticket, also councillor.

He married Maria, daughter of Reuben and Patience Hayes, of New Durham, July 29, 1838. She was a native of New Durham, and died Feb. 29, 1880. She was a lady of culture and refinement, and her memory is cherished by a large circle of friends and relatives. Of their seven children, four died in infancy and youth. Clara, a young lady, who now (1882) resides at home with her father; Martha C., who died at sixteen; and Hiram II., who is married and resides in Farmington.

The record of Hiram Barker is one of prosperity and great financial success. He commenced life poor, but shrewd common sense, integrity of character, sagacity, and ability, have united to make a record of which any man may well be proud.

Judged by his record and success, as developed by a liberal and wise policy, it is not too much to say that he ranks foremost among the men who have lived in Farmington. The history of Hiram and John Barker is closely allied with the history of Farmington. They come from an energetic stock, who as a rule have refused political preferment, but have given comprehensive abilities, sterling integrity, and sagacious industry to the development of their business. Many of the successful sons of the old Granite State owe an imperishable debt of gratitude to their ancestors for having bequeathed to them those cardinal principles of success which lie at the foundation of every successful life.

ALONZO NUTE.

Among the prominent men of Stratford County, N. H., who have made their own fortunes we place the name of Alonzo Nute. He came from a hardy New England stock, who have ever been noted for their love of liberty and brave defenders of their country's honor. His grandfather was Jotham Nute, a native of Dover, and was born Nov. 23, 1760. His grandmother was Sarah Twombly, a native of Dover, N. H. Jotham enlisted as a soldier of the Revolutionary war April 1, 1776, and was mustered out at its close as sergeant. He married Jan. 7, 1786, and soon after settled in the town of Milton, where he followed the occupation of a farmer. His children were (1) John (deceased), (2) Jeremy (deceased), (3) Jacob (deceased), (4) Sarah, wife of William Allen, of Rochester; (5) David (deceased), father of Alonzo Nute; (6) Israel (deceased), (7) Daniel (deceased), (8) Ivory (deceased), (9) Levi (deceased), (10) Andrew T., who is a resident of Lowell, Mass., and (11) Sophia (deceased). All of this large family were born on the old homestead in Milton, N. H. He and his wife were members of the Congregational Church. He died Feb. 3, 1826.

David Nute, fourth son of Jotham Nute, was born in Milton, April 30, 1797, and died Sept. 4, 1881. He was a farmer and carpenter. He married Lovina, daughter of Peter Cook, of Wakefield, N. H. Their children are Alonzo, Jeremy O., Leander M., David II., who was a soldier in the Fifth New Hampshire; Israel M., a soldier in the Fifth New Hampshire Volunteers, and was killed at Fair Oaks, Va. David Nute was a Whig and Republican in politics, and a member of the Congregational Church. He was an industrious, economical man, and reared his children to habits of industry and frugality.

Alonzo Nute was born Feb. 12, 1826, in Milton, on the same farm which has been in the family since about 1786. He remained at home till he was sixteen years of age, working on his father's farm summers, and attending the common school winters. At sixteen, in 1842, he went to Natick, Mass., to learn the manufacture of boots and shoes, and was there employed till 1848. During some two years of this time he was in the employ of Vice-President Henry Wilson, and lived in his family. During the winter of 1846-47 he attended school at Leicester, Mass. In the spring of 1849 he returned to his native county and located at Farmington, where he was employed the following summer by Martin L. Hayes (deceased). (See M. L. Hayes' biography.) Mr. Nute commenced business for himself in the fall of 1849, in company with his brother, Jeremy O., at Farmington, N. H., and after four years they dissolved partnership, since which time Mr. Nute has conducted his business himself, assisted by his sons Eugene P. and Alonzo I., who have been partners in the business since 1875, under the firm-name of "A. Nute & Sons."

Mr. Nute's shoe-factory was destroyed by fire in the fall of 1874, and he rebuilt it in the remarkably short time of twenty days. His main building is thirty-two by one hundred and eighty-five feet, two stories, and two stories above, thirty-two by one hundred and ten feet. Beside this, he has one wood building thirty-six by ninety feet, with two wings each thirty by thirty-six feet. The firm of "A. Nute & Sons" employ some three hundred hands, costing some five hundred dollars per day. They manufacture some fifteen thousand cases of men's and boys' light kip goods. These goods are made on commission for Messrs. Potter, White & Bayley, of Boston, and the proceeds amount to some four hundred thousand dollars yearly.

In politics he is a Republican. At the breaking out of the great civil war, in the spring of 1861, he buckled on his sword and went forth to battle. Here the love of liberty, as was more than once shown by his noble ancestry, burned in his breast. He went into the army in the fall of 1861 as quartermaster of the Sixth New Hampshire Regiment, and remained two years. After his regiment had entered the field he was detached and placed on Gen. Rush C. Hawkins' staff of the Ninth New York Zouaves, and thus remained till the spring of 1863, when he returned to Farmington, N. H., and soon afterward resumed his former business. He represented Farmington in the State Legislature in 1866, and the State Senate in 1867-68. During 1881 and 1882 he was associated with Messrs. Cloutman and Fernald as a building committee in the erection of the town hall. He married Mary, daughter of Joseph and Betsey Pearl, of Milton, April 14, 1850. She was born in Farmington, April 1, 1829. Their children are Eugene P., born June 14, 1852; married Nellie Packer, of Farmington, N. H., June 3, 1881. (2) Alonzo I., born Sept. 21, 1853.

CHARLES W. TALPEY.

Charles W. Talpey, whose portrait adorns this work, was born Nov. 16, 1825. His great-grandfather, Richard Talpey, was originally an inhabitant of Gosport, Isles of Shoals; was selectman of that town from 1737 to 1771 nearly every year. Moved to York, Me., in 1775. His son Henry was the father of Jonathan, who was the father of Charles W. Talpey.

Jonathan Talpey was born in 1793 at York, Me.; was a sailor till middle age, being captain many years; served in the war of 1812, taken prisoner, and remained in the celebrated Dartmoor prison, England, nearly three years; was deacon of the Baptist Church at Lake Umbagog, York, Me., a great many years, and died in 1863.

He married, Nov. 25, 1817, Elizabeth Carlisle (daughter of Daniel Carlisle, of York, Me.), who was born Feb. 16, 1796, and now living at the old homestead at York. Charles W. Talpey, the immediate subject of this sketch, was the eighth child of his parents. Having received a good academic education, he at the age of nineteen went to Dover, N. H., to learn the apothecary business. In 1855 engaged with the Eureka Powder-Works, at New Durham, as clerk. Spent two years, from 1857 till 1859, in the West, which proved a financial failure, but was a large gain in experience. In 1861 he commenced a seafaring life, which he continued till 1867, being captain the last four years. During the war of the Rebellion he was employed in the Transport Department, which was a financial success.

In 1863 he was married to Mary Abbie Berry, of New Durham, N. H., a daughter of Elder Nathan and Mary Berry. It was then he really commenced to live, for with his amiable companion he appears to be the happiest of the happy. In 1867 he moved to Farmington, N. H., and engaged in the mercantile business in company with John B. Berry, under the firm-name of Berry & Talpey. The copartnership was discontinued in 1870, from which time Mr. Talpey operated alone till 1878, when he took as partner a nephew, E. T. Willson, under the firm-name of Talpey & Willson. In February, 1882, he sold out his interest to his partner, and now is engaged in the coal business.

Mr. Talpey has been an eminently successful man financially, always by his strict business habits and his unswerving integrity securing the largest patronage in his locality. He has ever been closely identified in his social and political surroundings. A Republican in politics, he was chairman of the selectmen of Farmington for the years 1870-73; town treasurer, 1870-74; tax collector in 1875; was elected State senator from Somersworth District for the term ending June, 1883; was chosen clerk of Farmington village precinct in 1874, and has been chosen each year since; is secretary of Fraternal Lodge, A. F. and A. M., of Farmington; also secretary of chapter; clerk of the Baptist Society; is a Past Grand of the I. O. O. F., and member of the Knights of Honor.

Thus we see Mr. Talpey, in whatever sphere he may engage, whether as merchant, politician, or in his social gatherings, ever getting to the front, and when we reflect that at the time of his marriage in 1863 he was not worth a dollar, so to speak, we can but attribute much of his success to the counsel and love which he has ever received at the hands of his amiable wife. A beautiful home and a competency, good health and loving companions, what more is wanted here?

THE HAYES FAMILY.

We can only start this genealogy, and leave its continuance to members of this wide-spread and highly respectable family.

John Hayes, the ancestor, is said by tradition to have emigrated from Scotland about 1680, and to have settled at Dover "Corner." Tradition also says that a brother, Ichabod, settled "south," as to which we know nothing. John had a grant of twenty acres between Tole-end and Barbadoes, March 19, 1693-94, laid out Nov. 4, 1702. Doubtless most of his possessions came by purchase. He married, June 28, 1686, Mary Horne. Tradition says she was then but thirteen years old, of which we confess painful doubts. The date of his death we have not found. He had children; order not clear (Fam. 1).—

1. John, born 1686. (See below.)
2. Peter. (See below.)
3. Robert.
4. Ichabod, born March 13, 1691-92. (See below.)
5. Samuel, born March 16, 1694-95. (See below.)
6. William, born Sept. 6, 1698.
7. Benjamin, born September, 1700. (See below.)

And three daughters, who married, respectively, a Phipps of Salisbury, an Ambrose of Salisbury, and an Ambrose of Chester. Perhaps there were other children.

Moses had children,—

1. Hezekiah, born Nov. 7, 1778.

2. Elisabeth, born Aug. 9, 1780.

3. Molly, born June 2, 1782.

4. John, born April 5, 1785.

5. Stephen, born Oct. 29, 1788.

Ichabod Hayes was born March 8, 1775, and died Nov. 5, 1833. His first wife was Deborah French.

She was born June 5, 1779, and died Jan. 14, 1824. They were married Nov. 10, 1796. Of this union fourteen children were born, of whom Martin L. Hayes was the ninth. His second wife was Sarah Plumer, by whom he had two children.

Martin L. Hayes, shoe manufacturer, born in Farmington, N. H., March 28, 1812, died June 24, 1879. He was the pioneer shoe manufacturer in this State. In early life he was very poor, and at fifteen years of age had been bound out to a shoemaker named Stevens, at Alton, near Farmington, who tanned and carried all the leather he used in making shoes for the country people.

After he had learned his trade, but before his time was out, Hayes became restless. To make shoes or put on patches for a sixpence, with charges running a year, or possibly two, to be settled finally, perhaps, by payments made in fence rails or fodder, did not seem to make a trade worth much, even when one had worked six years to acquire it. He had yet ten months to serve before he would be twenty-one, but he had fifty dollars that he had earned in tanning dog- and cat-skins for whip-lashes and strings, that had been allowed to him as one of the perquisites of his apprenticeship. So he bought his time for forty dollars, and, with his bundle on a stick and ten dollars in silver, he walked to Dover, eighteen miles distant, and went by stage to Boston, bound to Natick, where he finally arrived with fifty cents remaining of his capital.

He procured work at once with Edward Walcott, and kept at it for about ten years, working industriously and saving every cent. Then, with a little money, he returned to Farmington to start shoe manufacturing on his own account. Young men who jump into the shoe trade without a preliminary experience, backed by ample means, and fret because they can't retire with a fortune at the end of five years, will be interested to learn how Mr. Hayes started to manufacture shoes, how he helped to build a town and enrich a township, and how he became the possessor of forty-seven thousand acres of land. His return to Farmington was some time in the year 1837 or 1838. Affairs there were pretty much in the same condition as when he left. A man named Badger had undertaken the manufacture of shoes, but it did not pay, and the business, which had never amounted to much, was suddenly terminated one day by Mr. Badger's abrupt departure for parts unknown, leaving his creditors to settle his business as best they could. This, it would seem, was rather an unpromising field for a new beginner; but Hayes was not dismayed. The difficulties were many and insurmountable to any other than a determined spirit. The stock was either shipped on coasting packets from Boston to Portsmouth, and thence up river to Dover, or all the way by stage (as the Boston and Maine Railroad was not built until about 1840-41), and the shoes must be returned the same way in time for the semi-annual auction sales held at Boston, which was then the method of selling.

Besides the difficulties of transportation, there were also the inconveniences attending the imperfect facilities for the preparation of stock in the shop. Sides of leather were carried to the river and soaked, but this was afterwards improved upon by substituting a hog-head of water which stood outside; then, again, the sides of leather must be cut up in chunks, and pieces skived with the shoe-knife; a broad flat rock on which the leather was vigorously hammered answered for a roller. This was a rough beginning for the shoe trade of Farmington; but that was not all. The hard times of 1837 bore heavily on the young shoe trade of New England; all manufactures were depressed, complaint was loud, and distress was general; 1840 came, and still "hard pan" hadn't been reached; 1841-42, and yet no better. The trade in shoes was a mere barter. The workmen were paid in store orders for making shoes that sold for fifty cents a pair in Boston, and the order taken up on the delivery of rolls of tough bulls' hides to the storekeeper, who sold them in small pieces to the custom trade for taps. By working sixteen hours a day himself, and practicing rigid economy in personal expenses, a man might pull through, and he did. In 1843 there came the long looked-for reaction. Now came the tide of opportunity for Farmington. Anything in the shape of a shoe would sell, large profits were being realized, and Natick could not fill her orders for her want of workmen. Before the depression there had been no want of help. Stratford County had kept the shoe-shops well filled, and now, when wanted, the men were not at hand; most of them had long since returned to their homes and settled down on rocky farms, and some had found other occupations. The married men who could make shoes were unwilling to return to Natick, and there were many such in the vicinity of Farmington: so that it happened that, as the men would not go to work at Natick, the work of Natick must go to Farmington, and watchful men were standing eager to guide the auspicious movement. Special inducements were held out to mechanics to settle in the place, enterprise was encouraged by liberal policy and active co-operation, the weak sustained, fidelity and good service well rewarded: so that, without the help of a single dollar not earned upon the spot, Farmington has grown into a rich and handsome village, whose citizens all commenced life at the very bottom.

After 1840, Martin L. Hayes began to get money for his shoes and count his profits, rather more aspiring to the possession of land than to a pre-eminence in the shoe trade; these profits he invested, with proper caution, in real estate, disposing of it again to shoemakers in return for work,—a system that has given to many poor men comfortable homes, and still contributed to the honest profits of the worthy manufacturer. In the centre of the village, on a five-acre lot,

Mr. Hayes had erected an elegant mansion, himself the architect, the house and grounds in all of their appointments conforming strictly to the notions of the master.

He was fairly worn out for the last six months; yet he kept up until but a few days before his death. Mr. Hayes got fairly started in 1839, making shoes for Forbush & Townsend, afterward for William Barrage & Co., then for Joseph Whitney & Co., Allen, Harris & Potter, Potter, Nute, White & Bixley, Potter, Hitchcock & Co., and Chase, Merritt & Blanchard, No. 94 Pearl Street; the latter was his last and longest business connection.

Jeremiah Colbath (afterward Hon. Henry Wilson) and Hon. George M. Herring, both of whom had made their mark in the world, were his associates in Natick, and were his lifelong friends. Mr. Herring became established in Farmington about 1843, and died in September, 1875. The history of Mr. Wilson is too well known to need mention here.

Martin L. Hayes married Eliza Pearl, daughter of Joseph Pearl, who was a sister to the wife of Hon. Alonzo Nute; she died about thirty years since, leaving him one child, a daughter, now the wife of George E. Davis, of Lawrence, Mass., who inherits his large property.

His funeral services were held at his residence on the 26th of June, and were conducted by the Revs. J. E. Dame and Walter E. Darling. His pall-bearers were H. B. Edgerly, Hiram Barker, J. W. Waldron, G. N. Eastman, Levi Pearl, C. W. Wingate. The body was conveyed to the family tomb, and placed in the sarcophagus which was prepared under his own direction several years since. Nearly all the business places were closed, and about all the manufacturers were present.

In politics he was one of the first who cast an anti-slavery vote in Farmington. He was always a strictly temperance man, and refused to hold any public office. He was one of the incorporators of the savings-bank, and at one time one of the trustees, and was also a director of the Farmington National Bank at its beginning.

His two lifelong friends were G. M. Herring and Henry Wilson, both of whom he outlived. In memory of Mr. Wilson, Mr. Hayes deeded to the town of Farmington the birthplace of Wilson, and at his own expense placed a large boulder from a neighboring mountain, weighing about twelve tons, on the spot, and had inscribed upon the stone, "Henry Wilson, Vice-President U. S. A., born here February 12, 1812."

DR. DAVID T. PARKER.

David Taylor Parker, the son and third child of Rev. Clement and Rachel Taylor Parker, was born in Bradford, Vt., April 10, 1813, and is the fifth in descent (Clement<sup>1</sup>, Lenuel<sup>2</sup>, John<sup>3</sup>, Samuel<sup>4</sup>) from Samuel Parker, who was born in Newton, Mass., and whose parents were killed by Indians in King Philip's war, about the year 1675. Samuel, while a young man, went to Connecticut, was one of the first settlers of the town of Coventry, and was the first man who officiated as deacon of the church in that town. He lived respected, and died at a very advanced age. His great-grandson, Clement, a short time after the birth of the subject of this sketch, removed to Cabot, Vt., where he lived until the winter of 1816, when he went to the West Parish, in Chester, N. H., where he was ordained for the Presbyterian Church in that town, and labored with that people during ten years. He then removed to Milton, N. H., and, after two or three years, to Acton, Me. His son David lived with and followed the fortunes of his father, with occasional exceptions of working out at farming, until he was seventeen years old, when he left the paternal roof and attended school at the academy in Alfred, Me. In the winter of 1830-31 he taught schools in Waterborough, Me., being then in his eighteenth year; from that time he attended school in summer, teaching in the winter, until his twentieth year, when he began the study of medicine with L. M. Barker, M.D., at Great Falls (Somersworth). He attended lectures at Dartmouth College in 1833, afterwards studying with Dr. Charles F. Elliott and with Dr. B. Smart, of Kennebunk, Me., graduating at Bowdoin College, May 17, 1836. He has been married twice,—first to Clara C. Chamberlain, of Lebanon, Me., April 18, 1833, with whom he lived more than forty-three years. She died Nov. 7, 1876, having been the mother of three children,—a daughter, who died in her first year, and two sons, both of whom arrived at the age of manhood, and chose the profession of their father, studying and practicing medicine. The elder son died of pneumonia in La Harpe, Ill., and the younger, a man of unusual genius for his profession, served through the late civil war, was six months in Salisbury prison, having been put in charge of the prison hospital, came home at the close of the war, and died Dec. 31, 1866, of disease contracted thereby. His father was married June 16, 1878, to Mrs. Lucy A. Fernald, a cousin of his first wife, and who is his willing helpmeet in benevolence.

Dr. Parker commenced the practice of medicine March 3, 1837, in Farmington, N. H., which was then a small, obscure village of fifteen houses and about one hundred and twenty-five inhabitants, and which he has seen increase more than twentyfold.

He has been a lifelong Whig or Republican, and was chosen to represent the town in 1864-65, by forty votes over the general ticket, which was largely Democratic. He was in 1842-43 elected president of the Strafford District Medical Society, and in 1872 was made president of the New Hampshire Medical Society. He has been for many years a member of the American Medical Association, and belongs to several other societies. He is strongly allopathic, and has nothing to do with quackery in any form. His scanty spare time is devoted to reading and study and keeping up with the medical literature of the time. As for the esteem in which he is held as a physician, it is enough to say that the same families who employed him forty-five years ago employ him to-day.

In religion he is strictly orthodox, and has contributed more according to his means than any other citizen towards the support of the Congregational Church.

His sensitiveness to want and suffering has prevented him from accumulating so many specimens of the almighty dollar as most men of his ability and of his successful practice would have laid by for the rainy day of old age, but the needy and hungry have never been turned from his door nor suffered for lack of his care. He might for reasons refuse to attend a rich man, but a poor one never. We may reasonably doubt if there is in the State a man of his means who has given more service in a quiet and unostentatious manner than has Dr. Parker for suffering humanity.

LEVI W. LEIGHTON, Sr. AND Jr.

Levi W. Leighton, Jr., son of Levi W., Sr., and Tamson A. (Chamberlin) Leighton, was born on the farm in the town of Farmington, N. H., where he has always lived, March 5, 1830. His grandfather was Joseph Leighton, a native of Barrington, N. H. Joseph was twice married, and had children,—Levi W., John, and Abigail, who married Mark Demeritt, of Farmington, N. H. (See Demeritt history.) Joseph Leighton and a brother of his, name not known, purchased the farm where his grandson, Levi W., Jr., now (1882) resides. Here he continued to reside till his death. He was an energetic and frugal man, and laid well the foundation of a prosperous and happy family. His son, Levi W., was born about 1794, on the home-farm in Farmington, N. H.; married Tamson A. Chamberlin, and had children,—(1) Hannah, who has been twice married, first to John K. Colbath (deceased); second, to John Killroy, by whom she has three children.

(2) Mary C. (deceased).

(3) John W. (deceased), who left a widow and three children.

(4) Levi W.

(5) Tamson A., wife of E. P. Mooney, of Farmington.

(6) Emily, wife of Stephen W. Bennett, of Farmington.

Levi W. Leighton, Sr., was a Democrat in politics, and held the several town offices of his town. He inherited the principal characteristics of his father, and was esteemed for his virtues. He died Jan. 2, 1857, and his wife died March 9, 1869.

Levi W. Leighton, Jr., received the advantages of a common-school education. He has always resided on the home-farm, and followed the occupation of a farmer. He is modest and unassuming, and is universally respected by all. Like his fathers he is a Democrat, and thoroughly believes in the principles enumerated by Jefferson and Jackson. He has been in feeble health for several years. He married, January, 1855, Sophia, daughter of Bernard and Harriet (Richardson) Averil, of Mount Vernon, N. H. She was born Dec. 17, 1832.

JOSEPH L. AND MARK DEMERITT.

Joseph L. Demeritt was born in Farmington, N. H., on the same farm where he now resides and which he owns, May 22, 1831. His grandfather, Paul Demeritt, was born in Madbury, N. H., April 9, 1757. Paul settled in Farmington when a young man, on the farm which has been in the family since about 1775. During the first five summers of his living on this farm he kept bachelor's hall, made the first improvements on the farm, and laid the foundation of a good farm well tilled. He used to return to his native place and spend his winters in some kind of employment.

On the 20th of January, 1780, he married Betsey Davis, and had children,—Susan, wife of Benjamin Libbey; Hannah, born April 2, 1784; Lois, wife of Joseph Hayes; Mark, born June 6, 1792,—all born on the old homestead. Paul Demeritt was a farmer of about one hundred and sixty acres; was an industrious, frugal man. He died Nov. 26, 1835; his wife died April 30, 1849.

Mark Demeritt, youngest son of Paul, was a farmer on the farm where he first saw the light of day. July 21, 1816, he married Abigail E., daughter of Joseph Leighton, of Farmington. (See Leighton history, Farmington.) She was born Jan. 28, 1799, and died May 6, 1881. Their children are Charles M., a carpenter in Rochester; Hannah, wife of John Bickford, Rochester; John F., now with his brother on the home-farm; Martha E., wife of William Wentworth, a farmer in Farmington; Joseph L., the subject of this sketch; Paul J., a merchant in Massachusetts; Lois S., wife of William Henderson, Rochester, N. H.; and Emma B., wife of E. P. Hodsdon, of St. Louis, all born in Farmington on the old farm. Mark Demeritt was a man of more than ordinary ability, and was justly considered one of the leading representative men of his native town. In politics he was a Jacksonian Democrat, and as such was honored with all the important offices of his town. He discharged all his duties with acceptability to his constituents, and reflected honor on all who bear the name. He was magistrate for many years, selectman, and member of the State Legislature. He died Oct. 22, 1875.

Joseph L. Demeritt received such advantages for an education as the common schools of his district afforded. He attended them winters, but, like most farmer's boys, worked on the farm summers.

He was always the home boy, and took care of his aged parents.

He is one of the largest and best farmers in the town, owning some three hundred acres in the home-farm and one hundred elsewhere. In politics a Democrat. He has been selectman five years, with credit to himself and satisfaction to his townsmen. Few there are in Farmington who enjoy the confidence of the people more than does Joseph L. Demeritt. He is a modest, unassuming man, never putting himself forward or thrusting his opinions upon others. He reads for himself and does his own thinking. He is liberal in his views on all questions, yet in politics thoroughly believes in the political principles as taught by Thomas Jefferson and more recently held by Governor Horatio Seymour, of New York.

JOSEPH EMERSON.

Joseph Emerson, son of Joseph, was born in Farmington, N. H., Feb. 17, 1808. He was of English extraction, his ancestors having come from England and settled in America at an early day. His grandfather, Timothy Emerson, was a native of Durham, N. H., and was a colonel in the Revolutionary war, serving with distinction under Gen. Stark of Revolutionary fame. He married Abigail Thompson, of Durham, and had children,—(1) Joseph, (2) Sally, (3) Andrew, (4) Polly, (5) Abigail. He was a wealthy farmer and owned slaves. He died in advanced life. Joseph Emerson, Sr., was born in Durham, N. H., Feb. 12, 1763, and died March 8, 1841. He married Marcia, daughter of Joseph Hayes, Nov. 25, 1791. She was born Dec. 20, 1770, and died Sept. 16, 1847.

Their children were Timothy, Wentworth, Abigail, Joseph (the immediate subject of this sketch), and Margaret, all of whom were born in Farmington, where Joseph, Sr., settled about the time of his marriage.

Joseph Emerson, Jr., inherited the farm of two hundred and thirty acres from his father. His educational advantages were limited, yet he was well informed on all the more important subjects of the day. He married Julia A., daughter of Rev. Enos George, of Barnstead, March 14, 1836. She was born June 4, 1810, in Barnstead. Their children are (1) Frank, born May 14, 1837, received an academic education, studied law with Hon. John S. H. Frink, of Portsmouth, and was admitted to the bar April, 1866, and at the present time he is a farmer on the old homestead; (2) Charles, born Feb. 25, 1840, received an academic education, is a farmer near by the old farm, and married Frances V. Dolby in 1866, and they have one son, Ralph G.

Mr. Joseph Emerson was a Democrat in politics, and was a man respected by all. Mr. and Mrs. Emerson are members of the Congregational Church of Barnstead.

JOB VARNEY.

The subject of this sketch, and whose portrait adorns this work, was born in Farmington, N. H., March 8, 1826, and reared on the farm which he now owns. He obtained his education at the common schools, with the exception of a few terms at a select school in Providence, R. I. Being the only son, it devolved upon him to take charge of the old homestead and administer to the wants of his parents in their declining years.

He is a member of the Friends' Society, and known over a large extent of country as an enterprising and progressive farmer, and he is not only very highly respected, but his ancestors have for generations been among the foremost in their locality in assisting to do good whenever an opportunity presented itself for the amelioration of the sufferings of their neighbors.

William Varney, the father of Job, married Anna Varney (not a relative), but the daughter of Enoch and Abigail Varney, of Milton. They had four children, three of whom lived to maturity, viz.: Job; Mary, deceased, who married William P. Tuttle, of Dover; Hannah E., married Alfred F. Ware, of Salem, Mass., who subsequently had one son.

Mr. William Varney was born on the old homestead, to which he added by purchase till it contains four hundred acres, where he continued to reside till his death, which occurred Nov. 24, 1863, in the eightieth year of his age. His wife, Anna, died Nov. 14, 1863, aged seventy-four years.

They were both members of the Friends' Society, and were buried in the family cemetery. Throughout a long life Mr. Varney was universally respected; a Whig and Republican in politics, was selectman, etc.

Caleb Varney, grandfather to Job, was born in Rochester, N. H., but purchased, before marriage, the old homestead in Farmington, which at that time contained only eighty acres. He married Huldah Hussey, of Rochester. His children were William, Job, John, Mary, who married Moses Hanson, of Rochester, and left a family of five children. Elizabeth, who married James Austin, of Dover Neck, and left two children.

Caleb and his wife Huldah were members of the Friends' Society, and were buried in the family cemetery near the old homestead.

Ebenezer Varney, great-grandfather to Job, lived in Rochester till the time of his death, in June, 1828. His widow survived him several years, and died March 26, 1837.

TIMOTHY HANSON.

Timothy Hanson was born in Dover, Strafford Co., N. H., 9th month 14th, 1787, and died at his residence, 8th month 28th, 1859. His youth was spent upon his father's farm. His educational advantages were confined to the common schools of his native town. During a long and useful life he was one of the substantial business men and farmers of Farmington, N. H., where he owned a farm, and a saw- and grist-mill. He was honest and industrious, and accumulated a fine property. He married Abigail Mead Jones, daughter of Benjamin and Abigail Peasley Folsom, 12th month 6, 1844. They have no children of their own, but have generally had from one to three children in their family which they have assisted more or less.

Politically, Mr. Hanson was a Republican, but never aspired to official honors, but rather gave his time and thought to religious subjects. He was a birthright member of the Society of Friends, and as such was an elder, besides holding and creditably filling the minor offices of the society. We quote from the "Annual Monitor" of 1860 the following: He suffered much during an illness of several months, but was preserved in patience. At one time he prayed as follows: "O Lord, wilt thou have compassion on me, a poor, unworthy creature, one of the very least of thy family. Thou hast been very merciful to me all my life long, and preserved me through many trying dispensations. Wilt thou continue to be with me during the few remaining days which may be granted me in this world. Be pleased to blot out my transgressions, notwithstanding my deviations have been many, and at last, when thy work in me shall be accomplished, wilt thou receive me into thy glorious kingdom, where all is joy and peace."

During his last illness he alluded to his having accompanied his wife on a religious visit to several Western Yearly Meetings, and from the first had believed that she was rightly called to that service, and that it was his duty to go with her, and he looked back upon it with satisfaction. As the shades of night were fast gathering over him, his wife asked, "Do you know me?" and with a smile he replied, "Yes, yes."

Thus in peace and quiet his ransomed spirit passed to its "home on high."

Mrs. Timothy Hanson was born in Epping, N. H., on the old Folsom homestead, 1st month 27, 1797. She taught school some fifteen years, and she numbers among her pupils some of the most intelligent people of Epping or New Hampshire. She commenced talking for her Master in the Society of Friends, of which she is a birthright member, about 1825, and in 1837 became a recorded speaker. She is one of the most highly-esteemed persons living in her native county, and her name is a household word in every home in Epping. She married for her first husband, 6th month 12, 1834, Nicholas Jones, of Gilmanton, N. H. He was a farmer and miller, and also an elder in the Society of Friends. He died 5th month 25, 1841, and she married Mr. Hanson, before alluded to.

JEREMIAH JONES.

Jeremiah Jones was born in Farmington, Dec. 3, 1791. He was the son of Samuel Jones and his wife, Salomé Crane. His father was a sailor, and his wife, Salomé, was the daughter of a British colonel, who was descended from one of the English Earls of Surrey.

The subject of this sketch spent his boyhood on a farm, but being possessed of an active intellect and a goodly share of ambition he turned his attention to books, and though facilities for gaining knowledge were very limited in those days he succeeded in obtaining a thorough English education.

For several years he was a country schoolmaster, always successful, and entirely competent to control the roughest school over which he was placed in charge, and at that time physical power was a very important requisite in a teacher.

He represented his native town for seven consecutive years in the State Legislature, and was returned by his party for the eighth year, but declined nomination. He was a volunteer in the war of 1812-14.

He was a clear-headed, logical thinker, a man of unswerving integrity; in politics a Democrat until the war of the Rebellion, when he came out boldly and squarely with the party who fought to preserve the Union.

He was married in 1827 to Tamson Roberts, and the union produced two children,—a son, who died in infancy, and a daughter, who is well known as a popular and successful authoress, with whose writings the reading public are familiar through the romances des plume of "Clara Augusta," "Kate Thorn," "Hero Strong," etc.

It is to be regretted that the subject of this sketch would never allow a portrait of himself to be taken, and consequently his friends are unable to preserve in this history a likeness of the strong and impressive face which those who knew him so well remember.

He died May 12, 1871, in the house where he had spent the largest portion of his life.

CHAPTER XCIV.

LEE.

LEE was taken from Durham and incorporated as Lee Parish by act of the Provincial General Court, Jan. 16, 1766. A warrant signed by Joseph Sias called the first parish- or town-meeting, March 18th. Miles Randel was chosen moderator and parish clerk, and Robert Thompson, Ely Clark, and Nicholas Dudy, selectmen, Dec. 22, 1766. It was voted "that Zachues Clough inspect into the affairs of Rev. Mr. Samuel Hutchins." Rev. Samuel Hutchins was minister when the town was incorporated, and continued until about 1800, when he was succeeded by Rev. John Osborn, who, after about a third of a century, was succeeded by Rev. Israel Chesley. The ministry of the three filled a century.

From 1766 to 1815 names conspicuous in the town, now deceased, were Joseph Sias, Robert Thompson, Miles Randel, James Brackett, Capt. Josiah Bartlett, John Runlet, Joseph Leavitt, Robert Parker, Jona. Cartland, Andrew Demeritt, Joseph Durrell, the Ladds, Lawrence, Wilson, Davis, and E. B. Neally. Besides the above, later conspicuous have been Gardner Towle (removed), Hons. Josiah Bartlett and Samuel Cartland, and recently Moses A. Cartland. Of persons living June 20, 1870, Simon Otis has been of note in Lee, now the oldest inhabitant; also Mrs. Elizabeth Hale Smith, who is entitled to most grateful historic mention.

The town of Lee, as will be seen, is irregular in shape. It has every variety of soil known to the same latitude in New Hampshire except lime-soil, with hills, plains, slopes, and meadows; it has meandering rivers and purling brooks, and a famous pond near the centre. At a very early date the town took an extraordinary interest for efficient and successful schools. Its atmosphere has ever been so healthful that few physicians have made it their home, yet many of its inhabitants have stretched their lives into the nineties. It has been patriotic in all our national struggles, never failing to furnish its quota of heroes. It has too small a population for populous and strong religious societies, but has had its men and women renowned for bold and vigorous Christian action. Although the prevalence of intemperance years ago preyed injuriously upon the community, yet vigorous Christian heroism has wrought for the better, and Lee is now called, in that respect, "the banner town of Strafford County." It has most valuable mill-sites and inexhaustible beds of excellent clay for bricks.

Wheelwright's Pond, a beautiful sheet of water, is of historic interest to the present generation. It derives its name from Rev. John Wheelwright, the founder of Exeter. Some time in May, 1690, a party of Indians attacked the people of Fox Point, in Newington (then a part of Dover), burned several houses, killed several people, and carried others into captivity. After numerous depredations having been committed in Exeter and other places, two companies of scouts raised for the purpose started in pursuit, and overtook the savages at Wheelwright's Pond, July, 1690, where a severe engagement ensued. Three of the leading officers and twelve men were killed, and, it was supposed, a large number of Indians.

There are two churches in the town, viz.: Christian, A. G. Comings, pastor, and Congregational, L. D. Evans, pastor.

CHAPTER XXVI.

MADBURY.

Geographical—Topographical—Organization of Town—Documentary History—Petition for a Parish—First Parish-Meeting—Officers Elected—First Ministers, Etc.—Military Record, 1861-63.

The town of Madbury lies in the southern part of the county, and is bounded as follows : on the north by Dover and Barrington, on the east by Dover, on the south by Durham and Lee, and on the west by Durham and Lee and Barrington.

Madbury is a small, triangular-shaped town, with a generally even surface and fertile soil.

Organization of Town.—Madbury was incorporated as a parish from Dover and Durham, May 31, 1755, and as a town May 26, 1768.

Documentary History.

Petition for a Parish.

To His Excellency Benning Wentworth Esq. Governor & commander in chief in & over his Majesty's Province of New Hampshire The Honourable his Majesty's Council & House of Representatives for said Province in General Assembly convened the 10th day of May 1743.

The petition of Sundry Persons Inhabitants of the Westerly part of the Town of Dover & the Northerly part of Durham in said Province Humbly Shews, That your Petitioners live at such a distance from the meeting houses in their Respective Towns as makes it difficult for them & their Families to attend the Publick Worship there especially in the Winter & spring seasons of the year, which Induc'd a number of your Petitioners some years since at their own cost to Build a meeting House situated more conveniently for them where they have some times had preaching in those seasons of the year at their own expense tho they were not Exempted from paying their proportion at the same time to the standing Minister of the Town.

That the Towns aforesaid are well able as your Petitioners apprehend to bear their annual charges without the assistance of y<sup>e</sup> Petitioners and that they might be Incorporated into a new Parish whereby they might be accommodated their children & servants (as well as themselves) have more frequent opportunities of attending Publick Worship and all of them Reap the advantages of such an Incorporation which considering their present circumstances they think would not be a loss, and the Towns not Injured.

That your Petitioners conceive a parish might be erected with out prejudice to the other part of the Town of Dover by the following boundaries viz Beginning at the Bridge over Johnsons Creek so called, where the dividing Line between Dover & Durham Cross the Country Road & from thence running as the said Road runs until it comes even with Joseph Jenkins his house & from thence to run on a North West & by North course until it comes to the head of said Township which boundaries would comprehend the estates & habitations of y<sup>e</sup> Petitioners living in Dover & the making a parish there will greatly contribute to the settling the lands within said Boundaries & those that Lay contiguous as well as to be very convenient for y<sup>e</sup> Petitioners. Wherefore they most humbly pray that a parish may be erected & Incorporated by the Boundaries aforesaid with the usual powers & Priviledges & that such of y<sup>e</sup> Petitioners as live within the Town of Durham may have liberty to Pull off into the same, or that such a part of the said Township may be annexed thereto which will be the better way as will accommodate the Remote settlers in said Township near the said Boundaries as well as your petitioners or that they may be Relieved in such other way & method as this Hon<sup>ble</sup> Court shall see fit, & y<sup>e</sup> petitioners as in duty bound shall ever pray &c

The First Parish-Meeting.—The first parish-meeting was held June 23, 1755, when the following officers were chosen: Moderator, Solomon Emerson; clerk, Ebenezer Demeritt; selectmen, John Wingate, Paul Gerrish, and James Davis; assessors, Daniel Young and John Roberts; commissioners, Daniel Young and James Tasker, Jr. John Demeritt was chosen the first representative to the General Assembly, held at Exeter in December, 1776. Rev. Samuel Hyde was settled as minister of the parish soon after it was incorporated, and was succeeded by Rev. William Hooper, who was the last settled minister in the town. A meeting-house was erected soon after Mr. Hyde came into the parish, but it has long since been used for a town-house. This town, not unlike its neighbors, suffered severely by Indian wars; and when the Revolution broke out it gave its mite towards gaining our independence. The surface is undulating; the soil in the valleys is a mixture of clay, while on the hills are found sandy loam, with very few stones. "Mahorrimet's Hill," now "Hick's Hill," derives its name from an Indian chieftain of that name. Bellamy River drains the north part of the town, and Barbadoes, on the line between this town and Dover, is the only pond, being one hundred and twenty rods long and fifty wide.

Madbury Station, on the Boston and Maine Railroad, supplies the town with all the conveniences of railway communication.

CHARLES W. HAYES.

James Davis, who was one of the earliest settlers of Madbury, which was a part of Dover till 1755, was married Oct. 1, 1688, and lived near what is now the central part of the town. Samuel Davis, third son of James, was born Sept. 26, 1692, and at maturity took a grant of land in the north part of the town from one of the kings of England, which he left to his daughter Betsey, and died Feb. 13, 1771.

Betsey Davis was born in Madbury, March 2, 1753; married Elihu Hayes April 28, 1772, who was born in Barrington, Aug. 29, 1751. Jonathan Hayes, oldest son of Elihu and Betsey Hayes, was born April 25, 1774, married Mary Ham July 3, 1794, who was born in Barrington, July, 1773, and lived in New Durham about three years, then settled in Madbury. Samuel Davis Hayes, second child and oldest son of Jonathan and Mary Hayes, was born in New Durham, April 8, 1796, and moved to Madbury the following year with his parents, where he has lived ever since, and is now in his eighty-seventh year. In 1814 he went as drummer with the Madbury company of State militia to defend Portsmouth, where he remained fourteen days, afterwards served in all the company offices of the militia, was elected seven times as selectman, and held other town offices. Married Comfort Chesley, third child of Samuel and Nancy Chesley, of Madbury, July 1, 1827, who was born Oct. 8, 1806, and died Aug. 6, 1870. Moved July 3, 1827, to a new and commodious dwelling, being the first after the log garrison, on a farm adjoining the old homestead, which, until now, had been three generations in the name of Daniels by grant of one of the kings of England.

The children of Samuel D. and Comfort Hayes were Ann Sophia, born Nov. 4, 1829, married John S. F. Ham, and resides in Dover; Samuel Chesley, born Feb. 18, 1834, married Elizabeth S. Hoitt, and lives in Boston, Mass.; and Charles Woodman, born Sept. 11, 1836.

When Charles W. Hayes was but two years and nine months old, while out in the pasture with his brother, he got lost about four o'clock in the afternoon, and was found the next day about eleven o'clock one and a half miles from home in a swamp stuck in the mud, within a few rods of the Bellamy River. He fitted for college at the Military Gymnasium at Pembroke, N. H., and graduated from the Chandler Scientific Department of Dartmouth College, July, 1858. Then taught school in various places about ten years. While teaching in Elliot and Baring, Me., he took an active part in religious matters, filling the position of leader of the choir and superintendent of the Sunday-school one year in Elliot and three years in Baring. Married Nov. 8, 1866, Ellen Marie Weeks, daughter of William and Marie Weeks, born at Strafford Corner, April 29, 1843. In 1866 he resigned his position as teacher, and returned to Madbury to care for the old folks and cultivate the farm. He immediately took an active interest in the welfare of the town, especially in educational and religious matters. Held the office of superintending school committee in 1866-68, 1871-72. In June, 1869, canvassed the town for a religious meeting and Sabbath-school at Madbury town-house, and united with the Congregational Society at Lee Hill in the support of a minister. Became leader of the choir, and was elected superintendent of the Sabbath-school, chairman and treasurer of the finance committee, which positions he held till 1879, when Rev. J. W. Lees resigned his pastorate, and the meeting and Sunday-school closed. He was elected superintendent of the Sunday-school of the Congregational Society of Barrington, 1881-82; practiced engineering and land-surveying in Madbury and adjoining towns since 1858; held the office of collector of taxes in 1872, and treasurer of the town in 1881-82. Children: Nellie Marie, born May 4, 1870; Anne Lillian, born Oct. 11, 1873; and Cora Emmette, born Dec. 25, 1877, died April 27, 1879.

DANIEL TIBBETTS.

The Tibbetts family, particularly this branch of it, are of Welsh origin. The first authentic record we find of them is of Jeremiah Tibbetts, great-grandfather of the subject of this sketch, who came to this country about the year 1700, and settled on the farm at present occupied by Frank E. Tibbetts, who is in the fifth generation that has lived there since its settlement. At the time of Jeremiah's settlement, a garrison occupied a site but a short distance from the house of Frank E., which was the scene of many bloody encounters between the Indians and whites. Jeremiah was captured, and carried off by the Indians, who put him to death for refusing to reveal to them what he knew of the contents of the garrison. Daniel, his son, then took the place, and from him Israel inherited it. Then came Daniel, the subject of this memoir. He was one of a family of six children, but two of whom are now living,—Joannah Chesley, of Epsom, N. H., and Lydia S. Snell, widow of Paul Snell. Mr. Tibbetts was born March 2, 1809, and inherited the characteristics of his progenitors, who were frugal and industrious to a great degree; that he enjoyed the confidence of his friends and townsmen, the fact of their having elected him to the highest positions in their gift is sufficient proof. He was elected representative to the Legislature, and held the offices of selectman and moderator several terms.

He was married to his young wife but a short time when she sickened and died with the typhoid fever, leaving him with an infant son, Frank E., who was but a few months old. He was taken with the malady and died in September, 1857, but a few days after his wife. The property fell to the infant, Frank E., who grew up to manhood and attended school in his native town, with the exception of a few terms spent at the Dover Academy. He was born July 8, 1857, and was married to Lizzie Whitehouse, Jan. 22, 1880; one child has been born to them, Sarah E., born Dec. 17, 1880. The home-farm now contains two hundred and fifty acres, and is in a high state of cultivation, pleasantly situated, and the fact that it has been handed down through five generations makes a mention of it of more than common interest. Mr. Tibbetts was a Baptist, as were all of his ancestors. By his untimely death (a fact well remembered by many of his friends who are still living) the town lost a good and influential citizen.

CHAPTER XC VII.

MIDDLETON.

THIS town lies in the extreme northern part of the county, and is bounded as follows: on the north by Carroll County, on the east by Carroll County and the town of Milton, on the south by Milton, and on the west by New Durham.

Middleton was settled a short time prior to the Revolution, and among the pioneers was Thomas Morgan. The early settlers were mainly from Lee, Somersworth, and Rochester. The surface of the town is rough and rocky. The principal elevation is Moose Mountain, which separates it from Brookfield.

The town was incorporated March 4, 1778, and in December, 1794, the town of Brookfield was severed from it. For many years these two towns united in sending a representative to the Legislature. In 1826 David Davis, Esq., who represented these towns in the Legislature, caused a special act to be passed, allowing each town a member, neither of which had the constitutional number of votes.

The first settled minister was Rev. Nehemiah Ordway (orthodox). His successor, Elder John Buzzell, a Free-Will Baptist, established a church, since which time this has been the prevailing religious sentiment.

The southern and central parts of Middleton have a level surface, but while looking north, Great Moose, Bald, and Parker Mountains tower up before the eye of the beholder, forming a natural bulwark between this and the town of Brookfield. The soil yields scant returns, yet by that perseverance and industry which characterizes the people of New England, many are in prosperous circumstances.

Middleton Corners, a little hamlet south of the centre of the town, is the principal place of business. Here is the post-office, the stores, a hotel, a public hall, and one Free-Will Baptist Church edifice.

CHAPTER XC VIII.

MILTON.<sup>1</sup>

THIS is the northeasterly town in Strafford County, and is situated upon the Salmon Falls River, which forms its entire easterly boundary, and separates it from Acton and Lebanon in the State of Maine. It is bounded southerly by Rochester, westerly by Farmington, and northerly by Middleton and Wakefield.

The west branch of the Lebanon Falls River also runs through the town, making a junction with the east branch at the head of Northeast Pond.

The town has a territorial extent of about eighteen thousand acres. The surface is somewhat broken, but the soil is generally good and well adapted to farming purposes. The Tenerife Mountain is a bold, rocky elevation, near the centre of the town, affording excellent pasturage. The town is abundantly watered, being traversed by numerous streams and brooks beside those already named.

The three ponds from which the principal village takes its name are a trio of beautiful ponds spread out at the base of the mountain, affording excellent boating and fishing, and are a favorite resort of the disciples of the immortal Isaac.

The early history of this town is identified with that of Rochester, it having formed a part of that town under the name of the Third or Northeast Parish prior to June 11, 1802, at which time it was incorporated into a separate town by legislative enactment.

On account of the destruction of the records by fire, it has been found somewhat difficult to determine just when, where, or by whom the first permanent settlement was made in this town. It is, however, very certain that it was in the southern part of the town, and probably as early as 1760, or very near that time.

The writer is of opinion that Jonathan Twombly is entitled to the honor of making the first settlement near the Twombly Brook, and upon the farm now owned by Hon. Luther Hayes, and sometimes called the Bragdon farm, Samuel Bragdon having purchased the farm from a son of Mr. Twombly in about 1800. Mr. Twombly and his wife and some of their children were, no doubt, buried upon this farm. An ancient headstone records that Hannah Twombly died in February, 1769. She was doubtless a daughter of Jonathan, and this is believed to be the oldest grave in Milton.

Richard Walker was also a very early settler and a near neighbor of Mr. Twombly; probably there was very little difference in the time of their settlement. Mr. Walker died in 1813 at the age of seventy-seven years, and he and his wife are buried very near their old neighbors. The date of Mr. Twombly's settlement is obtained from the birth of his daughter, Betsey, who afterwards married James C. Hayes. She was born June 4, 1862, and is believed to have been the first white child born in town.

John Twombly, not supposed to be a near relative of Jonathan, made a settlement in what is now known as the Varney neighborhood in 1771 or 1772, and had for nearest neighbor one Jenkins, who lived upon the Goodwin hill at that time. The Christian name of Mr. Jenkins is not known, and no subsequent knowledge is had of him. Mr. Twombly very soon removed to and made a permanent settlement in the Lyman neighborhood, where he and his good wife died at a ripe old age. Our respected townsman, Theodore C. Lyman, was an adopted son of this worthy couple, and always spoke of them with much affection.

The next settlement is believed to have been made upon Plumer's Ridge in 1772 or 1773, or very near that time, and probably by Benjamin Scates. Beard<sup>1</sup> Plumer and his brother Joseph, sons of the Hon. John Plumer, of Rochester, however, were very early settlers, and it has been sometimes questioned whether they were not the first in this locality. James C. Hayes, David Wallingford, William Palmer, Elijah Horn, Moses Chamberlain, and others, very soon followed and opened up settlements in this neighborhood. This was soon followed by quite a rush of settlers to the west side of the town, Daniel Hayes, Caleb Wakeham, Enoch Varney, Samuel Nute, William Wentworth, William Tuttle, Ichabod Hayes, James Hayes, Ebenezer Coursan, and Stephen Meseron being among the first, Jeremiah Cook, Dudley Burnham, Jotham Nute, Otis Pinkham, Ephraim Plumer, John Twombly, James Varney, John Varney, William Mathes, and others coming soon after.

Early in the summer of 1776, Samuel Twombly, a nephew of the first settler, Jonathan Twombly, could have been seen, with a pack well strapped upon his back, wending his way up the side of Teneriffe, to search out a home for his lady love, returning and bringing her to this wild region the next year. Stephen Wentworth very soon became a neighbor of the Twomblys.

It does not appear that any settlement was made east of the West Branch River prior to about 1785 or 1786, and among the earlier settlers there may be named, among others, Reuben Jones, Paul Jewett, Amos Witham, the Berrys, the Millers, Ephraim Twombly, Paul Wentworth, Caleb Wingate, David Coursan, John McDuffee, and soon after Hatwell Nutter, Thomas Applebee, William Applebee, John Hart, John Rennie, Jr., Nathaniel Dearborn, Joseph Dearborn, and many others.

Among the first who settled at Three Ponds were Samuel Palmer, Levi Burgen, John Fish, Paul Jewett, Pelatiah Hanscom, Robert McGeoch, and others.

Daniel Door and Jonathan Door settled at the head of the Pond quite early. The old tavern-house at Three Ponds, burned a few years ago, was built by Robert McGeoch in 1786 or 1787, and was perhaps the first tavern in town.

April 9, 1787, the town of Rochester "voted to raise a tax on the supposed first parish, to pay Rev. Joseph Haven his salary, and also voted to raise an equivalent tax on the out parts of the town, to be laid out by them at such time and place as they may agree." This was doubtless the origin of the different parishes which were afterwards established.

On Oct. 15, 1787, Rochester "voted to lay out a road from the Branch bridge to Palmer's mill." This was the first public road laid out in Milton, and was from some bridge in the present town of Rochester, and not from what is now known as the Branch bridge in Milton, for, at a meeting held the 31st day of the following March, they "voted to lay out a road from Palmer's mill to Wakefield line, if the owners will give the land." This road extended over Plumer's Ridge, the Branch River, and what has since been known as the Branch Hill, thus establishing a thoroughfare through the entire town from Rochester to Wakefield.

March 7, 1792, "Voted to lay out a road from Moses Chamberlain's to Haines' Mills." This is the old road leading from the Branch to Union village.

March 5, 1793, "Voted to lay out a road from Shapleigh Upper Mill to Wakefield line, in accordance with the petition of Thomas Cloutmann."

James Hartford is said to have been the first trader or merchant in Milton. He was located at Three Ponds, but in what year is not known. He has been succeeded by something more than one hundred different merchants in that village.

Elijah Horn was doubtless the first blacksmith, but was soon followed by Isaac Worster at the Ponds, and later by Solomon Land and Joseph Rines at Milton Mills.

Stephen Drew settled at Milton Mills in 1818 or 1819, and after a year or two moved to the Three Ponds. He is supposed to have been the first resident physician in town. Before his time doctors were called from other towns when needed.

<sup>1</sup> The writer has adhered to the ancient manner of spelling this and many other names.

Owing to the destruction of the post-office records and papers by fire, it has been found impossible to determine who was the first postmaster in Milton. John Nutter, however, was the first at Milton Mills, and the post-route was from Emery's Mills through Milton Mills to Middleton, and the mail was carried once in two weeks by a Mr. Horne.

It has been determined who the first merchant was in this village, but the ladies have had the privilege of buying their tea and spices from about one hundred different traders. Asa Fox has doubtless been in trade longer than any other person in town, having been in business forty-eight years in succession, and forty-six years upon the same location.

Corporate Seal.—Very soon after the organization of the town it was voted to use the letter M as a seal for the town of Milton.

The first town-meeting in Milton was called by William Palmer, Esq., and held at the dwelling-house of Lieut. Elijah Horn (now the dwelling-house of Lewis B. Twombly), on the 30th day of August, 1802; at which meeting Beard Plummer was chosen moderator; Gilman Jewett, town clerk; and William Palmer, John Fish, John Renick, Jr., selectmen.

The first official act of the selectmen is shown by the record, as follows, viz.:

"STATE OF NEW HAMPSHIRE,
STRAFFORD, SS.

"We, the Selectmen of Milton, do by these presents license Mr. Elijah Horn to keep a Public Tavern at his house in Milton from this date under such Rules and Regulations as the Law directs.

"Given under our hands at Milton this 30th day of August, 1802.

"Attest.

"Gilman Jewett, T. Clerk."

At the first annual meeting, held March 14, 1803, Beard Plummer was chosen moderator; Gilman Jewett, clerk; William Palmer, John Fish, Ezekiel Hayes, selectmen; and Beard Plummer, representative. One hundred and thirty-four votes were cast for Governor, of which John J. Gilman had one hundred and three; John Langdon had thirty-one.

At this meeting a committee was chosen to fix upon the centre of the town and a location for a meeting-house. This committee consisted of Capt. Daniel Hayes, John Fish, Timothy Roberts, John Renick, Jr., William Palmer, and Beard Plummer, who being unable to agree called in council Joshua Allen, Daniel Wingate, and Luther Dearborn, who selected the site of the present town-house. To this the committee did agree, and so reported at an adjourned meeting, which report was accepted and adopted by vote of the town.

The town also voted to build a house fifty-two by forty-two feet, with a porch at each end eleven feet square, and a portico in front. A building committee was chosen, consisting of John Fish, Gilman Jewett, and Beard Plummer. This committee was authorized to let the building of the house at "public vendue," and also to sell the pews.

On the 4th day of July, 1803, three separate contracts were made: first, the construction and erection of the frame (the timber to be cut on the school-lot) was let to Caleb Wingate, for the sum of three hundred and ninety-eight dollars; second, the outside finish complete to Gilman Jewett, for six hundred and eighty dollars; third, all the inside work to Daniel Hayes, for nine hundred and forty dollars. The house was to be completed on or before Oct. 31, 1804.

Upon the completion of the house each of the contractors presented charges for extra work done, which, with committee's fees, cost of lot, two gallons of rum for the raising, interest, etc., brought the whole cost up to two thousand three hundred and fifty-two dollars and twenty-eight cents. The pews sold for nineteen hundred and eighty-three dollars and seventy-five cents, thus leaving the town a property interest in the house of three hundred and sixty-eight dollars and fifty-three cents.

The first town-meeting was held in the new house on the 27th day of August, 1804, for the election of town representatives to Congress. At this meeting James C. Hayes was chosen moderator.

On the 1st day of May, 1850, at a proprietors' meeting called for that purpose, it was voted to sell this meeting-house, and a committee consisting of Charles C. Hayes, Enoch W. Plummer, and Joseph Plummer was chosen to sell and convey the same.

The house was sold at public auction May 25, 1850, to Micha Lyman for one hundred and seventy-three dollars, and was sold by him to the town, and converted into the present tavern-house.

Officers of the Town.—Moderators.—During the eighty years since the town was incorporated the moderators at the annual elections have been as follows:

Beard Plummer.....	6 yrs.	James Berry.....	2 yrs.
John Fish.....	1 "	Ed. Wentworth.....	1 "
John Renick, Jr.....	8 "	John D. Lyman.....	1 "
Joseph Plummer, Jr.....	4 "	Asa Fox.....	1 "
Levi Jones.....	4 "	Charles A. Varney.....	3 "
John Nutter.....	1 "	Charles C. Hayes.....	14 "
James Robert.....	8 "	Charles Jones.....	6 "
Hanson Hayes.....	10 "	E. W. Plummer.....	2 "
Charles Swaney.....	3 "	Abraam Simborn.....	2 "
Thomas Chapman.....	2 "	Luther Hayes.....	1 "

Many of these gentlemen have served at other than the annual March elections, as well as others not here noted.

John D. Lyman, a native of Milton, has held the offices of Secretary of State, senator, and bank commissioner.

Charles Jones has served as a member of the Council, Eli Wentworth in the Senate.

Luther Hayes has been county commissioner, sheriff, senator, and fish commissioner.

John S. Hersey and George Lyman have each held the office of county commissioner.

Traditions.—The red man's power had been broken, and remnants of the scattered tribes driven into the northern wilderness before this town had a permanent settlement; the inhabitants, therefore, were never troubled with Indian depredations. There is a tradition, however, that some time before a settlement was made here a small party of hunters were encamped near where the upper end of Three Ponds village now is, and that while tending their traps in the vicinity of the Northeast Pond they one day discovered unmistakable signs of the presence of Indians. This discovery put them upon the alert, and a watch was set for their stealthy foes. Very soon two of the red rascals were seen prowling about the camp with evident hostile intent, but believing their presence unsuspected they failed to use their usual caution, and before they had a chance to carry out their nefarious purpose two well-directed leaden messengers summoned them to the happy hunting-grounds. Their bodies were buried upon the bank of the river, and the hunters were molested no more.

But although the Indian trail was no more seen in the forest, or his moccasins-track upon the sand, and the blooming maiden could meet her bashful lover upon the mountain-side or by the rippling stream without fear of molestation, yet these early settlers were not entirely free from the trials incident to forest life. Bears were for a time somewhat plenty and troublesome, often feasting upon the succulent corn, and occasionally upon a tender lamb, pig, or calf. Not a few amusing stories have been told of them. Mrs. David Wallingford used laughingly to tell of a fright she once received from one of these prowlers. She was berrying some distance from her home, and being anxious to fill her basket and return home in good season for her afternoon duties, she had briskly plied her fingers without taking any note of her surroundings. After stripping the shadowy side of a fine bunch of bushes of their delicious treasures she stepped softly around to the other side, and there in the bright sunshine lay Bruin quietly taking his afternoon siesta, having evidently gorged himself with the luscious fruit. Mrs. Wallingford did not long watch his slumber, but sped carefully but swiftly homeward, being anxious only to place as great a distance between herself and the sleeping beast as possible in the shortest space of time.

A somewhat amusing story used to be related by a lady, who was one of Milton's early settlers, in which her husband was mistaken for a bear, and somewhat disturbed the equilibrium of a young man "who would a-woogie go." It appears that the husband of this lady was a very industrious man, as indeed most of the early settlers were, and was always up betimes in the morning and busy with his daily labors.

The young man alluded to had been visiting his lady love in the neighborhood one evening, and no doubt the happy hours had fled much more rapidly than he anticipated, so that the industrious husband-man had already left his bed and was busy in his cornfield before the young lover had mounted his good horse for his homeward ride in the morning gloaming.

As he approached the farmer's cornfield, his mind filled with sweet reflections, his quick ear detects a rustling sound. He eagerly listens for a moment, and rising in his stirrups, discovers some moving object among the waving corn. Only one idea strikes him, and that is a bear idea. Yes, truly, it must be a bear feasting upon the farmer's July corn. He hastily concludes that his courting may really end in a catch; he will wake the farmer, and together they will secure the bear.

Thus thinking he carefully wends his way to the farm-house door, and gently taps for fear he may frighten the bear away, and is somewhat surprised that his knock is immediately answered by the thrifty housewife, who is already up and busy with her household duties. But he says, "Madam, there is a bear or something in your cornfield, and I called to get your husband to help me capture it." The lady, at once taking in the situation, pleasantly replied, "Oh, that animal is already captured; that is my husband." At this answer the young man blushing retired, and no doubt before he again called for help to hunt bears he was careful to note the time.

It is told that Caleb Wakeham once had quite an adventure with Bruin. Knowing how fond he was of tender, juicy pork, friend Wakeham had built a high log fence about his pig-pen that he considered bear-proof. Notwithstanding this precaution he, one night, heard a terrible outcry, which he at once concluded was caused by some sudden and unwarranted intrusion upon the privacy and quiet rest of his porcine friends. He waited not for a second call, for indeed the alarm was a continuous cry for help, but at once arose and hied to the rescue. He found matters somewhat mixed and quite serious. Bruin had selected his supper, and was trying to get away with it, but he found it much more difficult to get out with the pig than to get in without it. Mr. Wakeham assailed the intruder with clubs and stones, these being the only weapons at hand. But although it was two to one, the bear was the victor, not only saving his own life but winning a good supper.

Schools, Etc.—But very little can be learned in relation to the schools prior to the incorporation of the town. It appears, however, that at that time the territory was divided into eight school districts.

Whether or not there were school-houses at that time, or when houses were built, the writer has not been able to determine. That all the districts were not supplied with houses is evident from the fact that rent was paid in several instances, as shown by the records,

On the 1st day of December, 1806, the town was redistricted, and the number of districts was reduced to five, and remained without any material change until Nov. 3, 1828, when a redistricting was had and the town divided into ten districts. Subsequently two other districts were created, and in 1851 a committee, consisting of Charles C. Hayes, John D. Lyman, and Joseph Pearl, was chosen to define the limits of the several districts. This committee made their report at the annual March meeting, 1852, constituting twelve districts and defining their limits. This report was accepted.

But the spirit of change was still manifest, and very soon territory was taken from districts Nos. 2 and 4, and district No. 13 was constituted. Since that time this district and No. 5 have been discontinued, and their territory and inhabitants united with other districts, so that at this time there are only eleven districts, and this is probably three or five more than ought to be in town.

The school-houses are generally in very good condition, and well adapted to the purposes for which they are designed, those at Three Ponds and Milton Mills being arranged for two schools, the schools in these districts being graded. There is also a classical institute at Three Ponds, where the higher branches are taught a portion of the time.

Although this town has not appropriated money for the support of schools as liberally perhaps as many other towns, the schools have held a very respectable rank among those of other towns in the county and State. The amount of yearly appropriations for school purposes have increased from one hundred and thirty dollars and twenty cents in 1802 to very nearly fifteen hundred dollars at the present time.

A few of the votes taken in town touching school matters may be of interest in this connection:

March 14, 1803, "Voted to leave the amount of school money to be raised to the selectmen."

Nov. 5, 1804, voted to sell the timber on the school lot; and in accordance with this vote said timber was sold at public auction on the 13th day of the same month for the sum of $1212.25.

There is no record showing that this money was ever appropriated to school purposes.

March 12, 1805, "Voted to learn the amount of school money to be raised discretionary with the selectmen."

March 11, 1806, "Voted to raise half as much more money as the law requires for support of schools." But at a subsequent meeting, held in May following, "Voted to leave this matter to the selectmen."

March 10, 1807, "Voted to raise, in addition to what the law requires, half as much more money for the support of schools."

March 13, 1810, "Voted to lay out the interest due the town in schooling."

March 12, 1811, "Voted to add $100 to what the law requires of schooling."

March 10, 1812, "Voted to add all the interest on notes due the town to what the law requires for the support of schools for the ensuing year."

March 14, 1815, a committee of five was chosen to separate the school property from other town property, and at the next annual meeting this committee reported $388 school property and $628 parish property.

It appears that this report was not satisfactory, for on March 10, 1818, the town chose another committee for the same purpose.

This committee reported at the next annual meeting that they were unable to ascertain the exact amount, but in their opinion $1000 should be appropriated for the support of the gospel, and $500, together with the school lot, which they considered worth $500 more, for the support of schools.

March 11, 1817, a committee of three was chosen to visit and inspect the schools. This was the first superintending school committee in town.

March 14, 1826, "Voted that the selectmen be authorized to dispose of the school lot as they think most conducive to the interests of the town."

This lot was subsequently sold for $206, but the records do not show that it was appropriated for schools.

March 10, 1829, "Voted that the principal of the literary fund be funded with the town, and that the town raise the interest annually for the benefit of schools."

March 14, 1837, "Voted that all literary money over and above $500 be expended the present year, and all that may be hereafter received be expended the same year it is received."

March 13, 1838, "Voted that the interest of the surplus revenue now accrued be expended for support of schools."

July 28, 1842, "Voted that the selectmen dispose of the notes in the hands of Levi Jones, and appropriate the same towards the extinguishment of the debt due from the town to the several school districts by paying over to each district its proportion the present year." It appears that in accordance with this vote $186.46 was paid to the several districts.

March 13, 1877, "Voted that the railroad money received from the State be appropriated for schools."

March 9, 1880, "Voted that the surplus dog tax be applied to the support of schools."

Religious Matters.—Comparatively little can be learned in regard to the religious ideas and feelings of the early settlers in Milton prior to the formation of the first church. It is, however, apparent that they recognized their dependence upon a supreme governing power, and the duty incumbent upon them as rational and intelligent beings of rendering homage to that Supreme Ruler and Governor, and of informing themselves in regard to His attributes, and of His requirements for love and worship at their hands. With these ideas they contributed freely and cheerfully of their income for the support of the gospel, at first by paying the legally assessed parish taxes, and later by free contributions. They do not appear to have had regular preaching before the church organization. Immediately, however, upon the completion of the meeting-house an effort was made to settle a minister in town, as will appear by the following record of the first meeting in the new house, held Aug. 27, 1804: "Voted to choose a committee to treat with the Rev. Mr. Nayson and see on what terms he will agree to settle in town." At a subsequent meeting, held on the 5th day of November following, this committee reported as follows:

"MILTON, Nov. 5, 1804.

"GENTLEMEN,—We have, according to your desire, talked with Mr. NAYSON, and we find that if the town are agreed to give him the use of a decent parsonage during his ministry and three hundred dollars yearly, that he would settle with us upon the following conditions:

"RICHARD WALKER,
"BENJAMIN SCATES."

The town voted to accept this report. Mr. Nayson, however, probably did not settle in town. The town accounts show the following sums to have been paid for preaching from the treasury of the town, viz.:

Prior to 1805:

Reuben Nayson for preaching .....	$2.00

Various votes have been passed at different times relative to raising and appropriating parish or ministerial money.

March 14, 1803, "Voted that each poll pay twenty-five cents for preaching, and other ratable estate in proportion."

March 12, 1805, "Voted to raise fifty cents on a poll, and other ratable property in proportion, for support of the ministry."

"Voted to tax all denominations alike, with the privilege of directing what teacher may have their money."

March 9, 1813, "Voted not to raise any money for the support of the ministry."

May 3, 1813, "Chose a committee to ascertain what property there is in Milton, which was given by the proprietors of Rochester to procure preaching of the gospel in said town."

It does not appear that this committee ever made a report. But a committee chosen March 10, 1818, to ascertain the amount of all the parish and school property then belonging to the town did report March 9, 1819, "That they cannot ascertain the exact amount, but in their opinion $1000 should be appropriated for the support of the gospel."

April 8, 1820, "Voted to lay out sixty dollars and the interest of the $1000 called parsonage property for the support of the gospel, and that the same be divided between each society in the town petitioning for the same."

March 8, 1831, "Chose a committee of three to assist the selectmen in making a fair and impartial division of all the notes belonging to the town; and voted that notes amounting to $1000, as be by them separated from all other town property, and kept separated as a special fund belonging to the town, as parish property, and that the same shall be managed as a fund entirely separate from all other notes."

It does not appear that this committee ever took any action in the matter; at any rate the record does not show that any separation of the notes alluded to was had. At this time the town held notes against individuals amounting to $1744.78, a large proportion of which were entirely worthless.

These notes were carried forward from year to year until 1844, when the selectmen, in accordance with a vote of the town, selected those considered worthless, amounting to $635.98, and placed them in the town chest, where they doubtless now remain.

What proportion of those worthless notes represented parish property has not yet been determined.

No further action was taken in the matter until March 13, 1860, when it was "voted to divide the ministerial money equally between the five established societies."

March 10, 1863, "Voted to divide the ministerial money equally among the several religious societies in town who shall hold meetings regularly four months in the year previous to the first day of January."

These two latest votes would seem to indicate that it was the intention of the town to divide whatever money there might be that the societies could have any claim upon, and thus end the whole matter, but it does not appear that this was carried into effect, or that any effort was made to determine what, if any, amount they were equitably entitled to.

March 9, 1880, "Voted that the interest of the ministerial fund be divided equally among the several societies in town that support preaching four months in a year prior to January first."

The First Congregational Church in the town was organized on the 8th day of September, 1815, and consisted of nine members, viz.: Barnabas Palmer, Hatevel Nutter, Benjamin Seates, Abigail Seates, Deborah Wentworth, Mary Chamberlain, Achsah Palmer, Mrs. — Nutter, and Elizabeth Roberts.

Benjamin Seates was the first clerk and deacon, and Rev. Curtis Coe the first pastor. The church remained under his care, and that of the Rev. Dyer Burge until 1819, when Rev. James Walker was called, and continued in charge until his death in September, 1826. From this time until December, 1832, the church had no settled minister, but was supplied by Rev. Clement Parker, E. S. Anderson, and others, whose names do not appear upon the church records. Rev. Benjamin G. Willey was then settled, and remained in charge until 1846. He was succeeded by Revs. Edward F. Abbott, August, 1846, to May, 1848; James Dodd, May, 1848, to January, 1870; Frank Haley, February, 1870, to April, 1874; John N. Lowell, August, 1874, to August, 1875; Samuel W. Clarke, April, 1876, to April, 1877; John N. Lewett, 1877 to 1880; George Sterling, October, 1881, to the present time. This church originally so small, and in a location sparsely settled, has made an almost unprecedented addition to its membership of two hundred and thirty-six, making a total of two hundred and forty-seven; of which number ninety-two are supposed to be now living; sixty-nine being now active members. Sally Jones and Deacon E. W. Plumer are the elder active members, having united with the church in 1836, and held a continued membership up to this time. Ebenezer Osgood became a member in 1832, but asked and obtained a dismissal a few years ago for the purpose of uniting with the Second or Union Church.

This church worshiped in the old meeting-house until 1835, when the house was built at Three Ponds, which has since been transformed into a "Classical Institute." After this time for several years the meetings were held alternately at the Three Ponds and Milton Mills. The present meeting-house of this church was built in 1860, and is a spacious and elegant edifice.

The present church officers are George Sterling, pastor; E. W. Plumer, S. G. Chamberlain, deacons; Robert Mathes, clerk; Joseph Plumer, Jr., treasurer.

The "First Christian Church" was organized March 3, 1827, with ten members, as follows, viz.: Hapley Meserve, Joseph Goodwin, Anna Goodwin, Joanna Meserve, Eliza Rimes, Abigail Burnham, Ruth Burnham, Mary Burnham, Dorcas Ricker, Mary Howe.

The first deacons were Hapley Meserve and Samuel Ricker, and the first clerk was Hapley Meserve. The pastors have been Simeon Swett, John Davis, John T. G. Colby, Samuel S. White, Jotham S. Johnson, and A. G. Comings.

The deacons have been H. Meserve, Samuel Ricker, Joseph Goodwin, Jonathan Howe, Joseph H. Nutt, James H. Twombly, and John C. Varney, and the clerks, Hapley Meserve, Daniel B. Goodwin, and Martin V. B. Cook. Two hundred and one members have been added to this church, and sixty-eight have died. Their house of worship, known as Union Chapel, was dedicated Sept. 22, 1841.

Baptist Church.—Prior to 1834 a church existed, known as the Acton and Milton Baptist Church. This church had a large membership in Milton. On the 28th day of October, in said year, fifty-two members were dismissed from said church, and the 30th day of the same October they organized themselves into a new church, called the Baptist Church of Milton. The membership was as follows: Charles Swasey, Sarah Swasey, John Shackford, Elizabeth Hart, Ann E. Hart, Hannah Nutter, Ruth Nutter, Samuel S. Hart, Daniel Jones, Nancy Witham, Ira Witham, Nathan Jones, Mehitable Witham, Eunice Swasey, Harriet Fox, Widow Betsey Berry, Susan S. Nutter, Mary Ann Nutter, John Witham, Jr., William S. Nutter, Aaron H. Hadsan, Nathaniel O. Hart, John Witham, Francis Berry, Josiah Witham, Susan Jones, Martha Witham, Fatima Wallingford, Lydia Jewett, Susan Archabald, Eliza G. Berry, James J. Jewett, Lydia Witham, Nathan Dore, Chimena Witham, Alice Hussey, Mary Wentworth, Lydia Fall, Sarah Wentworth, Sally Merrow, Eliza Merrow, Mary Jones, Nancy Jewett, Asa Jewett, Betsey Berry, Mary Witham, Abigail Witham, Deborah Dore, Sarah Berry, Francis Wallingford, Sarah Dore, Elizabeth Nutter. William S. Nutter was chosen clerk, and Charles Swasey and John Witham, Jr., were chosen and ordained as deacons. Of these fifty-two members nine only are now living.

This church worshiped in the Union meeting-house at Milton Mills, which was built in 1834. The church for several years was in a very prosperous condition, and received an addition of twenty-three members.

Jan. 25, 1842, David Farnham was ordained a deacon, and in May, 1855, Samuel S. Hart was also made a deacon.

The pastors were Elders Emerson, Glover, Smith, Small, Chase, McGregory, Cox, Robbins, Jay, Daymond, Broadbent, Jones, and Hubbard, and perhaps some others. William S. Nutter held the clerkship from 1834 to 1837, Asa Jewett from 1837 to 1850, David Farnham from 1850 to 1852, Samuel S. Hart 1852 to June 6, 1867, at which date the record closes.

A Free-Will Baptist Church was organized at the house of Theodore Lyman, on the 11th day of May, 1843, with seventeen members, viz.: Hazen Duntley, Daniel M. Quimby, Luther Hayes, William Fernald, James O. Reynolds, Drusilla Jewett, Betsey Lyman, Mary H. Downs, Mrs. D. Wedgwood, William B. Lyman, Theodore Lyman, E. S. Edgerly, Dearborn Wedgwood, Phoebe Duntley, Sophia Quimby, Sally F. Downs, Mrs. A. Hubbard.

Luther Hayes was chosen clerk, and Theodore Lyman deacon. Rev. William H. Waldron was the first pastor, having charge of the church about one year, and was succeeded by Rev. Horace Stanton. Mr. Stanton's health failing he was soon obliged to resign the pastorate, and the Rev. Uriah Chase was called for a time. This church, having no meeting-house or suitable place for public worship, soon discontinued Sabbath meetings, but kept up prayer and conference meetings until May 1, 1850, at which time the organization became extinct. There were ten members added to the church after its organization. Although for the lack of pecuniary ability to build a meeting-house and support the regular preaching of the gospel, this little church was obliged, for the time being, to give up its organization, many of its members continued to feel a lively interest in the cause, and in 1859 succeeded in building the present very neat and tasty meeting-house, which was dedicated on the 25th day of December of that year.

On the 17th day of May, 1860, a new church was organized under the supervision of Revs. Daniel P. Cilley, Ezra Tuttle, and E. P. Gerrish, with twelve members, viz.: Ezra Tuttle, Samuel Jones, N. B. Varney, Eli G. Downs, Eleanor Hubbard, Martha A. Varney, Luther Hayes, Benjamin Scates, Fred. H. Tuttle, Mary H. Tuttle, Francis Jones, Mary A. Jones. Luther Hayes was chosen clerk, and has continued in that position to the present time. Samuel Jones was chosen deacon, and Rev. Ezra Tuttle was called to the pastorate, and remained in charge of the church nearly three years, resigning April 26, 1863. He was succeeded by Rev. J. M. Bedell, May, 1864, to May 4, 1865; Rev. N. C. Lathrop, Dec. 3, 1865, to Dec. 2, 1867; Rev. I. C. Guptill, May 2, 1868, to April 3, 1869; Rev. Ezra Tuttle, April 10, 1870, to Jan. 6, 1872; Rev. J. P. Jay, Aug. 31, 1872, to June 6, 1874; Rev. E. G. York, Sept. 28, 1878, to April 5, 1879; Rev. C. L. Plumer, Aug. 12, 1879, to July 2, 1881.

Rev. E. Owen, of Portsmouth, preached one-half the time from April 1, 1876, to Dec. 30, 1877, but was not settled over the church. His labors resulted in much good, sixteen members being added to the church during his term of service.

This church has been highly blessed, one hundred and thirty-three having been added to its membership, making a total of one hundred and forty-five. N. B. Varney, Dr. Daniel E. Palmer, William J. Tibbetts, and Woodbury Wallingford have been chosen deacons since the organization.

The Methodist Church at Milton Mills was organized in June, 1869. The first officers were Asa A. Fox, clerk; John Brackett, treasurer; Harris Brown, sexton; Alpheus Remick, collector. Stewards, A. B. Shaw, John Brackett, E. C. Abbott, S. F. Rines, W. Haggood, J. N. Witham, B. S. Butler, H. L. Mitchell, A. A. Plumer; trustees, A. B. Shaw, B. S. Butler, J. B. Dow, J. Brackett, S. F. Rines, J. Lewis, J. N. Witham, G. E. Hart, W. Patten.

The pastors have been Revs. Ira J. Tibbetts, James Crowley, W. H. McDaniels, A. B. Carter, J. M. Bean, W. C. Bartlett, and J. P. Frye.

The present membership is sixty-four, two members only have died since the organization.

This church has a very neat and tasty house of worship, pleasantly located near the Union House. It was erected in 1871.

The Union Congregational Church at Milton Mills was organized on the 26th day of September, 1871, with a membership of sixteen, viz.: Benjamin

G. Adams, Sophia Adams, Dr. Reuben Buck, Mary Buck, Mary E. Brown, Margaret M. Brierly, Sarah E. Fox, Josiah W. Gerrish, William McGibbon, Mary McGibbon, Betsey Hubbard, Helen Miller, Ebenezer Osgood, Ellen C. Osgood, Almira B. Osgood, Ann E. Simes.

The first deacons were Benjamin G. Adams and Ebenezer Osgood, and William McGibbon the first clerk. There has been thirty-nine members added to this church since its organization, making a total membership of fifty-five. The church has lost twelve members by death. The pastors have been Revs. Almond T. Clarke, D. B. Scott, George Meichaël, and C. F. Goldsmith. George E. Simes and Elbridge W. Fox are the present deacons, and E. W. Fox clerk. This church worships in the Union meeting-house, built in 1834.

The Acton and Milton Free-Will Baptist Church was first formed several years prior to 1800 with some thirty members. There are no records giving the names of the members, but they doubtless came from both towns and perhaps in nearly equal numbers. This church passed through the varied experiences incident to country churches in that early time until it became nearly or quite extinct.

On the 10th day of January, 1811, a reorganization was had with a membership of twenty-six, as follows: Bartholomew Miller, Asa Merrill, and David Spring, deacons; Solomon Hutchens, Henry Miller, William Applebee, Thomas Applebee, Joseph Rines, John Miller, Samuel Merrow, Simon Roberts, H. Merrill, Hannah Goodwin, Polly Durrell, Mary Miller, Susanna Miller, Anna Thompson, Daniel Goodwin, Fanny Goodwin, Susanna Goodwin, Betsey Farnham, Abigail Farnham, Judith Applebee, Deborah Wentworth, Hannah Tibbetts, Betsey Miller. Asa Merrill was acting clerk, and Humphrey Goodwin pastor.

The church has a present membership of sixty-seven; twenty-one living in Milton. The officers are Oliver C. Titcomb and Horace N. Farnham, deacons; Hiram B. Manson, pastor; Jacob Brackett, clerk.

A few years ago this church moved their house of worship into the village upon Acton side of the river, and fitted it up in a very neat and tasty manner.

Temperance.—The necessity for taking measures for the suppression of vice and intemperance engaged the attention of the people of Milton quite early. As soon as Sept. 25, 1815, a resolution was passed for the suppression of vice and the encouragement of virtue.

This was followed by the election of a committee on the 8th day of March, 1831, to enforce the laws respecting the retailing of ardent spirits. Again, on March 14, 1848, the town voted 72 to 7 in favor of enacting a law prohibiting the sale of wines and other spirituous liquors; and on the 5th day of November, 1878, voted to enforce the laws relating to the sale of cider and beer.

Not only the town in its corporate capacity has felt the necessity of using its influence and power in favor of temperance and virtue, but the inhabitants, in their private capacity as individuals and Christians, have seen the necessity of crushing the great evil and sin of intemperance and promoting the practice of abstinence and virtue among the people. Their efforts in this direction have been productive of great good. Many dealers in alcoholic poison have been made to see that the traffic was both unpopular and unprofitable, and have abandoned it for some more legitimate business.

Moderate drinkers have seen their danger, and many have been led to abandon the use of intoxicating drinks of all kinds.

Secret Societies.—About 1848-49, Temperiff Division, No. 49, Sons of Temperance, was instituted at Three Ponds, and for a time was in a very prosperous condition, adding largely to its membership; but after a few years the interest in the institution began to abate, and the meetings were discontinued.

Miltonia Lodge, No. 52, I. O. O. F., was instituted at Milton Mills on the 5th of October, 1871, with Asa A. Fox, Oscar F. Marsh, William Walsh, John Meikle, Thomas J. Cutts, Oliver C. Titcomb, and John F. Titcomb as charter members. All except Mr. Walsh are still active members of the lodge. The first officers were Asa A. Fox, N. G.; Oscar F. Marsh, V. G.; John F. Titcomb, Treas.; O. C. Titcomb, Sec. This lodge has been very prosperous, one hundred and thirty-eight members having been added since its institution, with very little sickness and few deaths.

The lodge lost nearly all its property by fire about seven years ago, but it now has a well-furnished hall, fine regalia, and a fund of some thirteen hundred dollars invested in good securities.

The officers for the term ending Dec. 31, 1882, are Alexander Meikle, N. G.; Ed. R. Campbell, V. G.; Oscar F. Marsh, Treas.; John Lewis, Sec.

Morning Star Lodge, No. 18, Knights of Pythias, was instituted at Milton Mills Jan. 18, 1877, with sixteen charter members, viz.: Asa A. Fox, Benjamin G. Adams, William McGibbon, E. B. Warren, F. H. Lowd, S. H. Atkins, F. E. Stevens, S. Flint, F. H. Adams, J. O. Emerson, C. F. Haines, W. F. Limond, E. C. Abbott, A. B. Carter, L. B. Roberts, J. F. Titcomb.

The following members were installed: Asa A. Fox, C. C.; B. G. Adams, P. C.; William McGibbon, V. C.; F. H. Lowd, K. of R. and S.; F. H. Adams, M. of F.; E. B. Warren, M. of E.; A. B. Carter, Prelate; F. E. Stevens, M. at A.; S. H. Atkins, I. G.; S. Flint, O. G.

Fifty-one members have been added to the lodge, and none have died. All the lodge's paraphernalia has been paid for, and the lodge has quite a fund safely invested for future requirements. The present officers are William Vennell, C. C.; T. Farmer, P. C.; W. S. Pillsbury, V. C.; E. T. Libby, K. of R. and S.;

John Lewis, M. of F.; T. Conley, Jr., M. of E.; J. N. Witham, Prelate; C. Rennie, I. G.; J. E. Brierly, O. G.

Alms Farm, etc.—On the 14th day of March, 1837, the town voted to receive its proportion of the surplus revenue, and at a meeting held June 4, 1838, a vote was passed authorizing the town agent to expend that money in the purchase of a farm to be used for a home and the support of the poor.

Although there was a large majority in favor of this action, the minority felt very much aggrieved thereat, being of the opinion that this money should be divided per capita.

These malcontents immediately took measures intended to frustrate the action of the majority. They at once asked for a meeting to be called to reconsider the vote for the purchase of a farm, and being again defeated at this meeting, and the farm being soon purchased, they at once petitioned for a meeting to sell the farm and divide the money. They were again defeated, but with a persistency worthy of a better cause they continued to ask for meetings for the same purpose as often as they could legally be called, until at last the selectmen refused to notice them further. They then applied to a justice of the peace to call a meeting, and on the 31st day of May, 1842, a meeting was held at which a vote was passed to sell the farm and stock, and divide the proceeds equally between all the inhabitants of the town, and a committee chosen to carry this vote into effect.

This committee at once advertised the farm and stock to be sold at public auction on the 4th day of July following, at which time all was struck off to the highest bidders.

At a meeting held on the 28th of the same month a resolution was passed declaring the former meeting and the action of the committee illegal and void, and instructing the selectmen to demand of said committee all the property, both real and personal, taken into their possession.

In accordance with these instructions, the selectmen commenced a suit against the committee for the recovery of said property. This suit was prosecuted to final judgment and execution. The farm continued to be used as an alms farm until a county home was prepared for the poor, since which time it has been allowed, in a great measure, to run to waste for lack of proper care and cultivation.

Mills, Manufactories, etc.—The first saw-mill was built by Samuel Palmer at the Three Ponds village, and near where the present dam is located. This was very early, probably about 1775 to 1780. Mr. Palmer subsequently built another saw-mill and a grist-mill farther down stream, where the Varney mill was afterwards located. This part of the town was known for many years as "Palmer's Mills." Very soon after this a saw-mill was built at Milton Mills by a Mr. Nock. This mill soon went into the hands of Paul Jewett, and was subsequently known as the Jewett mill. This place was known for a long time as Shapleigh Mills. Mills rapidly increased, so that in 1843 there were no less than twelve mills of various kinds in town, viz.: Lyman's saw- and grist-mills, owned by Theodore C. Lyman and others, Thomas Layton's wool-carding mill, Ira Fish's fulling-mill, Isaac Wooster's grist-mill, owned by Isaac Wooster and others, Paul Jewett's saw- and grist-mills, Nathaniel Jewett's saw-mill, owned by Nathaniel Jewett and others, Stephen Watson's saw-mill, owned by Stephen Watson and others, the lower saw-mill, with various owners, Horn's saw- and grist-mills, owned by Benjamin Horn. The last-named mills were situated at the upper end of the town, on a narrow point of land which has since been annexed to Wakefield. This number was soon increased by the erection of Berry's mill, Hayes' mill, and others. Thomas Layton's factory was erected in 1816, and was used as a woolen-mill until 1837, after which Francis Looney used it for the manufacture of cotton for fourteen years. It was subsequently burned.

The Milton Mills Manufacturing Company was organized in 1837, and in that and the following year built their mill, and after running it a few years transferred the business to Durgin & Co. In 1845-46 the whole property was bought by John Townsend, and was run successfully by him for several years. The mill was burned, and rebuilt by Mr. Townsend, being considerably enlarged. It was soon after sold to Mudge, Sawyer & Co., and subsequently to the Waumbek Company, and has continued to do a very successful business. This company has a capital stock of $100,000, and the mill has ten sets of woolen machinery. They employ 175 operatives, with a monthly payroll of $3200. They use about 240,000 pounds of wool and 160,000 pounds of cotton, 725 cords of wood and 500 tons of coal annually, and produce 396,000 yards of cloth and 27,550 pairs of blankets. The officers are J. D. Sturtevant, president, Brookline, Mass.; Francis Cabot, treasurer, Brookline, Mass.; B. G. Adams, agent, Milton Mills, N. H.; F. H. Lowd, paymaster, Milton Mills, N. H.

In 1844 a cotton factory was built at Three Ponds, and after running a few months was burned in September, 1845, the watchman, Mr. Caleb Varney, perishing in the flames. This mill was soon rebuilt, but was never put in operation, it being subsequently taken down and carried away.

William Sargent succeeded Ira Fish in the fulling-mill business in 1820, and carried on the business until 1825, when he was succeeded by John H. Varney, who, after some twenty-two years of successful business, sold out to Joshua Holland in 1847.

Mr. Holland went into the manufacture of woolen goods, which business he carried on with success for some ten or twelve years. The mill was subsequently burned.

Edward Brierly established a block printing business at Milton Mills in 1850, and after a few years of successful business purchased a saw-mill and privilege on the site of the present Brierly mill, where he soon began the manufacture of felt goods. The rapid increase of his business soon compelled him to make extensive additions, and in a short time he had extensive mills upon both sides of the river, doing a very remunerative business.

In the summer of 1873 these mills were entirely destroyed by fire, thus sweeping away in an hour the accumulations of years of hard labor. Mr. Brierly soon began the erection of the present mill, but losing largely by the insolvency of insurance companies, he became somewhat embarrassed, and was obliged to compromise with his creditors. His health soon after failing, he was unable to recover his former position, and at his death the property went into other hands, and has never since been operated to its full capacity.

In 1873, Henry H. Townsend & Co. erected a mill at this village for the manufacture of felt goods, and still continue the business successfully.

They have employed upon an average about twenty or twenty-five men, with a pay-roll of eight hundred dollars per month, their yearly sales amounting to one hundred and fifty to one hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars.

In 1880 they erected a new and much larger mill, in which they are about to commence the manufacture of thread goods. This mill has a capacity of six sets of machinery, and will add very materially to the business of the village when in full operation.

In 1880 the Great Falls Manufacturing Company built a large mill at the Three Ponds, which will add largely to the business of the town when it is put in operation. There was at one time quite an extensive shoe manufacturing business carried on in this town.

John E. Goodwin & Co., at West Milton, employing some twenty-five or thirty hands in the shop cutting and putting up stock, the fitting and buttoning being entirely done outside. Their pay-roll amounted to some three thousand dollars per month.

H. V. & Eli Wentworth also carried on a large business at South Milton for several years. Fire destroyed their shop and closed up the business a few years ago, as it has done so many other manufacturing interests in town.

D. & S. Washburn, L. Berry, and J. Jayward have each at times done quite an extensive manufacturing business at Three Ponds, the latter being burned out in the conflagration of March 17, 1864, which destroyed the extensive establishment of Robert Mathes, J. W. Nutter's dwelling-house, etc., entailing a loss of many thousand dollars. G. W. Tasker is now doing quite a thriving manufacturing business at this village.

Murray Brothers some half-dozen years ago commenced the manufacture of tin goods at Milton Mills, and have done a prosperous business.

Lewis Plummer & Son are still doing an extensive lumber business at the Hayes mill, and Luther & C. H. Hayes are doing a large milling, lumber, and box business at their mills at South Milton, on or near the site of the T. C. Lyman mills.

Other mills have been built in town of more or less note. Eben Jones built a saw- and grist-mill at what is known as the "Old Plume" as early as 1784-85.

Three mills were swept away by the great freshet of 1785-86, and very soon after a grist-mill was built upon the Twombly Brook. This mill was not a success, as the brook did not afford sufficient water for grinding, and the mill was either removed or another built upon "Great Brook," not far away.

In 1863, George W. Wentworth built a large and expensive mill on the Middleton River, at the foot of Teneriffe Mountain. Mr. Wentworth also erected some half-dozen houses for the accommodation of his operatives, but owing to the persistent opposition of the town he was unable to get a public road to his mills, and was obliged to abandon the enterprise. The mill and houses were subsequently taken down and carried away, and what at one time bid fair to become a busy manufacturing village is now a barren waste.

Military Record.—Milton is deservedly proud of its military record, which will compare favorably with that of any other town in the county, and perhaps in the State. The enlistments for the war of 1812, as nearly as can be ascertained, were as follows, viz.:

Capt. William Conison, Sept. 11, 1814.
Lieut. Jeremy Nute, Sept. 11, 1814.
Sergt. John Weston, Sept. 11, 1814.

War of the Rebellion.—From the time the first rebel gun was fired upon Sumter, to the surrender of Lee at Appomattox Court-House, the people of this town were alive to the necessity of promptly furnishing the government with the sinews of war, in order to preserve the Union and save the life of the Republic. Party spirit was for the time laid aside, and the following votes were almost unanimously passed at town-meetings called for that purpose.

May 16, 1861, "Voted to raise on notes of the town one thousand dollars for procuring such articles as may be needed for the personal safety and comfort of those who may enlist as volunteers from Milton, and for the support of their families while absent."

Dec. 21, 1861, "Voted to raise on notes of the town fifteen hundred dollars in addition to the one thousand for the same purpose."

March 11, 1862, "Voted to hire four thousand dollars to be applied to the aid of the families of volunteers."

Aug. 11, 1862, "Voted to authorize the selectmen to pay a bounty of two hundred dollars to all resident volunteers on or before August, 15th inst."

"Voted to authorize the selectmen to hire two thousand dollars for that purpose."

March 10, 1863, "Voted to authorize the selectmen to hire five thousand dollars to aid families of volunteers now in service of the United States."

July 11, 1863, "Voted to pay each man who may be drafted from the town into the service of the United States three hundred dollars."

"Voted to authorize the selectmen to hire on notes of the town such a sum as may be necessary for that purpose."

Sept. 7, 1863, "Voted to authorize the selectmen to pay each drafted man the sum of three hundred dollars within ten days after he, or his substitute, shall have been mustered into the U. S. service."

"Voted to authorize the selectmen to hire six thousand dollars for that purpose."

"Voted to authorize the selectmen to hire one thousand dollars to aid the families of drafted men."

Dec. 5, 1863, "Voted to authorize the selectmen to procure volunteers to fill the quota of the town, paying each man a bounty of five hundred dollars."

"Voted to authorize the selectmen to hire eleven thousand dollars for that purpose."

Dec. 8, 1863, "Voted to authorize the selectmen to procure volunteers to fill said quota, and to pay such sums in addition to the five hundred dollars as may be necessary."

"Voted to authorize the selectmen to hire four thousand dollars for that purpose."

March 8, 1864, "Voted to authorize the selectmen to hire five thousand dollars to aid families of soldiers in the U. S. service."

July 18, 1864, "Voted to fill the quota of this town for the next call of the President for soldiers, and pay a sum agreeably to an act passed June session, 1864."

"Voted to authorize the selectmen to hire ten thousand dollars for that purpose."

Aug. 6, 1864, "Voted to pay each man who may enlist under the call of July 18, 1864, who has been a resident of this town three months next preceding said enlistment, the sum of two hundred dollars for twelve-months' men, two hundred and fifty dollars for two-years' men, and three hundred dollars for three-years' men, in addition to the bounties already voted."

"Voted to authorize the selectmen to hire twelve thousand dollars for that purpose."

Dec. 7, 1864, "Voted to pay a bounty to volunteers or persons furnishing substitutes, counting on the quota of Milton in anticipation of a future call for men."

"Voted to authorize the selectmen to hire twelve thousand dollars to pay said bounties."

March 14, 1865, "Voted to pay a bounty of two hundred dollars each to men who may be drafted from this town."

"Voted to pay each re-enlisted man a bounty of two hundred dollars, and interest from time of re-enlistment until paid."

"Voted to authorize the selectmen to hire five thousand dollars to aid the families of volunteers and drafted men."

This making a total appropriation for war purposes of seventy-nine thousand five hundred dollars in four years, and showing a readiness to contribute freely to the support of the government in its time of peril. This, with the following roll of honor, makes up a war record to which the people of Milton may refer with commendable pride.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

LEWIS WORSTER NUTE.

Lewis Worster Nute, the subject of this sketch, was born in Milton, N. H., Feb. 17, 1820. His grandfather, Samuel Nute, who was a native of Dover, and the head of a large family, was an active and influential citizen, living in Milton during his entire married life, and dying at an advanced age. His father, Ezekiel Nute, was born in Milton, Nov. 30, 1794, and was a farmer. Ezekiel Nute married Dorcas Worster, Sept. 19, 1815, and had four children, as follows: Cyrus W., Lewis W., Isaac F., and Samuel F. Two of these, Cyrus and Isaac, are dead; Lewis W. is residing in Boston, Mass., and Samuel F. lives at Union, N. H. In politics Ezekiel Nute was a Whig. He was for many years a deacon in the Congregational Church. He died April 14, 1859, when about sixty-five years of age, his wife surviving him till Dec. 11, 1869.

Lewis W. Nute was not highly favored as regards educational privileges, being permitted to attend school only about six weeks each winter. He was so studious, however, and made such use of the limited opportunities offered that at the age of nineteen he engaged in teaching, continuing that occupation during two terms. He lived at home until twenty years of age, when he went to Boston, where, for six months, he was employed as clerk in the ship-chandler store of Mr. Simmons. He was next employed in the boot and shoe business with Elmer Townsend. When the latter failed, he engaged with the firm of T. P. and O. Rich & Co., remaining with them until the spring of 1848; then with Allen, Harris & Potter, until May 1, 1853, when he purchased an interest in the business, the new firm taking the name of Potter, Elder & Nute, and the business being conducted by the junior member of the firm. Three years later the firm changed to Potter, Nute, White & Bayley, and Dec. 1, 1863,

Mr. Nute succeeded to the entire business, which is now (1882) conducted on High Street, where he does the largest brogan and plow-shoe business in the State, making more goods in this line than any one else in the boot and shoe business, producing (4000) four thousand pairs each day, and is regarded one of the stanchest houses in that great city. He also has an extensive manufactory at Natick, Mass., and a large wholesale store at 27 High Street, Boston. His career has been a remarkable one, in this, that from a poor boy he has come to be a very wealthy and successful man, and all without the loss of manhood or of friends. Indeed, he is justly one of the most highly esteemed and universally loved men in the East. He is an honorable citizen, with character well rounded and symmetrical, and his influence on the community in which he lives is always on the side of right.

In politics Mr. Nute was formerly a Whig, and of late years a Republican. His wife was Priscilla Farrow, whom he married Aug. 1, 1845. She was born in Cohasset, Dec. 6, 1819, and is a member of the Congregational Church.

JOSEPH PLUMER.

Francis Plumer came from the British Isles to America in 1633 or 1634,—some say Wales, others say England,—and settled in Newburyport, Mass. His descendants have settled in different parts of the State of New Hampshire; one branch of the family in Epping, to which belonged William Plumer, who was Governor of the State for many years, and his son, Hon. William, and many others now living in Epping.

Another branch of Francis Plumer settled in Rochester, among whom was John Plumer, who was a judge for many years. He had two sons, Joseph and Bard, who settled in the northerly part of Rochester in 1780, then known as the third parish, now known as Plumer's Ridge, which was incorporated in the town of Milton in 1802.

Joseph died in 1821. He has no descendants now living (1882).

Hon. Bard Plumer was born in 1754; married a Miss Ham. Their children were Jonathan, Enoch, Joseph, Betsey, who married Joshua G. Hall, of Wakefield, and Susan, wife of Adam Brown, of Wollborough.

Hon. Bard Plumer can truthfully be said to have been a leading spirit in his locality. By occupation a farmer and large land-owner. In politics a Democrat, and held the offices of his town; was a member of the State Senate, being the first honorable from the town of Milton. His wife died in 1803, and subsequently he married a Miss Page, of Dunbarton, who survived him many years. He died in 1816.

Joseph Plumer, son of Hon. Bard, was born in Rochester, now Milton, in 1786, was a farmer on a part of the original Plumer homestead, and in his avocation was eminently successful. In politics a Democrat. Held the various offices of the town. He married Sally Brown, of Hampton Falls,<sup>1</sup> daughter of Nathan Brown. She was born March 26, 1785. Their children were Jonathan, who died young; Caroline, who died at fifty, and was the wife of David P. Wentworth, of Ossipee; Enoch W., Bard, Joseph, and Sarah, wife of George A. Neal, of Wakefield.

Mr. Plumer died Jan. 3, 1826, having lived a constant Congregationalist. His wife Sally died in July, 1877.

Joseph Plumer, son of Joseph and Sally (Brown) Plumer, was born in Milton on the old homestead March 11, 1820; received a good academic education at Phillips' Exeter Academy, making mathematics a specialty, in which he was very apt. He and his brother, Enoch W., bought out the other heirs, divided the property, and Joseph built the fine house and surroundings known as the Pine-Grove Cottage, and is now his residence (1882). As a farmer and business man he has been eminently successful, owning at first some three hundred acres of land. He has enlarged his farm at different times till now he has over one thousand acres of land. He also has dealt quite largely in the wood and lumber business, cutting as high as seven thousand cords of wood in a winter.

He was one of the original corporators of the Norway Plains Savings-Bank. He has been twice married, first to Adaline F. Baker, daughter of Hon. Moses Baker, of Somersworth, N. H., in 1844, who was born May, 1820, and died June, 1858, leaving as children Moses B., now in the mines of Colorado, and Joseph, Jr., a farmer near the old Plumer homestead; he married Carrie Fall.

Mr. Plumer's second marriage occurred Oct. 1, 1863, to Hannah D. Clark, of Framingham, Mass., who was born in Sanbornton, N. H., Dec. 18, 1830, and was the daughter of John N. Clark.

Mr. Plumer is ever among the foremost to encourage and support what he considers to be for the good of his community, attends and supports the Congregational Church; has held the several town offices many times; has been a member of the Legislature, and a delegate to the Constitutional Convention of 1876; in politics a Republican.

Enoch W. was born in Milton April 4, 1815; received a common-school education; he married Orinda Ayers, of Wakefield, N. H., June, 1840, who was born 1817. Their children were John T., who died June, 1868; Joseph E.; Mary B., who married Samuel W. Wallingford; and Bard B., who married Miss Eliza D. Wentworth, and lives with his father in the old Plumer homestead. Their children are Lulia C., Fanny W., and Bard B., making the fifth generation by the name of Bard Plumer who have lived in the house built by the Hon. Bard.

Sarah, who married Rev. Frank Haley; Fanny W., who married Dr. J. H. Twombly; and Susan, the wife of John Roberts, who died October, 1878, were daughters of E. W. Plumer.

Mr. Plumer has been twice a member of the Legislature; deacon of the first Congregational Church for many years, in which he has been a leading spirit for the past forty years.

CHAPTER XCIX.

NEW DURHAM.

THE town of New Durham lies in the northern part of the county, and is bounded as follows: on the north by Belknap County, on the east by Carroll County and the town of Middleton, on the south by Farmington, and on the west by Belknap County. The surface is hilly, and the soil well adapted to grazing.

New Durham originally, with the towns of Middleton, New Durham Gore, with portions of Gilmanton, Wakefield, and Wolfborough, comprised the town of Kingswood, chartered Oct. 20, 1737. It was incorporated as a separate town under its present name Dec. 7, 1762. The town was granted as early as 1749 to Ebenezer Smith and others.

Documentary History.—At a public meeting of the Proprietors of New Durham in the Province of New Hampshire legally notified, holden at the meeting house at Durham falls in s<sup>d</sup> province on monday the 30th day of Decemb<sup>r</sup> 1765 at 2 o'clock P. M. then & there the s<sup>d</sup> proprietors made choice of Maj<sup>r</sup> Thomas Tash and Capt. Thomas Chesle as a Committee to apply to the general Court of s<sup>d</sup> Province to see if s<sup>d</sup> Court will pass an act to Impower the s<sup>d</sup> Proprietors to sell so much of the land of the delinquent proprietors as shall pay their proportion of the charges to be defrayed by s<sup>d</sup> propriety.

The Tash prop<sup>r</sup> Clark

A true Copy

To his Excellency John Wentworth Esq<sup>r</sup> Governor and Commander in Chief in and over his Majestys Province of New Hampshire, the Honourable Council and Representatives of Said Province.

The Humble Petition of Thomas Tash and Thomas Cheslee, In Behalf of the Proprietors of New Durham Sheweth

That Whereas a Great Number of the Proprietors of said New Durham have been Delinquent in paying their proportion of the Necessary Charges that have already arisin on account of the Settlement of Said Town, and it is highly probable s<sup>d</sup> Delinquents will be as unwilling to pay any Necessary Charge that may hereafter arise; Therefore the Burden must Consequently Lay on such of said propriety as are most willing to promote said Town and the Settlement thereof.

H. W. Coburn

We therefore most Humbly Shew, That at a Legal Meeting of Said proprietors held on the 30th Day of December A. D. 1765 it was Voted that we the said Thomas Tash & Thomas Chesley should be a Committee to apply to your Excellency and your honours, in order to obtain an act to Impower the said proprietors or their Collectors to Sell the Rights of Said Delinquent proprietors or Such a Part thereof as shall be Sufficient to pay their Respective proportion of Such Necessary Charges.

Your Petitioners Earnestly hope your Excellency and Honours will Take our prayer into your wise Consideration and procure Such a Remedy as your Excellency and Honours in your Great wisdom Shall think proper, and your petitioners as in Duty bound Shall ever pray.

THOM TASH
THOM CHESLEY

New Durham September 10th 1767

Col. Thomas Tash was a prominent pioneer of New Durham, and erected the first grist- and saw-mill in the town. He served in the French and Indian war as captain and major, and as colonel in the war of the Revolution. He died aged eighty-seven.

Ecclesiastical History.—Rev. Nathaniel Porter, a Congregationalist, was ordained in New Durham in 1775, and dismissed in 1777. He was succeeded by Elder Benjamin Randall, the patriarch of the Free-Will Baptist denomination. He organized the first Free-Will Baptist Church in America, in the house of Elder Joseph Booley; the house is now standing. Elder Randall continued preaching, and traveled more or less, until at last he died of consumption, in 1808, aged sixty years. A plain marble shaft marks his resting-place in the family burying-ground of New Durham Ridge. Elder Joseph Booley, a contemporary and co-worker with Elder Randall, lived and died in this town. He was born in 1773, commenced preaching in 1797, was ordained by Randall and others in 1799. He traveled and preached extensively throughout the New England and Middle States. He died May 12, 1867, at the advanced age of ninety-four years, beloved and revered by all that knew him. He was an honored member of the Masonic fraternity about sixty years.

Elder Nathaniel Berry, a very worthy man, had charge of the Free-Will Baptist Church in this town nearly forty years. He died Oct. 19, 1865, aged seventy-seven years.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH.

F. W. COBURN.

The history of the career of Mr. Coburn is one peculiar to the self-made men of our times. He was seventeen years old when he moved in 1851 with his father from Pelham, N. H., to the place at present occupied by him, at that time a wilderness. Soon after arriving at New Durham he apprenticed himself to his brother-in-law, James H. Fletcher, who was a manufacturer in a very small way of edge tools. He served three years as an apprentice, when his time expired; he continued to work, however, in the same shop for one year. The pay he received was very small compared to the prices paid mechanics to-day. One year after completing his apprenticeship he was married to Susan, daughter of Alfred S. Willey, of New Durham.

Immediately after his marriage he commenced business for himself in the shop in which he learned his trade. His business was on a small scale, but by close application and undaunted energy it improved and extended, necessitating the enlargement of his facilities for manufacturing. His shop burned two years after he commenced operations, whereupon he moved down the stream and built a factory on the site he now occupies. He commenced the manufacture of shoe-knives in a very humble way, the extent of his factory being but three dozen knives per day. He adopted the brand, "F. W. C.," the three initial letters of his name. The excellence of his knives soon gave them an enviable reputation, and orders came in from distant parts of the country, necessitating the introduction of the most modern improvements in machinery for manufacturing his particular line. His factory now has a capacity of one hundred and fifty dozen knives per day, besides a large quantity of shaves and other tools used in the manufacture of boots and shoes. The F. W. C. knife has a world-wide reputation. A few years ago the sale of his wares was confined to Rochester, Dover, Farmington, and Haverhill, Mass., that being the outside limit. To-day he ships his goods to every State in the Union, the Canadas, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward's Island, Great Britain, Germany, and Australia.

The factory is located on a good water-power, but Mr. Coburn put in a steam-engine, which gives him safe motive-power for every working-day in the year. The wilderness that he moved into in 1858 has been converted, through his successful management, into a thriving village. It contains a post-office, store, edge tool factories, and several fine dwellings, all the property of Mr. Coburn. Prominent among the residents are his two married sons, who are engaged in the business with him, and who have in a remarkable degree inherited their father's business proclivities,—a fact that affords gratification to Mr. Coburn, as his great desire is to have the business he has so successfully worked up perpetuated in his family. He employs a large number of men, who find residences in the buildings he has erected for their comfort. The name of the post-office is Coburnville.

Mr. Coburn has been married twice. Three children were born to his first wife,—Charles, Frank W., Jr., and Alonzo G. Charles died at the age of twenty-three, leaving a widow and one child,—Willie U. Frank W., Jr., married Leona Smith, of Rochester, N. H., and Alonzo G. married Annie Adams, of New Durham.

Mrs. Coburn died Nov. 28, 1858, and one year after he married her sister, Mary J., by whom he has two children living,—Alma J. and Susan M.

In politics Mr. Coburn is a Republican, being a firm advocate of the principles of that party. He was a Democrat prior to the campaign of 1880, when he left that party on the tariff question. He has always commanded the respect and esteem of the citizens of the town for which he has done so much, and has officiated as justice of the peace, which position he now occupies. He represented his district in the Legislature in 1878 and 1880.

Mr. Coburn is essentially a self-made man, and his life has been one of steady and active devotion to business, success being the natural result. In religion Mr. Coburn is a follower of Paine, Huxley, and Ingersoll. His convictions are liberal, believing that each man should worship as his conscience dictates.

CHAPTER C.

ROLLINSTORD.

Geographical—Early History—Incorporation—Village of Salmon Falls—Boston and Maine Railroad—Great Falls and Conway Road—"Sligo"—Population—Highways—Agriculture—Various Farms—Prosperity—Old Wentworth House—Old Pike House—The Salmon Falls Manufacturing Company—Somersworth Machine Company—Lawyers—Physicians.

ROLLINSTORD, in the southeastern part of Strafford County, adjoins South Berwick, Me., from which it is separated by the Salmon Falls River, forty-five miles from Concord. Its territory was formerly a part of Somersworth, from which it was separated and incorporated July 3, 1849. With Somersworth it was originally a part of Dover, and was settled at a very early date, being occupied by the settlement made as early as 1639. At the falls here certain persons sent over by Mason "built a saw-mill" and a "stamping-mill for corne" about 1634, but the mills were burned before 1644. Prior to 1700 the falls came into possession of Judge Thomas Tuttle, of Dover, who owned large tracts of land adjoining and resided there, and who erected mills.

There is one village in the town situate in the southeastern part, called Salmon Falls. It received its name from the fact that before manufacturing was extensively carried on there some small quantities of salmon were caught near the falls. It is now a village of about one hundred houses, a great part of which are owned by the Salmon Falls Manufacturing Company, whose mills and shops are located there.

For a time this village was in an exceedingly flourishing condition. Then there were but few French worthy of mention, and but few foreigners of any nationality connected with the mills. A good class of people, thrifty, intelligent, and industrious, were brought together in this promising little place: A public library was started, and a good class of literature was put in circulation. Lyceums and lecture courses were regularly held. Besides this, a spirit of enterprise was particularly marked in the business part of the village. But since the war, whose devastating hand so prostrated the business interests of more than one little village in our enterprising New England, and the introduction of the French element into the mills, the life and energy of the village has seemed to flag, and the general tone of society to depreciate.

The streets of Salmon Falls are laid out with all the regularity of one of the new-born cities of the West, most of them running at right angles to each other, and for several years they were lighted by gas.

The Somersworth Machine Company's foundry and shops are about one-third of a mile down the river from the mills of the Salmon Falls Manufacturing Company.

The only post-office in the town is here, and is the Salmon Falls Post Office. All the town-meetings and general gatherings of the town are held in the village hall. Jones's Hotel, just across the way from the Boston and Maine Railroad depot, is a house well conducted and of good repute. The Boston and Maine Railroad and the Great Falls and Conway Railroad run through this village and have depots here.

The Boston and Maine Railroad has about four miles of road in Rollinstord, runs across the town from east to west, crossing the Salmon Falls River into Maine. At present this road has only a single track through Rollinstord, but a double track is being laid on other parts of the road, and in a few years at furthest it will be laid through this town. At Rollinstord Station the Boston and Maine has a branch track which runs to Great Falls, a distance of about two and one-half miles, where passengers can connect with the Great Falls and Conway Railroad for points farther north.

This latter railroad, as before mentioned, runs through the town. It crosses the northeastern part, having here about one mile of road, and at Salmon Falls crosses the river into Maine. In the summer season there is a great deal of travel over this road to the mountains. It connects at North Conway with the Portland and Ogdensburg, and is controlled by the Eastern Railroad.

In the southern part of the town, near what is called the Point, is a locality called Sligo. This part of the town was settled first, and, it is held, derived its name from the fact that the first settlers came from Ireland, and named it in fond remembrance of the Sligo they had left in the Emerald Isle. However this may be, it has long gone by this name, and, as spoken of in another part of this history, is an excellent farming locality.

Since the organization of the town the population has somewhat varied. In 1850 there were 649 males, 1217 females, equals 1857, and 5 colored persons; total, 1862. In 1860 there were 752 males, 1316 females, equals 2068, and 1 colored person; total, 2069. In 1870 there were 1251 natives, 249 foreigners, and 2 colored, equals 1500. In 1880, 1712.

Rollinsford is not without its picturesqueness. Nature has done much for it in this direction, and has rendered it a delightful place to journey through, by reason of its varied and attractive scenery. Here the verdure of the trees and shrubbery in the leafy month of June, and the many hues and tints which the foliage assumes when frost lays its magic hand thereon, add a charm to the face of nature which one is never tired of gazing on.

The general surface of the town is even, yet enough of hills and dale to call attention to the fact that it is an element of the "Old Granite State," and these seem needed to make it the delightful place it really is.

Riding from Dover to Salmon Falls over what is called the "old road" just at sundown is a pleasure often indulged in by those who seek that rest and recreation which only nature in its most lovely aspect can give. In this you pass Garrison Hill, whose summit is just within the limits of Dover. It is a noted locality, covered with legends and authentic historic events, which date way back to the early Indian history of this region.

It is a fine old hill and overlooks the city, giving one a delightful view from the observatory on its summit.

A little farther along you pass the new and elegant residence of Senator Rollins, and all the way plenty of well-cultivated and fertile farms on either side. The road is somewhat winding, and this, together with the brooks, the large over-hanging elms, and rows of shady willows serve to keep the expectation of the traveler kindled as he continually beholds something new and different at every turn.

A very pleasant drive is over the Great Falls road from "Rollinsford Plains." For a mile here the road is nearly straight and very even, and on either side are dense woods with sufficient variety of trees to insure in October all the beauties which can be wrought by the changing hues and tints of autumnal foliage.

A drive somewhat less frequented than those already mentioned, yet not less attractive, is to start from the summit of Rollinsford Hill, in that part of the town called Quamphegan, and, passing the delightful situation of the residence of Frank Hale, follow the winding road to Style's Cove, and still farther along through "Sligo" towards "Elliott Bridge," entering Dover over the "Gulf Road." By so doing you pass through the best farming locality in the town, and have variety enough of steep hills, of sudden turns, and river views. The Salmon Falls, flowing just at your left, broadens as you go, and long before it unites with the Cochecho to form the Piscataqua becomes a truly majestic stream of water.

The old Twombly Brook is quite a noted little stream, and is a favorite resort of amateur fishermen. It winds down from the hills in the vicinity of Somersworth, and shortly after uniting with Rollins' Brook empties itself into Fresh Creek. A very romantic locality in this delightful stream is "The Falls," which are located in dense woods on the land of the estate of the late William W. Rollins, and nearly down to the turnpike which leads from Dover to South Berwick. The brook here spreads out and becomes quite wide, and it dashes and foams over the rocks in a very wild and pleasing manner. It is a very shady and attractive spot. Quite a quantity of fish have in years gone by been taken from this brook, including trout of no mean proportions, horn pout, and even pickerel.

Agricultural.—Rollinsford has always been regarded as a thrifty farming town. Some of the best farms in the State are here, and are carried on in the most approved and modern way. The soil is naturally fertile and productive, and along the Salmon Falls River and by the shores of Fresh Creek the grass and other vegetation grow with something like a tropical luxuriance. The best farms are in this locality, and are owned by Frank Hale, William R. Garvin, Tobias Garvin, Aaron Roberts, and James Garvin.

However, in the central portion of the town are some most excellent farms and some very attractive residences. The old Hiram R. Roberts place, now occupied by his widow and oldest son, has always been kept in a high state of cultivation. The farm buildings are ample and commodious, having attached to them everything which modern convenience can suggest. The land has been made to yield profitable returns for the labor bestowed upon it for many years.

The William W. Rollins estate, now carried on by his two sons, William and Samuel, is a farm of no small proportion, containing something over three hundred acres. It is a pleasure to gaze over its broad, smooth fields near harvest-time and see the waving of the ripening grain, or, still later, see the busy gleaners gathering their rich harvests to their winter stores. Lately new and commodious farm buildings have been erected by these industrious and successful farmers.

The old Daniel Rollins place, now the summer residence of Senator Edward H. Rollins, is a beautiful retreat, situated on the old road leading to Dover, about a mile from the city. The house is of the Queen Anne style of architecture, large, and very striking in appearance, and is by far the finest residence in town. Each room is finished with a different kind of wood, and the details of the architecture throughout are in perfect keeping with the whole.

The farm is a good one, very productive, and worked in such a way as to yield the greatest returns.

Just across the way is the old Augustus Rollins place, an estate of many fertile acres, with a fine stand of farm-buildings thereon. It is carried on by three daughters of the late Augustus, who, by their shrewdness, skill, and good judgment, demonstrate the fact that good management in farm matters may be attained as well by women as by men.

One, in passing through the town, misses much if he does not visit the garden-farm of Edmund C. Goodwin. It is in the vicinity of Otis Hill, on the road leading from Dover to Great Falls. It is not of many acres, yet by skill and labor it is made to blossom like a garden in the tropics. It is devoted almost entirely to the raising of fruit and vegetables for the markets, and has proved very profitable to Mr. Goodwin. A wind-mill pumps water into a reservoir, from which it is carried over his whole establishment through pipes, and by this arrangement he can irrigate his whole land in dry weather in a few moments.

There are other good farms in town yielding good returns, through skillful management, for the labor bestowed upon them, among which may be mentioned Leavitt H. Yeaton, William Plumer, Luther P. Horne, Nicholas F. Richer, George W. Roberts, Joseph D. Roberts.

A person riding through the town can hardly help being struck with the evident prosperity of the people. The farms show by the rich green of their vegetation and their ample returns, by their well-trimmed hedges and rock walls and fences in good repair, by the neat, commodious, and even elegant houses, and by the thousand-and-one ways by which such knowledge comes to us, that Rollinsford is a town which ranks high as a farming community, and one of the pleasantest in the State.

"Old Wentworth House."—In this town, at what is called Salmon Falls, stands an old mansion house, located a little northwest of the Boston and Maine depot, which was built about the year 1710 by Col. Paul Wentworth, a very wealthy and enterprising citizen of the town. This is the oldest house in Rollinsford, and quite a history is connected with it, especially during the Revolutionary war period. Within its well-preserved walls stands an old clock, still running and keeping good time, which was manufactured in England and brought to this country and placed in this old mansion, where it was erected and furnished, and it bids fair now to need but little repairing to make it good for a hundred years to come. In speaking of this house more than a quarter of a century ago in a historical poem by a citizen of this town he describes it thus:

"Among the dwellings of that day
Which here and there are strown,
One has survived the shock of time,
And only one alone.

"Firmly that reverend mansion stands,
That relic of the past,
Borne down to us through rolling years,
With shades upon it cast.

"And could it speak, what tales 'twould tell,—

Tales of another age;
Those that were never sung in song,
Or penned on history's page.

"Long may it stand in years to come,
On it we love to gaze.
The moss of time has gathered there,
And dust of ancient days."

"Old Pike House."—On the old road leading to Dover, a few rods west of the Boston and Maine Railroad depot, stands another old mansion-house, kept in good repair, built by the Rev. James Pike, first minister of the town, in the year 1730. At one time this house was used for a garrison, and many trusting families slept securely within its walls. It is also made memorable from the fact that Whitefield, during one of his visits to this country, chose it as his residence for many days. Directly in front of it stood three gigantic elms, planted there at the time the house was erected, but time and the lightning's stroke has destroyed two of them, and one still lingers, though the electric fluid has dealt heavy strokes on it many different times.

It is now owned and occupied by Amos W. Pike, the great-grandson of the Rev. James, and has come down to him direct through three generations.

The old oaken timbers which form its frame-work are still firm and sound, and, though they have defied the winds and storms of a century and a half, still seem well fitted for a similar work another century to come. Around such old houses as we have spoken of must cluster associations and reminiscences dear to those whose heads their venerable and protecting roofs have covered. Historic remembrances, fond traditions, all must serve to hallow such spots, and cause those who have gone from thence out into a busy world to make periodic pilgrimages to where, in early youth, they were told of those whose names by the kindred ties of humanity have become dear to them, and shown by some evidence of physical toil where they have wrought.

Salmon Falls Manufacturing Company.—The Salmon Falls Manufacturing Company was incorporated June 17, 1822, when James Rundlett, Jeremiah Mason, John Haven, and others, were empowered by the Legislature of the State of New Hampshire to carry on the manufacture of cotton, woolen, and other goods at Salmon Falls, in the town of Somersworth. They erected a mill where No. 1 now stands, for the manufacture of woolen cloths, and ran it with varying success until Aug. 7, 1834, when it was totally destroyed by fire. The loss so discouraged the proprietors that it was not until Aug. 20, 1836 (two years later), that they would vote to rebuild; and after they had rebuilt, they could not agree among themselves what kind of goods should be made, and the mill remained idle until 1844. At this time a number of Boston capitalists, among whom were Abbott Lawrence, Amos Lawrence, Mason & Lawrence, William Appleton and others, bought a controlling interest in the mill, and started it on heavy cotton drillings and sheetings. They succeeded so well that they felt encouraged, in 1848, to build another mill of sixteen thousand spindles, and to increase their capital stock from $500,000 to $1,000,000.

The company sustained a severe loss in the total destruction, by fire, of No. 1 mill, agent's house, machine-shop, cloth-room, and other property, which took place July 8, 1864; but, in no wise discouraged by their losses, they commenced to build, in the spring of 1865, a mill to contain fifteen thousand spindles. After it was completed the company had two mills, containing thirty-one thousand spindles. In 1876, by judicious alterations and improvements, the number of spindles was increased from thirty-one thousand to fifty-four thousand three hundred and four.

The Salmon Falls River furnishes the motive-power by which the mills are run. There are two dams, with a fall of nineteen and twenty-three feet respectively. It has not been found necessary to use steam or any other auxiliary to the motive-power, the river so far having proved amply sufficient.

This company have two mills, both in Salmon Falls, and are known as No. 1 and No. 2. The former was built in 1865; is three hundred and sixty-three by fifty feet, and five stories high. The latter was built in 1848, is three hundred and sixty by sixty feet, and is also five stories high. There is also a picker-house, seventy-four by forty-two feet, and three stories high, a machine-shop and cloth-room, one hundred and eighty by thirty feet, and three stories high, a cotton-house, one hundred and forty-seven and a half by fifty and a half feet.

They make their own gas from petroleum, and own stores and dwelling-houses for their help.

The company operates 54,304 spindles and 1143 looms, and manufactures annually 1,844,226 pounds, or 8,912,792 yards, of cotton fabrics. They employ 600 operatives, and disburse to them $16,000 per month.

The different agents of the company have been:

James Rundlett, from Nov. 21, 1822, to July 14, 1823.

Ebenezer Ball, from Aug. 21, 1823, to Jan. 1, 1825.

Joshua W. Pierce, from Jan. 1, 1825, to May 14, 1844.

Plincy Lawton, from May 14, 1844, to July 14, 1854.

Varnum A. Shedd, from July 14, 1854, to April 2, 1859.

Joshua Converse, from April 20, 1859, to July 15, 1875.

O. S. Brown, from July 31, 1875, to present time.

The Salmon Falls Manufacturing Company has been very successful; while many cotton-manufacturing corporations have arbitrarily reduced or cut down their capital stock from fifty to seventy-five per cent. and then calculated dividends on the reduced capital, nothing of the sort has been done by this company. On the contrary, four hundred thousand dollars of the capital stock has been returned to the stockholders; and it is now paying them dividends at the rate of eight per cent. per annum.

The Somersworth Machine Company have a foundry and machine-shop about one-third of a mile down the river from the mills of the Salmon Falls Manufacturing Company. They have also another foundry and machine-shop in Great Falls. Both of them are, and have been for many years, doing a profitable business. The foundry in this town has for several years past been under the direct management of Edwin A. Stevens. About sixty hands are here employed, engaged in the manufacture of stoves. Additions have just been made to the main part of the foundry, owing to the increasing business of the establishment. C. H. Wright is agent, and O. H. Lord is treasurer of the corporation, both of them residing at Great Falls.

Rollinsford has never for any length of time supported a lawyer. John W. Woodman, who subsequently became a distinguished professor at Dartmouth College, opened a law-office here when a young man, but, receiving but little encouragement, abandoned it after a fair trial. William J. Copeland, now a successful and eminent lawyer in Great Falls, tried a similar experiment, but after waiting a reasonable time for clients, "folded his tent" and departed to other fields.

Physicians.—The following is a sketch of the different physicians who settled and practiced medicine in this town:

John E. Tyler, M.D., was born in Boston, Dec. 9, 1819. He entered Dartmouth College in the year 1838, and after graduation opened a private school in Newport, R. I. While there he commenced the study of medicine. He attended one course of lectures at Dartmouth Medical College, and two courses at Medical Department of University of Pennsylvania, graduating at this latter university in 1846. He at once began the practice of medicine in the village of Salmon Falls, and remained here till he was appointed superintendent of New Hampshire Asylum for Insane, Oct. 5, 1852. In 1858 he was elected superintendent of McLean Asylum for Insane, and remained there till 1871, when he resigned. After this he traveled a while in Europe. He died in April, 1878. While in Salmon Falls he took an active interest in all of the public institutions of the place. He was the first representative sent to the Legislature from Rollinsford, and was one of the founders of the Salmon Falls Bank.

John G. Pike, M.D., son of Nathaniel G., grandson of John, and great-grandson of Rev. James Pike, was born in this town, in the old house built by the Rev. James, the 17th of August, 1817. He fitted for college at Berwick Academy, and completed his education at Bowdoin. After leaving college he studied medicine with Theodore Jewett, of South Berwick, Me., late professor in Bowdoin Medical College, graduating from Bowdoin Medical College in 1847. He commenced the practice of medicine the same year in Durham. In 1848 he left Durham, and began practice in the village of Salmon Falls, in this town. In 1868 he left Salmon Falls, and began practice in Boston, Mass., remaining there until 1871, when he moved to Dover, where he now lives.

Jonathan S. Ross, M.D., was born in Lisbon, N. H., April 12, 1822. He fitted for college at Holmes Academy, Plymouth, N. H., and graduated from Dartmouth in the class of 1843. After graduating he began the study of medicine. He attended a course of lectures in University of Pennsylvania in winter of 1844-45, another course at Hanover in 1845, and in April, 1846, he received the degree of M.D. from the University of Pennsylvania. He soon after went to Boston and opened an office, pursuing his studies in the hospitals. From November, 1846, to fall of 1852 he was located in Bath, N. H. From fall of 1852 to 1855 he practiced his profession in the town of Rollinsford. In 1855 he commenced practice in Somersworth, where he continued until his death, Nov. 22, 1877. He represented the town of Rollinsford in State Legislature in 1855. In August, 1862, he was appointed surgeon of the Eleventh Regiment of New Hampshire Volunteers, and afterwards brigade surgeon of the Second Brigade, Second Division, Ninth Army Corps, Gen. S. G. Griffin. In 1865 he was stationed post-surgeon at Concord, N. H.

Alphonso Severance, M.D., was born in Orrington, Me., March 27, 1825. When quite a young man he taught school for several terms, but began the study of dentistry when about nineteen years of age, and the practice of the same at twenty-three in South Berwick, Me. He remained here a few months, when he removed to Great Falls. Here he remained till 1863, during a small part of which time he had a branch office in Salmon Falls. In 1863 he removed to Salmon Falls, where he remained in active practice till his death, which occurred Sept. 26, 1881. While he lived in this town he showed an interest in the school affairs, and for many years was one of the committee for the schools in the village. Some two or three years before his death, on account of failing health, he purchased some real estate in Florida and built him a house thereon. Here he spent the cold months of the year among his orange groves. Notwithstanding this, his health still continued to fail him, and he returned to New Hampshire to die.

William H. Horr, M.D., was born at Lancaster, Coos Co., N. H., July 3, 1845. He commenced the study of medicine with his brother, Dr. O. A. Horr, of Lewiston, Me., in September, 1867. In 1869 he was appointed assistant superintendent of the Maine State Reform School, at Cape Elizabeth, where he remained two years; took the degree of medicine at Bowdoin College in June, 1872, and commenced practice in Salmon Falls, November, 1872. He was in active practice in this place a little less than eight years. He died Oct. 21, 1881.

Edwin D. Jaques, M.D., was born in Machias, Me., March 9, 1841, received his education at Wesleyan Seminary, Kent's Hill, Me., and graduated from Bowdoin Medical College June 8, 1869. He commenced the practice of medicine in Norway, Me., and continued there one year; came to the village of Salmon Falls, in this town, in June, 1869, and practiced here until June, 1872, when he went to Boston, and for two years was connected with hospitals in that city. In the fall of 1874 he settled in South Berwick, Me., where he now is.

George O. Robbins, M.D., was born in Lee, Mass., April 18, 1855, prepared for college at Thomaston Academy, in the State of Connecticut, entered Yale in 1872, and graduated in the class of 1876. Very soon after his graduation he entered Yale Medical College, and received his degree of M.D. from that institution in 1879. He first begun the practice of medicine in Alstead, in this State, some time in October, 1879, remaining in that place until August, 1880, when he removed to Salmon Falls, where he is now located.

William B. Mach, M.D., son of W. F. Mach, was born at Bellows Falls, Vt., Jan. 26, 1852, studied medicine with S. H. Currier, of Norwich, Vt., and Prof. C. P. Frost, of Hanover. He graduated from the Dartmouth Medical College in 1877, and settled in practice in Dover in 1878. He left Dover Aug. 5, 1880, and settled in practice in the village of Salmon Falls, in this town, where he now is.

Besides the above-mentioned physicians were a few others who remained for a short time. They were Dr. Blake, 1856-57; Dr. Rowell, 1857-59; Dr. Merrow, 1859-60.

CHAPTER C I.

ROLLINSFORD.—(Continued.)

BIOGRAPHICAL NOTICES.

JOSEPH TATE, known as "Master Tate," was a schoolmaster in Somersworth (that part now Rollinsford). He had a peculiar trait of recording both public and private events, even to the disagreements and family jars of his neighbors or acquaintances. It is said that some of his records were lost by the burning of a dwelling-house, where they were deposited. The volume extant is probably his first. It is headed "Names of Families, Children's Names, and time of birth in the Town of Somersworth, March ye 26th, 1767." It gives prior dates of births of children in the families then resident there, and continues until 1778, and in the space given to his own family in this volume dates of births are continued to 1786.

The volume contains also "Memorandums of Sundry things, viz.: Deaths, Marriages, Disasters, etc." There are interspersed extracts from periodicals, statistics, receipts, notices of current events, etc. The book is very curious and valuable, and is now owned by Mrs. George F. Rollins, of Dover. A copy of the same is kept and carefully preserved by the town of Rollinsford. This volume has been the means of giving valuable information on subjects that could not have been obtained from any other source.

"Master Tate" lived by the Salmon Falls River, about fifty rods below the lower mill. When he was born or when he died is not now definitely known.

Dr. Moses Carr was born in Newbury, Mass., Nov. 25, 1745. He came to reside in this town when quite a young man; practiced medicine here for sixty years, and for that time was the only resident physician. He is spoken of as having been a careful, prudent, and skillful practitioner. He was judge of the court of Common Pleas from 1776 to 1784, and died March 30, 1800.

James Carr, better known as "Col. Carr," son of Moses Carr, was born in Somersworth, now Rollinsford, April 22, 1748. In 1777 he served his country as captain of a company in the Second New Hampshire Regiment, commanded by Col. Nathan Hale, of Rindge. On the retreat from Ticonderoga, in July, Col. Hale's regiment was ordered to cover the rear of the invalids, and fell some six or seven miles in the rear of the army. On the morning of July 7th it was attacked by an advanced party of the enemy at Hubbardton, and suffered great loss. At this place the colonel, Capt. Carr, two other officers, and one hundred men were taken prisoners. After the war was over he was appointed high sheriff for his county, which office he held for many years. He died in Somersworth (now Rollinsford), March 11, 1829.

On the brow of Rollinsford Hill, overlooking the Salmon Falls River and the bridge to South Berwick, Me., is the old Lord estate. The family mansion is an interesting structure, ample and roomy, of that old-fashioned type suggestive of "free-hearted hospitality" and "ye goode olde times." It is nearly square, and is surmounted by a single huge chimney rising from its centre. Overhanging the house, which is more than a hundred years old, is a stately elm, one of the oldest and largest in the country. The land of the estate sweeps down the hill to the river, whose shore it follows for a considerable distance. The mansion faces eastward, and looks over the valley of the Salmon Falls upon the opposite town, South Berwick, Me., on the east bank of the river, and upon the famous Berwick Academy, a noted seat of learning, and an important factor in the advancement of its own and the neighboring towns.

The dwelling is at present occupied by Mrs. Maria Lord, a lady of eighty-six years of age, widow of the late Edwin Parks Stanhope Lord. With her are two daughters and a granddaughter. Mr. Lord was born in 1794, and died in 1880. He was the son of Capt. Nathan Lord, of whom is told a story illustrative of Yankee pluck, which is sacredly handed down from generation to generation, and of which the family is justly proud.

The following is a brief sketch of Nathan Lord's career, serving merely to introduce the story:

Capt. Nathan Lord, son of Gen. Lord, was born in the old Gen. Lord house, South Berwick, Me., in 1760. He died in 1808. At sixteen years of age he entered the army. He went in a company from Berwick, under Gen. Sullivan, to Ticonderoga. While a lieutenant he and one of his comrades were taken prisoners by the Indians, tied to a tree, and about to be shot, when an English officer came along, paid their ransom, and thus saved their lives. This officer's name was James Edward Parks Stanhope, for whom, in grateful remembrance, Lord afterwards named his son, the late E. P. S. Lord.

Nathan Lord afterwards sailed from Portsmouth, N. H., on the "Ranger," under Paul Jones, and was in several naval engagements, being finally taken prisoner by the English. He was a prisoner on an English war-vessel on which was George the Fourth, then a young man. The young prince being very smart at boxing, challenged any one on board to box with him.

He found no one who had the courage to face him until he approached the American prisoners, and here he met his match. Young Lord stepped from the group of prisoners out upon the deck, accepted the challenge, and whipped the young prince soundly till he cried "enough." The English prince was so well pleased with his skill and daring that he afterwards paid him great attention, and on their arrival in port gave him his liberty, and soon sent him home, passage free.

John Pike, son of the Rev. James, was born at Somersworth (now Rollinsford), March 11, 1747. He inherited his father's homestead, and there passed his life. He was town clerk thirteen years; was one of the selectmen many times. He was a practical surveyor of land, and there were but few farms for many miles around whose area he had not calculated. He was employed at one time by the selectmen of the town of Somersworth to make an accurate survey of that town and a complete map of the same. These duties he performed to the satisfaction of all concerned.

Capt. Ebenezer Richer was born in that part of Somersworth which subsequently became Rollinsford; was master of a ship for many years, and made many successful voyages to the East Indies, by which he acquired considerable wealth. He built and lived in the residence now occupied by Judge Doe. After retiring from the sea he passed the remainder of his days in overseeing and managing his farm and performing the duties of trust which were frequently conferred upon him. He died Nov. 3, 1815, aged seventy-four years.

Amos Wallingford, son of Ebenezer Wallingford, was born in this town March 6, 1762, and during life made it his place of residence.

He was a distinguished school-teacher, and was known for years as "Master Wallingford." Many offices of trust were conferred upon him.

He was town clerk of Somersworth for twenty-one years; was often one of the selectmen of the town. He died Jan. 10, 1837.

Joseph Doe, the father of Charles Doe, the present chief justice of the State of New Hampshire, was born at Newmarket, Nov. 15, 1776. He took up his residence in this town when a young man, and married a daughter of Capt. Ebenezer Richie. After residing here several years he removed to Derry, in this State, but remained there only a short time, when he again returned to this town, and made it his place of residence till his death, Feb. 28, 1860. He lived in the house now owned and occupied by Judge Doe, was a large land-owner and a successful farmer. Though not a professional lawyer, he wrote many legal documents, and was often consulted by his fellow-townsmen and others on matters of importance, and gave such advice as often prevented much trouble and litigation. He filled many offices of trust, represented the town in the New Hampshire Legislature several times, was a man of powerful intellect, and one who exerted a controlling influence on the surrounding community.

Hon. Ichabod Rollins resided in that part of Somersworth which was subsequently incorporated and named in honor of him,—Rollinsford. He was a member of the Revolutionary conventions at Exeter, April, May, and December, 1775; one of the committee to prepare and bring into the convention a plan of ways and means for furnishing troops; was also a committee on supplies. On the 20th of June, 1775, he was sent in company with Hon. Timothy Walker, of Concord, a member of the committee of supplies, to ascertain the losses sustained at the battle of Bunker Hill by each of the officers and soldiers of the New Hampshire forces, and in behalf of the colony to make them compensation; also to secure to them supplies, and advance a month's pay to such as had enlisted or might enlist in the Continental service. The action of the Provincial Congress upon the report subsequently made of their doings affords evidence that their doings were performed to their acceptance. Mr. Rollins was a member of the convention when it resolved itself, Jan. 5, 1776, into an independent State government, a delegate to the Legislature October, 1776, and the first judge of probate under the new government, which office he held from 1776 to 1784. He was also a member of the executive council of New Hampshire in 1789. Judge Rollins, as well as his great-grandfather, was a slaveholder, but treated his slaves with the utmost kindness. He died Jan. 31, 1800.

Nicholas Pike, son of the Rev. James, was also born in this town, Oct. 6, 1743. He graduated at Harvard in 1766, after which he taught school many years in York, Me. Having finished his labors there, as a teacher he took up a residence in Newburyport, Mass., where he remained till his death. It was there, in 1778, that he completed and published that wonderful work known as Pike's Arithmetic, which for many years was extensively used as a text-book in our schools and colleges, and which at the present time is highly prized by every mathematical scholar of study and research. Copies of this work may now be found carefully preserved in most of the older colleges of the United States. He died Dec. 9, 1819.

James Pike, grandson of Rev. James and son of John Pike, was born at Somersworth, now Rollinsford, in the old home of his ancestors, March 26, 1777. For many years of his life he was a successful school-teacher, and at one time was assistant teacher to the sainted Payson. He was author of two spelling-books and a reader, all of which were well received by an impartial public, and were useful in their day. For many years of the latter part of his life he was blind. He died where he was born Sept. 19, 1842, aged sixty-five years.

Andrew Rollins, a resident of the town, was born Oct. 29, 1770. He was wealthy, owning largely in real estate. He was a practical farmer; was chosen to many offices of trust, representing his town in the State Legislature in 1816 and 1820. He won the confidence and esteem of all who knew him, and died March 13, 1832.

Capt. Ichabod was the brother of Andrew. In the early part of his life he followed the sea; was captain of a merchant ship, and was very successful in that capacity, but for many years before his death he quit the sea and retired to the home of his childhood, where he passed the remainder of his days. He was never married. He died November, 1843, aged sixty-one years.

Paul Wentworth, known as "Col. Paul," lived in this town, at Salmon Falls, and built the dwelling-house now occupied by the family of the late John B. Wentworth. He was one of the wealthy men of the time, and the leading man in both church and State. He was a merchant and an extensive dealer in lumber, of which his mills at Salmon Falls sawed as much as those in any other portion of the country. The lumber was rafted down the river to Portsmouth, N. H., and thence shipped to all parts of the world. His will, made in 1747 and now preserved, is considered one of the most valuable relics of the early Dover and Somersworth Wentworth families. He died June 24, 1748.

Hon. William W. Rollins, son of Daniel Rollins, was born at the old homestead of Judge Ichabod Rollins, Feb. 15, 1794. He was a large landholder, and one of the most thrifty, energetic, and practical farmers of the town. He was often elected to various town offices. He several times represented the town in the State Legislature, and was a member in the New Hampshire Senate in 1846. In 1870 he was elected a member of the New Hampshire Historical Society. He died at his residence in Rollinsford, Dec. 3, 1879.

John B. Wentworth, son of Andrew Wentworth, was born Feb. 27, 1794. He lived in the old house built by his father's father,—Col. Paul Wentworth. He was a member of the New Hampshire Legislature from 1833 to 1837, from 1846 to 1849, and in 1856, and in other years. He was a member of the convention called to revise the Constitution of New Hampshire. He died Nov. 3, 1869.

George W. Roberts, son of Thomas Roberts, was born in this town, at the homestead of his father, September, 1798. When he was but twelve years old his father died, leaving a large farm, which he, with what little assistance his mother could render, managed with prudence and skill. After this age he was through necessity denied the privilege of attending school, but through his eager desire to learn and his industry he acquired a sound practical education. He was chosen town clerk at an early age, and held that office twelve years, and was elected and served as one of the selectmen of the town as many more years. He was for some time town treasurer, was elected to represent the town in the State Legislature several times.

After the death of Hiram R. Roberts he was chosen president of the Salmon Falls Bank, and also of the Rollinsford Savings-Bank. He retained the former of these offices until 1881, and the latter he now holds.

"Riverside," the estate of the late Hon. Samuel Hale, is a farm of many acres, pleasantly situated in the southeastern part of the town of Rollinsford.

For a long distance the land sweeps along the curving, picturesque shore of the Salmon Falls. The family mansion is nestled in a valley, surrounded on three sides by hills, and on the fourth and east side by the river flowing at the foot of the land, across which are seen the wooded shores of Maine.

On the wharf and overhanging the river is a giant old building, black with age, known as the "Store-House." The building is very strong, having been made in days when lumber was to be had in plenty, and the timber it contains would more than suffice to build a whole block of modern houses. It is square, four stories high, and fitted with a windlass and hatchways, by means of which merchandise was transferred to and from the packets lying below. The proprietor was a large ship-owner, living for merly at Portsmouth, and had a line of vessels sailing to and from the Indies. The Indian goods brought to Portsmouth were then transferred to packets, brought up the river, and stored in this great building, which served as a centre of distribution. The packets going down river carried return cargoes of cattle, hay, wool, and various other agricultural products.

The late Hon. Samuel Hale was born at Barrington, in this county, and died at the old homestead in Rollinsford, December, 1869. He was a son of Judge Hale, of Barrington, and a grandson of Portsmouth's famous schoolmaster, Mayor Hale (Samuel). Those who knew him most intimately feel most deeply his loss. From his father and grandfather he inherited untiring energy and a love of letters. To these traits he added a tenderness almost womanly, an unfailling flow of spirits, and a temper of unbroken serenity. Entering Exeter Academy at the age of twelve years, among his companions there was the lamented President Sparks, of Cambridge, with whom his friendship ceased but with his life. Nor did his interest in Exeter Academy ever decline, he having been a trustee of that institution for more than forty years.

In 1817 he graduated from Bowdoin College with high honor, and immediately entered the Divinity School at Cambridge, where he pursued those studies in which he delighted through his entire life. His health, however, was such as not to allow him to enter the ministry, and through the advice of his physician he was constrained to enter upon the more active pursuits of life.

Hon. Hiram R. Roberts.<sup>1</sup>

Hall Roberts was born in this town Nov. 7, 1813. He graduated at Waterville College, now Colby University. Taught the academy at Kennebunk, Me., for some years successfully. At one time he was a professor in an institution of learning in this State for many years. After this he went to Concord, N. H., to live; was there made president of the State Capital Bank, of that city. He died in Concord, Oct. 13, 1862.

Hon. Edward H. Rollins<sup>1</sup> was born in this town Oct. 3, 1824, and when a young man took up his residence in Concord, N. H.

For several years past he has had a summer residence in this town, which was burned a year ago, but another house has been erected to take its place, which Mr. Rollins will probably make his permanent abiding-place when his public duties will allow.<sup>1</sup>

He was chosen United States senator in 1876

Col. Augustus W. Rollins.<sup>1</sup>

Charles Doe, son of Joseph Doe, was born in Derry, of this State, April 11, 1830; entered college at the early age of fifteen, graduating from Dartmouth in the class of 1849. He studied law with Daniel M. Christie, of Dover, and soon after he was admitted to practice formed a law partnership with Charles W. Woodman, of that city, with whom he remained until the fall of 1859, when he was appointed associate justice of the Supreme Court of New Hampshire. He remained a member of that court for fifteen years, and until the law establishing the court was repealed in 1874. In 1876, upon the reorganization of the judiciary system of the State of New Hampshire, he was appointed chief justice of the Supreme Court of this State, which office he still holds, thus having occupied the bench of the highest court of the State for twenty-two years, with the exception of two years, from 1874-76. During his long experience upon the bench he has discharged the duties of judge with rare fidelity and to the entire satisfaction of the State. Upon a vacancy occurring in the Supreme Court of the United States his name was strongly urged as the fittest man in this section of the country to fill the vacancy. He lives in the house in which his father lived, built by Capt. Ebenezer Kicker, where his large and valuable law library is kept. And here, away from the noise and bustle of the busy city, and among quiet scenes, in which his nature so much delights, he can investigate the unsettled and knotty points of law, for which his profound and logical mind is so well adapted.

ROLLINSFORD.—(Continued.)

Ecclesiastical History—Congregational Church—Episcopal Church—Congregational Church, Salmon Falls—The Methodist Society—Roman Catholic Church—Educational—Gill List—Town Clerk—Representatives—Masonic—Odd-Fellows—Banks—G. A. R.

THIS town, which originally consisted of but one parish, had, up to the year 1780, three houses of worship, the first of which was erected in the year 1730, and was located a few rods southeast of the cemetery in this place, near the site where the school-house now stands. As the inhabitants of the town increased in numbers this house was found insufficient to accommodate them, and the parish concluded to erect a larger and more commodious building, which was completed about the year 1777, and at that time the old church edifice was torn down. This new building had but just been completed when, in the year 1779, the history of the town records that a violent thunder-storm arose, during which this new house was struck by lightning and consumed by fire; its bell melted, and fell in a state of fusion. This calamity left the people without a house of worship. But not discouraged, they at once called a meeting of the parish, which unanimously voted to erect another house to the "worship of Almighty God," which was immediately commenced, and fully completed in the year 1780. This house was also consumed by fire, at the hands of an incendiary, May 1, 1848. For the last twenty years which it stood it was only occasionally used for a place of public worship.

Rev. James Pike, the first minister of this parish, was born at Newbury, Mass., March 1, 1703. He graduated at Harvard College in 1725, in the same class with Dr. Mather Byles and Rev. Timothy Walker, first minister of Concord, N. H. He died the 19th of March, 1792, aged eighty-nine years, and in the sixty-fifth year of his ministry to the people. Immediately after his graduation from Harvard he taught the first grammar school which was ever taught in Berwick, Me. He preached his first sermon Oct. 23, 1726. He began to preach to the people of that part of Dover now known as Rollinsford Aug. 27, 1727, and was ordained Oct. 28, 1730. He preached his last sermon Oct. 31, 1790.

We find in the Congregational Journal, published in Concord, N. H., the 10th of January, 1850, the following: "Near the junction of the Maine and Great Falls Railroad stands an ancient but well-preserved house, with three venerable elms in front. In that house lived and died the first minister of Somersworth (now Rollinsford), and these elms were borne from the forests on his shoulder, and planted where they now stand by his hand."

His parish was very large, extending throughout what is now Rollinsford and Somersworth, and it was his custom yearly to visit every home in the whole town, of whatever denomination or belief, and to tarry all night with the one at whose doorstep evening found him. The Quakers, so generally hated at that time, welcomed him with delight, and when the rising sun bade him journey on, the Quaker friend would say, "Friend Pike, I thank thee for this visit, and am happier for having seen thee."

The interests of the people were so interwoven with his life and heart that at the time of the Revolutionary war, when want and starvation stared so many in the face, he cut his then meagre salary down to the purse of his people, which amounted to about the value of eight bushels of corn per year, and during the most trying period he would receive nothing from his parishioners, living from the income of his own farm, and ministering more, if possible, to the wants of his people. Hardly a legal document at that time was made out in any other handwriting than his own.

When Whitefield came to this country he was the guest of this venerable divine, tarrying with him while he remained in the vicinity.

A ludicrous instance of his settling disputes is handed down. He and a brother minister were out walking, and came upon two men who were fighting. The two divines conferred together as to the best way to part them and preserve the peace. They finally agreed that each should take one of the combatants and bear him away. The Rev. James unclinchd his man and carried him off upon his shoulder, struggling and kicking, and his brother minister did the same with the other disturber of the peace. Thus they broke up the fight. The Rev. James Pike was a very strong, athletic person, and in his full manhood venerable and imposing. Imbued with deep piety and a truly Christian spirit, his unselfish nature spent itself in working for the welfare of others. Nor did he cease his Christian work till age had laid its blighting hand upon his brow and the stately form was soon to be laid in its final resting place. Without a thought of fame, he worked in this locality for more than half a century, conscious that the talent of success is nothing more than doing what you can do well, and doing well whatever you are called upon to do. His funeral sermon was preached by the Rev. Moses Hemmenway, D.D. and the text was Rev. xi. 10: "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life."

Rev. James Pike was succeeded in his ministry by Rev. Pearson Thurston, who was ordained here Feb. 1, 1792, and who remained with the parish till Dec. 2, 1812. Some time in January of this year (1812) the parsonage-house in which he lived, together with his barn and stable, was consumed by fire. There was nothing saved from the devouring flames, not even the clothing of the family. The church records at this time were also destroyed. This was a heavy blow to the parish, and so crippled it that it never again flourished as before. An effort, however, was made to rebuild the parsonage, but after putting up the frame the enterprise was abandoned, and it was left to decay.

Mr. Thurston, comprehending the state of things, at once asked a dismission from the parish, which was reluctantly granted. He was a graduate of Dartmouth College, a man of good intellect, of true piety, and a strict Calvinist in his principles. He died Aug. 15, 1819.

He was succeeded in his Christian labors by the Rev. Luke Spofford, a man of average talents, and a true and self-sacrificing worker for his Master. The parish under his preaching seemed to revive a little, and they hoped to make him their permanent preacher, to go in and out before them, and break unto them the "bread of life;" but, for some reason, he stayed with the people but a short time, when he was succeeded by the Rev. Mr. Blodgett, a truly good and pious man, but one not having enough of that quality in him which is requisite to build up a society, consequently his congregation became so small that he was unable to obtain a sufficient support, and he, though loving the people and beloved by them, felt it his duty to leave them and labor in another place. After this, for some time, the society had only occasional preaching from such ministers as they could obtain. About the year 1824, they united in giving Mr. Reuben Porter a call, which he accepted. He preached to the people for about two years, when the village of Great Falls began to grow and increase in numbers, so that they set up a meeting in that village, and gave Mr. Porter a call to preach to them there, which he accepted and went to Great Falls, leaving the people of this society again without a preacher. From this time they had no settled minister, and only occasional preaching. The church had for some time before this been growing more and more feeble, till in 1827 it had but five members, and in 1829 but two.

Though the office of tithingman, which was considered indispensable to good order in churches in earlier times, has been entirely dispensed with, yet as late as about the year 1780 one John Ervin, an apprentice, who committed some misdemeanor in the church, was arrested by this important functionary of church discipline, brought near this meeting-house in which he had sinned, and there placed in the "stocks" prepared for such offenders for the space of one hour. To make the act still more impressive, the school was dismissed, and the children, led by their teacher, were marched to witness the scene of punishment, that their young minds might be impressed with the solemn truth, that "the way of the transgressor is hard."

The Episcopal Church.—The origin of the Episcopal Church is to be traced to a communication from the Rev. Henry Blackaller, then preaching at Great Falls, to J. W. Pierce, agent of the woolen-mills at the village of Salmon Falls, desiring to know if an occasional lecture on the Sabbath evening would be acceptable. This was in April, 1830. Encouragement being given, an arrangement was soon effected by which alternate services with a neighboring minister were held at a hall of a boarding-house. This was kept up until December, when Mr. Blackaller, having finished with his duties at Great Falls, was invited to take the charge as rector of this parish. Arrangements were immediately entered into to support a permanent ministry and raise an edifice for the purposes of worship. The parish was organized into an Episcopal Society, to be governed by the doctrine and discipline of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the United States, in February, by designation of "Christ Church."

After Mr. Blackaller took charge of the church, services were regularly performed in a room of the factory until July 17th, when the new building was completed. The edifice was dedicated July 24, 1830, with appropriate ceremonies. Mr. Blackaller continued to preach here until April 8, 1833, when, at his own request, he was dismissed. He was followed by Rev. Francis A. Foxcroft, who was engaged only temporarily, and was connected with the church only about two months. The Rev. Samuel McBurney took charge of the pastorate Aug. 10, 1833, and continued one year. The cause of his leaving, as stated in the record of the church, "was in consequence of the destruction of the factory by fire on the 7th instant, from which cause so large a portion of the parish have removed from the village that the remainder were unable to give him an adequate support." After this, Mr. J. W. Pierce, warden of the church, read prayers and sermons until he left town, in the latter part of the year 1835. After this for about a year the church was closed, but was opened again upon Mr. Pierce's return to town, when he resumed the reading of the services, and continued so to do until Aug. 19, 1838, when he again left the place.

Rev. Mr. Newton E. Marble took charge of the parish June 1, 1845. At this time the factory had been rebuilt and a new population was gathered in. He continued as rector until Feb. 28, 1846. Since that period a very few services at irregular intervals have been held, but at the present time the society is very small, and but few of the communicants of the church now survive.

The Congregational Society.—A few persons, inhabitants of the village of Salmon Falls, having assembled Jan. 3, 1846, to consider the expediency of forming an ecclesiastical society of the Congregational order, unanimously resolved "that the interests of religion and good morals in our village require the organization of such a society," and appointed a committee to prepare a constitution. At an adjourned meeting, January 9th, the society was duly organized. Rev. E. L. Swan was immediately engaged to preach three months.

In April following, Mr. Samuel J. Spalding was engaged to preach the remainder of the year. In the same month incipient steps were taken towards forming a church, which was organized May 1, 1846, by an ecclesiastical council convened for the purpose, and consisting of fourteen members.

Mr. Spalding having received a unanimous invitation to become the pastor of this church and society, was ordained and installed Oct. 28, 1846.

At a meeting of the church April 20, 1849, the subject of building a house of worship was considered, and a committee appointed to procure by subscription the funds necessary for the purpose. At a subsequent meeting a report favorable to the enterprise was presented, and a committee appointed to contract for and superintend the erection of the house, which was completed in the spring of the following year, and dedicated to the worship of God May 1, 1850.

Rev. Mr. Spalding having received an invitation to become the pastor of the Whitefield Congregational Church in Newburyport, Mass., his pastoral relation to this church and society was dissolved June 9, 1851.

During the pastorate of Mr. Spalding the church very emphatically condemned the sin of slavery by the following resolutions read and adopted Feb. 25, 1848:

"WHEREAS, The practice of buying, selling, and holding men as property has become prevalent among ministers and members of churches heretofore acknowledged and fellowshiped as evangelical, and whereas we are taught in the word of God that 'he that stealeth a man and selleth him, or if he be found in his hands, is a man-stealer,' therefore

"Resolved, That we believe slavery to be not only an evil, but a sin in the sight of God, and that the system under every modification is utterly opposed to the spirit and principles of the gospel.

"Resolved, That we deem it the duty of every Christian in the meekness and spirit of the gospel to plead the cause of the poor, to remember in their prayers 'those that are in bonds as bound with them,' and by all moral and proper means seek to hasten the entire removal of the system from our land.

"Resolved, That we can have no Christian or ministerial fellowship with those who hold their fellow-men as property or advocate slaveholding as either just or right in the sight of God."

On March 14, 1851, a letter of dismission and recommendation was requested by a member to unite with a church in Millidgeville, Ga. It was not granted, because the pastor and the elders and many members of the church were slaveholders.

List of ministers and length of time they were connected with the church: S. J. Spalding, April, 1846, to June 9, 1851; E. E. Atwater, Feb. 3, 1852, to Nov. 3, 1857; D. B. Bradford, August, 1858, to March 25, 1862; F. S. Robie, Feb. 6, 1866, to June 6, 1870; Selah Merrill, June 6, 1870, to —, 1874; George W. Christie, June, 1878, to March, 1880; R. G. Woodbridge, August, 1880, to present time.

Rev. Ezra Haskell preached many Sundays between 1872 and 1877, and Rev. A. H. Quint from Dec. 17, 1877, to June 31, 1878.

The Methodist Society.—The Methodist Society was organized at the village of Salmon Falls, Aug. 8, 1849, with twenty-four members, and the following board of stewards: Thomas Foye, J. W. Worster, Foster Wilson, Orange Page, Amasa Fitch, N. G. Clary, and R. C. Fernald. The society never erected a church building, but for the first year or two held the services, most of the time, in the village hall, after which in the Episcopal Church building until about the year 1862, when the war so prostrated business and so many families left the place that it was thought best not to supply the pulpit any longer, but to unite with the Congregational Society in their house for worship.

The different pastors who were connected with this church were Henry Drew, who supplied the pulpit from time of organization to January, 1851; Rev. J. Thurston, from July, 1852, to some time in the year 1853, when he was followed by Rev. Samuel Beedle. Rev. Byron Mark was pastor in 1854 and 1855. Rev. Silas Green was stationed at this parish in 1856, and Rev. Eleazer Smith filled the pulpit from 1857 to 1859, when he left to take the position as chaplain in the New Hampshire State prison. After his departure the Rev. Simeon P. Heath was placed in charge of the pastorate for two years, and in 1861, Rev. J. B. Holman, the last preacher the society had, was settled over the parish for one year.

Catholic Society.—In 1857 a Catholic Church edifice was erected in the village of Salmon Falls, very near the passenger station of the Boston and Maine Railroad. Before this time there was no Catholic Church nearer than Dover, N. H., and many Catholics from this town attended worship in that city. But some time during the above-mentioned year a large brick church was completed, and regular services performed therein. The cost of the church was about ten thousand dollars. The number of Catholics then attending was about six hundred.

Rev. Michael Lucy was the first priest, and he remained until 1865. He had under his charge also the Catholics in Great Falls, and preached at different times each Sunday to both congregations. He afterwards went to Lewiston, Me., and about three years ago died in Exeter, N. H. He was succeeded by the Rev. Patrick Canovan, who had charge of the church till 1870. He is now in Ireland. From this time till 1873, Rev. John Sullivan officiated as priest. Then for the short space of three months Rev. William Herbert was the religious head of this people. Since that time up to the present the church has had for its spiritual director the Rev. Francis X. Bowvier, a man of acknowledged ability and learning, and respected alike by his own people and by all who knew him.

A parochial residence was purchased on South Street, in Salmon Falls, in 1871, at an expense of three thousand two hundred dollars.

In 1876 the church was repaired and refitted throughout, at an expense of between three and four thousand dollars. There are now of those Catholics who attend church in this town about thirteen hundred, many of them coming from across the river from Maine. The greater portion of these are French.

Rollinsford is divided into five school districts. Before 1873 it had six, but at that time it was thought best to unite two of the districts in one.

District No. 1 is in the village of Salmon Falls, and is incorporated under what is called the "Somersworth Act," raising by special tax an additional sum than that provided by the town for its school purposes, and having a special board of supervisors elected by the voters of the district. It has four grades of schools, and all are in a prosperous condition.

The school buildings throughout the town, with the exception of one, are good houses, and well adapted for school purposes. P. S. Brown, Charles Malloy, and Albert Morton are the present supervisors of District No. 1, and Amos W. Pike is supervisor of the districts in the old part of the town, which official position he has held at different times since the town was incorporated, about twenty-five years.

Salmon Falls Lodge, No. 30, I. O. of O. F. was instituted by Grand Master Timothy G. Senter, assisted by other grand officers of the Grand Lodge of New Hampshire, Sept. 5, 1849, with ten charter members, viz.: Samuel Hadden, Robert C. Fernald, William W. Twing, Charles S. Fogg, John Raitt, Masterson Young, Joseph Yealon, Thomas H. Card, Nathan Guild, and Ebenezer Worster.

The first officers of the lodge were as follows: Charles S. Fogg, N. G.; Jonathan F. Worster, V. G.; Nathan G. Clay, Rec. Sec.; Ebenezer Worster, Treas. There has been received one hundred and forty members in all up to Jan. 1, 1882. Whole number of members in good standing, Jan. 1, 1882, is sixty-six.

The organization has an invested fund of about two thousand dollars to be used for the relief of the sick, etc.

1 Town separated from Somersworth too late in season to elect a representative for this year.

Banks.—There are two banks in town,—the Salmon Falls Bank and the Rollinsford Savings-Bank,—both of which are located in the village of Salmon Falls. The Salmon Falls Bank is a State bank, and was incorporated July 3, 1851, with a capital of fifty thousand dollars, divided into five hundred shares of one hundred dollars each. The first meeting was held Sept. 15, 1851. William H. Morton was chosen cashier, and has held that office to the present time. The directors first chosen were Hiram R. Roberts, Augustus Rollins, Pliney Lawton, Samuel Hilden, John Tyler, Humphrey S. Watson, and Oliver Lord. This bank went into operation on the 1st day of January, 1852.

The Rollinsford Savings-Bank commenced operations in July, 1850. Hon. H. R. Roberts was chosen president, and Joseph Doe and Pliney Lawton vice-presidents. Francis Plummer, William H. Morton, John Woodman, Horace Barber, Robert C. Fernald, and Charles T. Stewart were chosen trustees. Justus D. Watson was chosen secretary and treasurer. In 1855, William H. Morton was chosen secretary and treasurer, and he has continuously held these offices of trust to the present time. When he assumed these duties the deposits were removed to the new bank building just erected.

On July 1, 1855, the deposits were $70,463, and in July, 1877, were the greatest amount of deposits ever in the bank, amounting nearly to $800,000. During the following winter, owing to the general depreciation in the money market and the failure of Western securities, the bank commissioners ordered the deposits to be cut down twenty-five per cent., which was done. But since that time the bank has so prospered as to be able in a very short time to make up the twenty-five per cent. which the depositors lost by this operation.

The Grand Army of the Republic have an organization in this town under the name of "Samuel Hale Post, No. 21." A post was organized here shortly after the war, but was kept alive only a few years, when its charter was surrendered. It was reorganized March 22, 1880, with the following officers for that year: Commander, Ezra H. Wheeler; Senior Vice-Commander, Augustus P. Horne; Junior Vice-Commander, William H. Aspinwall; and with forty comrades. Officers for 1881 were: Commander, Augustus P. Horne; Senior Vice-Commander, William H. Aspinwall; Junior Vice-Commander, Charles A. Goodwin. Officers for 1882 are: Commander, Charles A. Goodwin; Senior Vice-Commander, Albert H. Richer; Junior Vice-Commander, William Clements. The present number of comrades is twenty-five.

Old Soldiers.—There is extant a "True list of all the Training Soldiers in the Parish of Somersworth Under the command of Thomas Wallingford Capt &c.," July 23, 1746. Among those enumerated who lived in that part of the parish which is now Rollinsford are the above-named Thomas Wallingford, Sergt. John Richer, Sergt. Phillip Stackpole, Sergt. William Wentworth, Ebenezer Wentworth, Joseph Wentworth, Benjamin Wentworth, Ephraim Richers, Meturin Richers, Abram Minney, Samuel Noch, Henry Noch, Thomas Tibbets, Jr., Ezekiel Wentworth, Ebenezer Roberts, Thomas Wentworth, George Richers, Sr., Robert Cole, James Clements, Moses Tibbets, Samuel Wentworth, George Richers, Jr., Samuel Wentworth, Jr., Nath. Noch, Jonathan Merrow, John Wentworth, Hatevil Roberts, Benjamin Roberts, Drisco Noch, William Stackpole, Joseph Varney, Elisha Crommel, James Stackpole, Richard Phillpot, Samuel Waymoth (tithing man of the parish), James Noch, Love Roberts, Jr., John Richers, Jr., Benjamin Warren, Samuel Roberts, Francis Roberts, Ebenezer Roberts, Jr., Job Clements, Marke Wentworth, William Chadwick.

Military Record, 1861-65.—The following is a list of the men mustered into the United States service under the call of July 2, 1862, and subsequent calls, and assigned to the quota of Rollinsford, and to whom the town paid bounties, and was reimbursed in part by the amount affixed to each name, as awarded by the commissioners for the reimbursement of municipal war expenditures, appointed by the Legislature under the act of July, 1870 and 1871.

The commissioners took no cognizance of men who enlisted and were mustered in previous to the said call of July 2, 1862.<sup>1</sup>

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

BARTHOLOMEW WENTWORTH.

Prominent in the annals of this section of New England from its earliest settlement to the present time, and thoroughly identified with its moral, religious, and material development, stands the name of Wentworth, honored and respected. The family dates its ancestry in this country to Elder William Wentworth, who with Rev. John Wheelwright and thirty-three others formed a "combination for a government at Exeter, N. H.," Oct. 4, 1639.

Bartholomew Wentworth, the subject of this memoir, was the great-great-grandson of Elder William, and was born in the present town of Rollinsford, Jan. 7, 1788. Here he lived and died on the estate which for more than two hundred years had been in the possession of the Wentworth family. He was the twelfth child and seventh son in a family of fourteen children, ten of whom arrived at maturity. He was an active citizen of Rollinsford, and held various town offices, the duties of which he discharged with acceptability and credit.

July 28, 1811, he united in marriage with Nancy, daughter of Capt. William and Sarah Roberts Hall, and their family consisted of the following: Arioch, who resides in Boston; Catherine (deceased), married Charles Ela, of Dover; Ruth, wife of John B. Griffiths, of Durham; William Hall is a resident of Cambridge, with business in Boston; Selucus (deceased); and Sally and Rebecca Ann live on the old homestead.

Bartholomew Wentworth was a son of Bartholomew and Ruth Hall Wentworth. His father died May 25, 1813, and his mother in January, 1840.

Mrs. Wentworth's father was a descendant of Deacon John Hall, who was the first of the name in this country, and came to Dover from England in about the year 1639. He was a man of prominence, and deacon of the first church in Dover for nearly forty years, while William Wentworth was an elder. He was a selectman and also town clerk, holding the latter office sixteen years, closing with 1685. He died in about the year 1693 or 1694.

Mrs. Wentworth was born April 12, 1793, and although now in her ninetieth year retains in a remarkable degree the vigor and elasticity of youth, and vividly relates scenes and incidents of "ye olden time." She resides on the old homestead with her daughters in the town of Rollinsford.
